Stockholders in Flunk Slip Factory Prepare for Boom Examination Week

Students Will Cultivate "That Haunted Look" And Drink Dopes

BY GRACE MARY WEBSTER

Although the necessity and importance of examinations is undisputed among thinking people, there are always Bohemians, annoying individuals, who question their value.

Surely this decision is one utterly unpoisoned by premeditation! Of no little importance is the boom in the blue tablet industry, the red pencil industry, the flunk slip industry and the you-are-requested - to-leave - within-twenty-four hours card industry. I understand that stockholders in these stocks throng to the New York Exchange during the last two weeks of the semester wild with apprehension that some radical professor will decide to give oral examinations or interview the students personally in order to alphabetically classify the intelligence of said victims, instead of clinging to the tried-and-found-not-wanting tradition of examinations.

The percentage of flunks at Vassar, Florida State College for Women and Wellesley will be more important than Jasfle's platitudes or the Supreme Court's dicision on the gold clause to those harried investors in examination torture instruments.

Not to be overlooked in the weighty question before us is the effect of examinations on students. Many is the latent neck-stretching and eye-rolling muscle that is put to violent exercise for the week. And these aren't the only parts of the body that come in for a strain. Righteous citizens may start weeks for the elimination of flag-pole sitters, marathons, walk-a-thons and six-day bicycle races, but never a thought have they given to a week for stopping sit-up-all-night contests among students at examination tima.

The spoken aim of these contests is to study for the next day's tests, but the real object becomes to stay awake all night. Study is merely incidental. Many entertain the idea that success depends upon wholesala consumption of velvety black coffee, this illusion being encouraged by magnanimous tea room proprietors who are willing to give testimony to the fact.

Winners of the contest, who improve the outward sign of their victory by wearing no make-up and cultivating thet haunted look, are looked up to by multitudinous admirers as masters in their field. Some energetic scholars advocate as vastly preferable the method which prescribes getting up at 1:00 a. m., taking a cold shower, cramming for three hours and returning to bed—a system guaranteed by its devotees, and one designed for duping the body into thinking it had a whole night's rest.

There are other values to examination week. Letters home can be neglected legitimately, house matrons will overlook the most untidy room and all regular duties can be suspended for one alibi—exams. Not to be ignored is the glorious chance to air an inhibited martyr complex; students often pity themselves without knowing exactly why, but here is something tangible to deplore. Something as definite as Wilson's fourteen points or the circulatory system of the frog is not to be sniffed at as an imaginary worry! Even if Uncle Willie isn't sure whether the educational theory of recapitulation is plant or animal matter, it sounds bad enough to stop the grand army of the republic and he feels mighty sorry for little Sallie in her perilous pursuit of higher education.

Not being a professor I can't be too sure about it, but it seems to me that that individual must experience no littla fiendish glee in the revenge he wreaks upon students who have so annoyed him during the semester by shaking their watches to see if they can still be going. After all, even a teacher has to have some way to make him feel that he has done his duty. What better method than a neat little row of alphabetical computations in grade books as a result of an imposing stack of student effort on paper?

Even a professor is human. He has a sincere desire to see actual results from the literary liver he has doled out thrice weekly to his class of intellectually anemic students. I have pondered long, too on the natural antipathy of college instructors in givins out the first letter of the alphabet to suffering scholars. The more profound the professor, I note, the more pronounced the antipathy

In addition to the above powerful arguments for the preservation of examinations in colleges I have heard the week commended by some callous individuals as a time for learning how to play contract, tear up pages of lecture notes, learn how to make smoke rings and hear a few good radio programs

"Understanding Heart Room" Is Mecca of Girls

Miss Schwalmeyer Gave Needed Advice And Consolation

We wonder if any students ever feel so depressed and down-hearted that they are completely miserable. They would like to confide their woes to someone, and perhaps get relief, but they know no one to whom they can go for advice and consolation.

Students here, before 1915, had just such a person in whom to confide. She was Miss Maud Schwalmeyer, now a critic teacher at the Demonstration school.

Miss Maud occupied a room in the present nurses cottage for eleven years, making her room a center for private gatherings, for prayer meetings and bull sessions. One day a Valentine party was held in Miss Maud's room, and the big white door to the room was decorated by a large heart that almost covered it. After the party someone conceived the idea of calling it "The Room of the Understanding Heart," and of adding to the bull sesisons and prayer meetings private consultations with Miss Maud

"After that time," said Miss Maud, "there were many broken-hearted, disillusioned, hurt, and bewildered girls that came to the Room of the Understanding Heart for advice and help. All of them went away feeling relieved. They knew that anything they might tell in that room was never repeated outside the four walls. I am sure that several of the girls who came to me for help were contemplating suicide. Two of these girls are now married and are leaders in their communities. It seems to me that what the college girl needs now is just such a room."

Martha Reddick Offers Recital

Toffaletti, Tait Assist With Piano, Cello

Martha Reddick, violinist, and student of Miss Anna Mae Sharpe gave her certificate recital Tuesday evening assisted by Edith Toffaletti, pianist and student of Miss Ella Scoble Opperman and Yvonne Tait, cellist, pupil of Owen Sellers

According to Dean Opperman of the school of music, Martha presented an exceptional performance.

"The Bruck G minor Concerto was remarkably well played. The three movements are distinctly different in style and demands on the artist. In the first the recitatives were well interpreted. In the second there was a full, clear tone and neat phrasing, sonorous on the G string and vibrant on the E The third was played with technical facility and verve," Dean Opperman continued.

Martha was concert master of the college orchestra this year and has given many outstanding performances in the capacity of guest artist at numerous functions.

The program was as follows:

Sonata, F major, Allegro con brio, Allegretto quasi Andantino, Allegro molto vivace (Grieg), played by Martha Reddick; Rapillons, Op. 2 (Schumann) played by Edith Toffaletti, Concerto, G minor, Prelude, Adagio, Finale (Bruch) Martha Reddick Variations Symphoniques (Boellmann), Yvonne Tait; Theme and Variations (Corelli-Kreisler), Lamant (I'm Troubled in Mind), Clarence Cameron White; Danse Espagnole (De Fallo-Kreisler), Martha Reddick.

NATIONAL FOUNDERS' DAY CELEBRATED BY ALPHA DELTA PI WEDNESDAY

The members and pledges of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority celebrated the national founder's day of that fraternity with an after dinner coffee at the chapter house Wednesday night.

During the evening a pageant depicting the history of Alpha Delta Pi was given by girls dressed to represent the different periods since the foundation of the sorority at Wesleyan college in Macon, Georgia in 1851. As each girl entered and stood in a large picture frame a toast was pledged to her and the period which she depicted Those taking part in the pageant were: Elizabeth Allan, Mary Brandon, Sara Moor, Doris Risk, Betty Sweet Smith, Eloise Jackson, Phoebe Messer, Anne Jeter, Susan Palmer, Anna Groover, Mary Belle Rogers, and Mary Lou Moore.

The decorations for this affair consisted of larkspur, roses, and mixed garden flowers which were arranged to set off the large picture frame used for the pageant

This celebration is an annual affair being observed by every Alpha Delta Pi chapter throughout the United States and Canada

Following the program the members served refreshments of punch, walnut cookies, and salted nuts.

Library Gets Rare Volumes

Fifteen Valuable Books Depict America Of Colonial Days

Through the committee on Historical association the library "Americana" of the American received fifteen rare books on early American history this week.

Among them are Capt. John Smith's "Generall Historie of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles", printed in London in 1624 and a supplementary edition entitled "True Travels, Adventures and Observations," printed in 1630; and "A New Discovery of a Vast Country in America," (1699), by Lewis Hennepin, a companion of LaSalle and one of the first to describe the great Mississippi valley.

Thomas Jefferson's "Notes on the State of Virginia" (1787), which were written in answer to an inquiry of the Marquis de Barbe-Marbols, secretary of the French Legation in Philadelphia, is of unusual value to collectors, one copy having sold for five hundred dollars at a recent auction, according to Miss Louise Richardson, librarian.

Others are Jonathan Lind's "an Answer to the Declaration of the American Congress" on a fifth edition printed in 1776, and "History and Present State of Virginia" (1705) by Robert Beverley, a native of Virginia and clerk of the council when Andros was governor.

Because of its high standing this library was invited to share in a cooperative plan to purchase early "Americana", and thereby bears only one-half the cost of these original volumes, the other half being a gift.

Political Pot-Pourri

an obnoxious individual who asked in a challenging tone of voice, "Are you a grower?" Somewhat taken aback at first the representative answered, "I'm as much a grower as you are; I have three trees, and you probably don't have any."

And the school funds fight goes on. Now the Florida Education association has withdrawn support from the plan which seemed most likely to go through. Mr. Henry Filer, president of the organization, wrote, "passage of the recovery act by the house leaves the recently proposed program of school revenue so indefinite thet it cannot be considered dependable. Therefore, the Florida Education association is compelled to withdraw its support from that program."

Senator Beacham of West Palm Beach commented on the action, 'I want this school lobby to lay off me as one senator. I think every member of this senate is as capable of judging the financial condition of the schools as their high-paid head lobbyist. The lobby has raised a large sum from the under-paid school teachers of this state."

And now the solons would have the Spanish game of jai-alai come under the same regulations and taxes as racing does.

For those girls seeking recreation during examination week down st the capitol, we suggest as added entertainment, the hazardous climb to the Capital dome. Tha view of Tallahassee is worth it.

West Initiated Into Honorary

Alpha Chi Alpha Honors State Journalist

Mrs. Helen Hunt West was initiated into Alpha Chi Alpha, journalistic honorary, Monday evening in the Dean W. C. Dodd's office with Elaine Klepper, president of the local chapter, presiding. Mrs. West and members of the honorary had dinner in the college dining hall before the service and gathered at Louise Robertson's home after the initiation to complete the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. West, one of the most outstanding newspaper women in the state, is an alumna of Florida State College and was editor of the "Talisman," the only student publication of the college in 1908. She began her journalistic career with an article on the engineering project of the east coast railway which won for her a position in the magazine department of the National Engineering Society, but she refused the offer, feeling herself more adapted for writing in the southern states.

She has worked on St. Augustine papers, and for many years was a reporter and society editor for the Jacksonville Times Union. Last summer, as vice president of the Women's Party, she lobbied in Washington for the passage of the women's equal rights bill as an amendment to the constitution.

Members of the local chapter are: Mildred Boss, Mary Elizabeth Cooley, Ethyle Mae Edwards, Lucy Fulghum, Barbara Garfunkle, Hazel Goza, Marjorie Harris, Edna Hoffman, Elaine Klepper, Gertrude Kuhn, Edith Patterson, Louise Robertson, Betty Ellen Smith, Elizabeth Stout, Melvyne Wahnish, and faculty members are, Dean William G. Dodd, Miss Rowena Longmire, Miss Edith West, and Mr. Earl L. Vance.

Daane Elected Head Of Association at Meeting

At a meeting of the physical education association Tuesday night, Beth Daane was elected president, Marian Weeks, vice president, and Felicia West, secretary-treasurer for the coming year.

During the meeting plans were made for a dinner to be given Friday night in the dining room in honor of the senior physical education majors, and Miss Marjorie Mayer, and Miss Mildred Stewart. Miss Mayer is expecting to teach in the University of Colorado next year, while Miss Stewart will take a leave of absence for further study in her field. Caroline Oliver and Viola Brooks are in charge of arrangements for the dinner.

The association is composed of students majoring in the field of physical education.

Junior Class Officers Elected Tuesday Night

At the meeting of the incoming junior class held Tuesday night officers for next year were chosen. Mary Miller was elected president of the class; Sue Whitaker, vice president; Peggy McMichael, secretary; Betty Mack, treasurer; Hazel Viertel, athletic manager; Marie Taylor and Marie Spurlock, representatives to Senate.

Mary Jeanne McKay was elected chairman of Odd Demonstration; Betty Peck, chairman of Junior Minstrel; Marjorie Moore, chairman of Fealty. Peggy McMichael and Dimples Turner were re-elected cheerleaders.

College Student Recommends Train For Traveling Comfort

Day Coach Passengers Have Many Exciting Experiences

MARGARET CLAIRE LAFFERTY

I have found in the course of my eighteen years that the most exciting, economical, and comfortable method of travel is by train on a day coach. I can, without a twinge of conscience, recommend travel by train to any of my friends who are not suffering from low or high blood pressure, nervousness, or the depression, and for the following reasons:

First of all a train is very comfortable if you can overlook the prickling of the green upholstery as you sit down and lean back. If it becomes too annoying, however, you will find that a newspaper or a pillow will relieve the situation.

If the heat becomes unbearable or if the upholstery pricks too much, there is an easy and quick way to ease yourself for long periods at a time. Wait until the train stops at a station and then stand up relaxing the muscles in your body. When the train starts off again the jerks and jolts connected with the process of starting a train will throw you violently to the floor causing you to remain blissfully unconscious for an hour or more. When you come to if you find that it is still hot you can repeat the feat.

I have found that noon is the best time of day to perform this experiment as it is the hottest time of day and it seems that a train instinctively jars more at this time. However, I would not advise that any one repeat this process more than three times during a journey because there is usually some soot on the floor of any respectable train and constant contact with it might end in a pretty high cleaners' bill.

Then there is the economical angle of riding on a train. First of all the ticket itself is cheaper than it would be for any other mode of travel. Then you can take your lunch along with you to allay the expense of having to buy it on the way. When you get hungry open your lunch and go for water. Upon your return you will find your lunch artistically decorated with soot so thet the sandwiches resemble the open-faced ones that are served at bridge parties.

As for sxcitement and adventure, a train provides lots of it. What can be more thrilling than riding over a rickety bridge whose every plank rattles, a bridge you can't see, and looking at the reflection of the rumbling train in the murky water below, of which you see plenty? And then the friendly gentleman across from you might turn out to be a pal of Dillinger's or maybe he's one of Mae West's personal friends. I once rode all the way from Jacksonville to Marianna with a lunatic.

The most exciting of all train adventures, however, is missing one's train when trying to make connections at Wotta Town or Punkinville. It isn't your fault if the obliging conductor removes your baggage from one train to another while you are trying to do full justice to a cup of coffee and a couple of doughnuts at the station lunch wagon.

Nor is anyone to blame if the train on which your luggage has been deposited, without your knowledge, pulls out of the station while your back is turned. Well, anyway you can find out the names of all the citizens of Wotta Town and read all of the books in the village library in the two hours that you spend waiting for the next train. I call that two hours well spent.

From the above I think that anyone can tell that train traveling is undoubtedly the only exciting and convenient mode of travel. You should also be able to guess that I, when Christmas, Easter, and other holidays come, traipse up to the business office, and after waiting in line for upwards of an hour, finally reach the window and purchase a round trip ticket to Jacksonville via the bus.

Classical Club Adopts New Rule

All Students Interested Invited to Join

At a business meeting Tuesday evening at 7:30 in Broward club room the classical club adopted a new article in its constitution. Any student or faculty member interested in classics is now urged to join or to attend its meetings.

New officers elected at this time were: president, Lillian Turlington; vice-president, Mary Clark; treasurer, Elizabeth Weatherlay; publicity chairman, Julia Vanderipe; secretary, Kathleen Robinson.

The program consisted of a talk, "The Horatian Bimillenium," by Mary Etta Thistlethwaite and an Horatian pilgrimage, including a tour of the Via Sacra, a visit to Macenas' house on the Esquiline, and a trip to the Sabine farm. Each of the three sites was planned by students.

American History Set Presented to Library

Mrs. Ada Burleson Wartmann recently gave the library a nine-volume set of the Library of American History in memory of her husband, E. L. Wartman, and her daughter, Mrs. E. H. Cox.

Mr. Wartmann served on the board of control of this college for many years, and was a personal friend of Dr. Edward Conradi.

Bound files of the New York Times from 1921-1933 were also added to the library. They were purchased by the college from the Cornegie institute at Washington, D. C., and are complete with indexes.

The files will be placed in the periodical room for students' use as soon as suitable cases are made for them, according to Miss Louise Richardson, head librarian.

Leach Elected to Head Incoming Mortar Board

Dorothy Leach was elected president of Mortar Board, national senior honorary, during a recent business meeting held after the initiation services for new members at the home of Mrs. Harold F. Richards.

Other officers chosen were Murae Reddick, vice-president; Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, secretary; Betty Meyer, treasurer; Lillian Turlington, historian; Gertrude Kuhn, editor; and Betty Meyer, delegate to the Mortar Board triennial convention to be held at Lake Lure, North Carolina from June 26-30.

Demonstration School To Open Summer Term With Large Enrollment

The summer session of the demonstration school of Florida State College will open June 10 and continue through August 2. Dr. David H. Briggs, working with a group of 13 teachers from the demonstration school staff, the local school, and other schools of the state, will have supervision of the summer session.

All grades of the elementary school, including the kindergarten, and all high school subjects for which there is a sufficient demand will be included in the summer school schedule.

Approximately 275 students are expected to register this summer. Dut to the fact that the enrollment has steadily increased esch summer, it has been possible to broaden the curriculum. Manual training will be offered for the first time during the 1935 summer school, and more emphasis will be placed upon music, art, dramatics, and physical and health education.

Kappa Delta Pi Elects Skipper as President

Mrs. Dora Skipper, a teacher in the Demonstration school, was elected president of Kappa Delta Pi, national education honorary, at a meeting held last Tuesday afternoon in the Education Conference room. Miss Anita Pybrun was named vice-president; Murae Reddick, recording secretary; Miss Lillian Cross, treasurer; and Margaret Pfluge, coresponding secretary and reporter. Mrs. Paul Finner will act as couclior for the honorary.

Miss Maude Schwalmeyer gave a short talk thanking the group for the honorary membership which was bestowed upon her by the society. At this meeting a decision was reached regarding the sending of a news letter to all alumnae members of the honorary residing in the state.

An announcement was made at this time that a tea will be given Sunday afternoon from 5 until 6 o'clock at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Paul Finner, honoring all members of Kappa Delta Pi.

Harpers' Editors Praise Distaff

Critical Articles and Art Work Receive Special Commendation

Another tribute to the high quality of the journalistic work being done by students of Florida State College came this week when the editors of Harpers Magazine in a letter to Miss Lucy Fulghum, editor last year of the college magazine, The Distaff, paid a compliment to "the general high quality, particularly of the critical articles", that have appeared in the publication during the past year. The articles, which were written by students in journalism classes here, were declared to be well above the level of "good undergraduate performance".

Harpers' editors, who had been sent copies of The Distaff with a request that they criticize it, said the fiction in the magazine, although up to about the usual undergraduate standards, lacked the freshness, maturity, and originality of the critical articles. The illustrations appearing in the magazine were also complimented.

One of the articles appearing in the Distaff, "And They Call It Relief" by Edna Hoffman, was one Harpers had already awarded first prize in its Third National Prize Essay Contest. Another, "Religion Comes of Age" by Louise Robertson, was accepted for publication by the Literary Workshop, a literary

Educator Sees School Advance In Depression

Bagley Outlines American Contributions to Education Progress

Dr. William C. Bagley, professor of education at Teacher's College, Columbia University lectured Tuesday evening in the college auditorium on "Some Achievements and Some Shortcomings of American Education".

In a brief review he showed the effects of depressions on educational advance in the past. According to this review some important movement in education has followed each previous depression. The transitional stage education is now passing through has been and will be affected by the recent depression. The extent to which it will be affected cannot be ascertained as yet.

Dr. Bagley stated that the most important contributions of America to education are (1) the unit system of education; (2) development of the educational system on the physical side as illustrated by the many well equipped school buildings and playgrounds; (3) systematic health education resulting in a reduced death rate, and (4) the placing of educational problems on a scientific basis.

Increased attendance in primary and secondary schools followed the trend toward specialization brought about by widespread use of machinery which did away with routine occupations. The great developments in education involved lowering the standards of schools. Especially was this true in secondary schools where the work must necessarily become less exacting in order to take care of the increasing enrollment. "Due to lowered standards American schools fail to meet the requirements of European schools," Dr. Bagley asserted. "In spite of the fact that we are sending so many of our population to schools and colleges, we do not show any great advance in education. Competition has not the same influence on students as formerly and nothing has yet taken its place."

Certificates Have New Requirements

A recent Florida state law has added a two-hour courses in teaching science in elementary grades, a non-credit course in penmanship, a four hour course in industrial arts, and a four hour course in public school music to the requirements for an elementary school certificate, according to Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel.

Dr. Andrews announced further that teaching in high schools requires a four year degree with the required number of hours in the teaching subject; only subjects listed on the certificate may be taught

A two year certificate gives no degree from this college but entitles one to teach in the grade schools or in a junior high school. Teaching can be done only in the subjects listed on the certificate and each subject listed requires as much preparation as for high school teaching. Dr. Andrews pointed out that a three year L. I. is preferable, for it adds subjects to the certificate.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Dr. William H. Rogers of the English department will read poetry Monday night at 7:15 p. m., in the Broward club room following an after-dinner coffee which will be served in the club room preceding Dr. Rogers' program.

Miss Marian D. Irish, professor of political science, will open a series of forum discussions with a talk on the World Court Wednesday night at 8:15 p. m., in the Augusta Conradi theatre.

Home Economists Meet at Institute

Seventy Teachers Attend Eight-day Session On the Campus

The Home Economics Convention, to which all home economics teachers of the state were invited, closed Wednesday noon of this week after eight days of study and activity. It is estimated that approximately seventy teachers attended.

The convention was presided oevr by Miss Boletha Frojen, supervisor of home economics education, and Dr. Margaret R Sandels, dean of the school of home economics. Miss Rua Van Horn was the special guest and discussion leader of selected topics, assisted by Miss Ruth Connor, associate professor of home economics education in child development.

Held for the purpose of promoting more efficient instruction in home economics, the problem chosen for the topic of study during the convention was the interpretation of the new course of study just published by the state. Groups were organized, according to their working situations, which applied the course of study to the procedure of actual teacher activities. Each group was assigned a different unit for study which was reported on in a general conference.

These reports were given in the

Enrollment For Summer Session Increases 21.8%

Transfers Compose Large Group Which Totals 867 Students

Opening with a 21.8% increase in enrollment over last year, the Florida State College for Women inaugurated its twenty-second session of summer school Monday, June 10. This summer's register shows a total of 867 compared to 712 for the 1934 summer term. During a period of fifteen summers, only twice before has the enrollment shown an increase of 20% over that of the previous year. The first occurred in 1927, when there was an increase of 27.7%, and last year 24.5% more students enrolled.

The registrar's office reveals that a large number of summer students have transferred their credits from other institutions of higher learning and have taken special interest in getting classified into the regular channels leading to the two and four year degrees.

New Courses Offered

New work in library science, science, sociology, and education enrich the summer's course of study. The department of education placed in the curriculum an entirely new course for nursery school teachers, and special courses in two institutions of four weeks each are planned for Florida social workers by the sociology department. The education department leads in offering the greatest number of courses, designed to fit the needs of teachers doing summer work. Practically all courses of the winter session are given during the summer term, and students may take regular college work leading toward a degree, college courses to satisfy the state certificate requirements, and graduate work toward the master's degree.

Teachers' Status Will Improve In Future Is Bagley's Belief

"The teaching profession will be more important in the future than in the past," said Dr. W. C. Bagley noted educator, when asked what the effect of the recent depression will have on education. "In comparison with workers in other fields teachers have been handicapped," he continued, "in part because the financial rewards have been meagre in comparison with possible incomes in industry, in business such as law and engineering. One effect of the depression has been to reveal the fact that financial compensations are not always permanent and that a calling which offers only modest financial rewards may have other advantages which will be stable and enduring. This is particularly true of the profession of teaching."

Concerning the future of the teaching profession Dr. Bagley declared, "the social and economic changes that are now going on will give increased impetus to teachers work. With the increased development of machinery which will take over still more of routine work formerly done by men, women and children, there will be an increasing demand for keeping young people in school for longer and longer periods. This will be due in part to the fact that leisure should be used in as profitable a way as possible. There will be much enforced leisure due to much routine work done by machinery the enforced leisure will be due in part to a demand for workers on a higher level,—those levels which represent work that cannot be done by machinery, but which will necessitate a prolonged period of preparatory education.

"A larger number of teachers will be needed and an increasing number of difficult educational problems will need to be solved," he emphasized. "All this should mean a development of the profession of teaching which will be quite beyond anything witnessed in the past."

"That the federal government is justified in helping the states in the support of education, Dr. Bagley firmly believes "Some states," he explained "would not have the ability to support schools even should they tax themselves to the limit. Some can make only meagre provisions for school support.

"The nation as a whole said Dr. Bagley has a stake in the training interest of every citizen. Ignorance or illiteracy in any part of the country is a menace not only to the state, county, or city, but to the country as a whole. A citizen who has no child of his own should sup-

Women Must Have Better Education Says State Federation President

"We stand for better and higher ation for women," declared Mrs. Federation of Women's clubs, described the attitude of federation toward modern in the education of women. women have a place in the place of tomorrow will greater than that of today" Mrs. Moore added.

Even in politics, women have a Mrs. Moore continued. No disgraces the woman. An individual woman, here and there, disgrace the place, but no place s for its objective the betterment of society will disgrace the woman she continued. "And to these places woman must have and a higher education."

If women are to fill their places world of tomorrow they must ucated along all lines, Mrs. Moore pointed out, giving as evi- of this necessity, the many and social and political problems which confront the women of the eration. And to show that the federation believes in education for themselves as well as for the rising generation, Mrs. Moore cited the fixed policy of the federation to study a question thoroughly before taking action on it. This policy automatically commits the federation to a conservative program which is responsible for the current idea that it has no live stuff for publication, Mrs. Moore explained.

Some of the problems, state and national, of which the federation has made thorough study and on which it has influenced legislation, are the prevention of forest fires, the removal of cattle from the highway, tick eradication, fish and forest preservation, the establishment of beauty spots and wayside rests, child labor amendment, prohibition, and our relation to the world court.

That the Federation of Women's Clubs is looked upon as a body of women who know and who do is evidenced she maintained by the relation existing between the federation and all other agencies for social and political betterment. The federation is a member of the Florida Educational Association, the

Aspiring Frosh Provide Yearly Campus Laughs

Sagacious Upperclassmen Enjoy Usual "Breaks" Of the Lowly

"And then there was the freshman," is a phrase getting to be as common as, "That wasn't no lady; that was my wife." Unlike the old-timer, however, the former story grows better each year.

Of course, you heard the newcomers thundering down to breakfast at 7:30 o'clock Saturday morning, just as you were turning over for a second beauty nap, but maybe you didn't hear the little number from this year's crop of green-horns who exclaimed upon seeing the silver crossed at the tables in the dining-hall, "What a cute new way to set a table!"

One freshman, during the posture exam at the gym, announced that she would "go back home to Mother" rather than take gym in those immodest angel robes—all the while clutching said robe frantically.

Still another frosh, when asked to serve the plums at breakfast, timidly inquired if they weren't to be served for dessert.

During registration, one member of the lowly class, told Dr. X not to sign her up for Dr. X's class because she had heard he was hard as nails. Dr. X, with an expression of chagrin, did not sign the young lady for his class.

After church Sunday one aspiring frosh hurried up the aisle, asking everyone if she knew the attractive preacher. "I want to meet some of the better element in this town", was her assertion. Apparently, she did not know of the existence of a better element on campus.

"And then there was the freshman—"

YWCA Furthers Project Schemes

Recreation Center to Be Established at La Fayette Park

The Young Women's Christian Association recreation project which came into existence last May at a gathering at the Y. W. C. A. hut is now getting under way as a definite program for the coming year. The idea of the center was conceived by Lucy Gee Linn, president of the Y. W. C. A., and Gladys Oliver, chairman of the committees for the new project.

The aims of establishing this new center are to help in character building of children and to serve as a means of enlisting more girls on this campus in Y. W. work, which is to be carried on through the medium of committees. The following have been chosen to serve: program committee, Beth Daane, Mildred Emmelhainz, and as adviser, Miss Dorothy White of the physical education department; survey committee, Elizabeth Kirby-Smith and Anita Jones; administration committee, Catherine Barrs and Carol Parabee.

Helen Kierce, a transfer student from Louisville, Kentucky, who is specializing in social case work, has had experience in recreational leadership, and is interested in Y. W. C. A. work, has been appointed FERA assistant for the entire project.

The site for carrying out the playground activities is the Lafayette Park, which is in the northeast section of the city near Los Robles. The recreation center is under the auspices of the Exchange club of Tallahassee, which is working with the college group A special committee of the club has been at work on the project during the past summer months, and the Exchange members expect to furnish the equipment necessary for the center.

The recreational park will be open from 3:30 to 5:30 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons, and its activities are to consist of games, story-telling, handicraft, dramatics, and musical activities. The children attending the center will come from the ages of three to 12 years, and children from all over the city are invited to come.

Students on campus interested in assisting at the center are asked to notify any committee member at once.

Student Heads Take New View On Regulations

Blood, Graham Assume Active Leadership In College

LIBERALIZATION IS ENCOURAGED

Many Revisions Are Made In Social Conduct Regulations

An aggressive position on matters of college government policy has been taken by Katherine Blood, president of the student-body. In an address to the members of the freshman clas recently she told the students that "respect, honor and consideration are prerequisites for entering this college, and sincerity, firmnes of purpose, friendliness, and the desire to gain a well-rounded education are expected."

Judiciary Takes Liberal Stand

Notable liberalization in social regulations for students at Florida State College for Women for the 1935-36 session is the stand taken by Margaret Graham, chairman of the judiciary.

The new privileges granted this year, while not considered experimental in nature, are expected to meet with such cooperation from students that a basis will be laid for further liberalization in the future.

Constructive work on the operation of the honor system is also planned by the judiciary this year under the guidance of Margaret. According to her, though the enforcement of rules is necessary, the construction of an honorable, social-minded and responsible altitude of citizenship will be the main objective of the judiciary during the school term

Plans for carrying out the educational policies which were decided upon by the college government association last year have been made definite and are as follows: reorganization of the freshman advisory council, regular meetings of the upperclassmen as a body, informal gatherings of faculty and students, more extensive preparation for performance of official duties, strengthening of the tie between the day students and the campus, enlarged activities of the freshman commission, and inauguration of a campus program in cooperation with the National Student Federation of America.

Important revisions in college government by-laws, going into effect this fall include the regulations concerning riding with men. A senior may ride at any time. A junior may ride in the day-time and to and from town at night. Two or more sophomores or freshmores going together may ride in the daytime and to and from town at night.

Without signing up students may ride in the daytime to and

Forums Planned By Local NSFA

Organization Will Arouse Student Opinion

The most recently organized of all student groups on campus, the local unit of the National Student Federation of America, is drawing up definite plans for the year's work, to be presented at its first meeting early in October.

Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman of the unit, states that the organization will conduct two forums each month and sponsor a bulletin board in the administration building on subjects of current interest. Still under consideration are a number of other plans designed to stimulate intelligent and constructive student opinion on questions of national and international importance.

Although Florida State College has been a member of the NSFA for several years, the students had never planned a definite program to link them actively with the other half million members until last May, when the student senate sponsored the organization of a local unit.

The officers elected at the May meeting to serve during the present year are Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman, Marjoria Harris, senior charman, Hazel Bowman, junior chairman, and Phil Asher, secretary.

Dodd at the first convocation of the school year Tuesday. Dr. Dodd pointed out that the good in college is not only in its "contacts" but also in making available information and the opportunity to coordinate knowledge after it has been acquired.

Dr. Dodd told students that a girl could enjoy the aesthetic appeal of music, artists' series, drama, and the campus itself if she would take the time, and he pointed out also that the best of human contacts with faculty and students are available on this campus.

Convocation was attended by the faculty, who marched in, headed by Dr. Conradi, and followed by members of the senior class. Dr. Conradi spoke a few words in greeting which he terminated with a short prayer. He then introduced Miss Augusta Murphy, associate professor of violin, formerly of New York, who played Vreisler's arrangement of Couperin's "Chanson Louis XIII and Pavane."

of the college, will now also serve as an instructor in institution economics. Miss Davis received a B.S. degree from Florida State.

Three of the new faculty members who will teach in the Demonstration school are: Miss Martha G. Chapman, of Orlando; Miss Elizabeth Hutt, of Beaufort, S. C.; and Miss Ruth DeGraff, of St. Petersburg. Miss Chapman received a B.S. in Education from Florida State, and an M.A. degree from George Peabody College in Nashville, Tennessee. Miss Hutt is an instructor of foreign languages and received an M.A. degree from the Universit; of South Carolina. Miss DeGraff will act as elementary critic teacher in the Demontsration school. She received an A.B. degree from Florida State.

ACADEMIC FREEDOM OR INTELECTUAL ATROPHY?

Again the question of academic freedom and the right of open discussion challenges the American student. With the dismissal from the faculty of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute of assistant professor Granville Hicks for the crime of being an "avowed communist," the existence of a too-prevalent attitude in a number of our colleges today of intellectual repression becomes acutely evident.

Admitting that "we do adhere to an unwritten regulation of long standing that there shall be excluded from all classrooms all controversial discussions about politics, sociology, etc," Dr. Edward S. Jarrett, president of the Institute, defended his action with the fallacious ascertion that "time devoted to such subjects, when used to arouse or incite, is lost time."

Somewhat ironical was the statement by the commencement speaker of the same institute a few days later that the technologist is "best fitted to solve wisely our social problems." We wonder if Dr. Jarrett beamed inwardly at these reassuring words. Could he sincerely feel as he presented his graduates with the diplomas symbolic of their entrance into our social whirlpool that his educational system had equipped the students to cope with the problems they must face? By refusing to permit his undergraduates to discuss them, does he witlessly suppose that the problems may be avoided?

Only by the knowledge and courage that comes with intellectual integrity springing from an ever-deepening search for truth can students attain the critical power essential to an understanding grasp of contemporary problems that will enable them to attempt their solution. Denied the right to analyze and compare conflicting economic and social theories, they will remain the unthinking robots patterned by conservative dogmatists like Dr. Jarrett.

This fact educators must realize. We have already far too many robots, willing tools, of unscrupulous leaders. The world today needs thinking minds and those it shall never have if our American "institutions of higher learning" continue to lead students down trails long since abandoned when they should encourage them to tread firmly and critically the labyrinth that does somewhere have an end.

Granville Hicks was right when he declared that "there are persons in this country who have a deep regard for academic freedom and will not let the matter drop."

A PLEA FOR INTELLIGENT GUIDANCE

According to Dr. W. C. Bagley, American educator who for the past week has lectured before Florida State College students on various phases of education, each major depression in our history has been accompanied by an advance in education.

With the panic of 1837, the elementary school secured its real start. Secondary schools were firmly established following the crisis of 1870. During the present depression has come a fifty percent increase in high school enrollment.

Most indicative of present educational advance, however, is the law passed in seven states providing that next year no one will be admitted to the teaching profession who has not had four years of college training or its equivalent. These states, California, Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Maryland, and Washington, reveal an encouraging awakening among educators to the fact that an intelligent citizenry can only result from enlightened guidance.

That American youth compared with the youth of progressive European countries is two years retarded, as indicated by intelligence tests, is a startling situation. It is not because our students are of less native intelligence than their contemporaries abroad that they rank thus, but because our standards of education have been such that ill-equipped teachers too often have had charge of their mental development.

High time it is that educators realize that only through intelligent guidance can a generation develop to its capacity. If nothing else results from the tumultous chaos of the past few years. This enactment, setting a goal for other states, will be of such far reaching advantageous effects that the depression will prove not a retarding, but on the contrary, a progressive factor in our history.

IS THERE AN ANSWER?

What to be, is not the question of the youth as he enters the economic world today so much as, what to believe. Faced with an agglomeration of systems, each promulgating a solution of the complexity of the economic and political enigma, he must, he is told, choose from the contradictory dogmas that comprise the kaleidoscopic world pattern.

Socialism, which "once established may so regulate the material side of existence as to enable men to leave their minds free to employ their leisure in those things which make the true glory of man,"—is that the answer? Or is it democracy, that disintegrating force which "dissolves communities into individuals and collects them again into mobs;" or perhaps, fascism, which by sacrificing the people strengthens the State?

Anent each of these and of the innumerable other economic orders have been written, pages of paradoxical proof which the youth reads, earnestly seeking from this mass of conflicting evidence, an answer. And he first reaches the conclusion that all government systems under certain lights are as beautiful glasses, sitting pure and perfect on a shelf, which crack and break when filled with the liquid of authority and action. Each firm and of strong material under observation, in practice, none is able to support the weighty charge of power.

Seeking a cause for this weakness, he turns his scrutiny toward the men who make the systems and observes a legion of opposed leaders, each sincere, each earnestly convinced of the ultimate integrity and worth of his belief.

Recognition of these fallacies, next leads the student to a study of their origin, and he finds the intricate web of motivations, constraining thought and ensnaring action.

All further pursuit of an answer leads the weary youth too frequently to the impentrable wall of futility. He has seen men struggle against motivating forces, has beheld their pitiful, chimerical structures, built on foundations which have their strongest roots in hope, and he questions whether it is possible "to take arms against a sea of troubles and by opposing end them?"

And he finds himself in unwilling yet inevitable accordance with the reflection,

"Our wills and fates do so contrary run
That our devices still are overthrown,
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own."

Perceiving all this, the youth can only formulate and repeat questions, for the answer he does not know. Impelled as he will be, however, into the center of that whirlpool, by thus sceptically questioning, he will learn that though there may be no infallible answer, still from the answers proferred by the variant economic systems may be evolved an integrated solution to our contemporary problems.

IT'S FUNNY-PECULIAR
BY JANILEE RAYNE

Dr. Heinlein has a white silk shirt, and not only that but he wears it. He wore it to class t'other day . . . and he didn't wear a coat. Now the good Professor usually does wear a coat . . . so what does that mean? I dunno, but I'm sure a fact so extraordinarily extraordinary must have a hidden meaning somewhere . . . but, my dear young lady, what do you mean by hidden meaning? Does hidden meaning have a hidden meaning, and if so, how are you going to define it? In other words, you must give a meaning for hidden meaning before you can talk about the meanings of hidden meaning.

Now that we've settled that, we can go on and find a hidden meaning in Dr. Heinlein's rash act. Could it be that our well-known Psychologist, who without impunity reduces all our hot and bothered emotions to a mere state of chemico-physical relations within the organism—can this particular organism be guilty of a certain chemico-physical relationship called "Pride"? Did he leave off his coat so that we'd be sure to see how nicely his white silk shirt fluttered and rippled in the breeze? . . . You ask him sometime and if he's in a good humor he'll talk at great length and wave his hands and it will all be very interesting and you'll like Dr. Heinlein and want to talk to him again . . . but when he walks away you'll still be wondering why he wore the white silk shirt. Psychologists seem to be like that . . . just try to make one of them state a definite fact.

On this lovely morning I find it hard to realize that the quiet joy and deep happiness in my heart is the result of the actions of a dinky little gland stuck off somewhere in complicated anatomy. I'd much prefer to think that this joy is within me because off somewhere a radio is playing my favorite love song, the sun is warm, the people around me are laughing, and we had canteloupe for breakfast this morning. It may not be so intelligent, but it is heaps more fun.

"INFLATION WHEN AND HOW?" John L. Flynn, Harpers, June, 1935.

Looking ahead to a "recovery" we are in reality longing for that state of disequilibrium we enjoyed in Coolidge prosperity. Mr. Flynn has here analyzed the means and commented on the possibilities of such a return, which will take place, he avers, only through an increase in investments. Until private business can take the initiative to assume its responsibilities the government must exercise its duty in lending to private business, financing public works, or maintaining a dole. Funds necessary for such a program may be borrowed or created, and since unlimited borrowing is impossible, the question resolves itself to the issue of inflation vs. taxation. Inflation, which must be faced as a possibility within a year, will not be so drastic a measure in this country as it was in Germany. Yet Mr. Flynn warns it will be harmful for both business and the individual, for the financier and the destitute alike. As the better alternative he suggests a taxation of incomes and the levying of some few additional sales taxes.

"EDUCATION AND OUR SOCIETY—A DEBATE", John Dewey and Tyler Dennett, Forum, June, 1935.

Dr. Dewey finds our educational system at fault, declaring it to be a patchwork of old and new ideas which result in blinding student and teacher alike. At present the system but confuses youth into a state of intellectual, moral, vocational and industrial bewilderment. He would substitute an institution more conducive to true understanding of the contemporary scene, its implications and the part youth must play in its development. It is not the individual teacher whom Dr. Dewey blames but the system composed of repressive legislatures, vested interests, an irresponsible press and the public pressure of parents.

Dr. Dennett, on the other hand, finds our schools doing great good in spite of their faults. Dividing them into parts, he is satisfied with the manner in which the grade schools furnish needed skills, in which high schools train as well as could be expected young people lacking in the maturity necessary for critical intellectuality. On a higher level, Dr. Dennett finds the American College through its introduction of the seminar to have stimulated thinking which in turn is benefitting our society.

"TO TELL OR NOT TO TELL", Eugene Lyons, Harpers, June, 1935.

To tell or not to tell—that was the problem obsessing Mr. Lyons over a period of years. Reaching Moscow in February, 1928, as foreign correspondent for a great American news agency, he was already prejudiced in favor of communism—pre-determined to glorify its successes and to disregard its defects. As time went on, however, and cruelty, stupid blunders and the terror of mutual distrust multiplied in Russia, it became increasingly hard for him to maintain pro-communist sympathies. Adding to his distress, American intellectuals, when he visited this country in 1931, were accepting Russian policies with quite as exaggerated a faith as he. He is now able in the light of evidence and much careful thought, to solve the problem intellectually; i. e., that there can be no concealment of any phase of the Soviet enterprise. Not so successful, however, is he in the psychological approach, for he shrinks from destroying the faith of masses in a new Russia, whose aims are worthy even though the technique be at fault.

Home Demonstration Session Ends With Awarding of Travel Prizes

The twenty-third annual short course for Home Demonstration Club girls which was held at the Florida State College for Women the week ending June 7, closed with the awarding of prizes to winners in various contests. The course was attended by 414 leading 4-H club girls from 30 counties, 29 home demonstration agents, and 30 social leaders.

Winners of principal prizes, each drawing a free trip to the National Club Congress to be held in Chicago next December, were Edna Sims of Walton County, best score in bread making and judging; and Margaret Dinsford of Polk County, best school dress.

At the election of officers, held June 7, Roberta Brown was elected president of the state council of home demonstration work; Ruth Arnott of Dade County, first vice-president; Thelma Hamm, of Clay, second vice-president; Mary Frances Tamberlin, of Hillsborough, secretary, and Jennette Rish, of Gulf, treasurer.

Each year, the 4-H club girls gather at the Women's college for a week of study and contests, under the direction of the state home demonstration service of the department of education. Instruction classes are held in clothing, self-improvement, home improvement, gardening, nutrition and health, food conservation, posture, poultry, food preparation, and health improvement, family and community recreation, leadership, council work, music appreciation, art appreciation, and similar subjects.

To be eligible for this course a girl must be 14 years old, in good physical condition, show a creditable demonstration of her work in her own home, and must have exhibited club work at two or more annual exhibits, must have been a contest winner, and must have shown such attitude toward her work as to make a worthy representative of the 4-H club.

Eight Added To Summer Faculty

Two Join College List, Six Teaching in Demonstration School

Eight teachers have been added to the faculty for the summer session, two in the college, and six at the Demonstration school.

In the college are Dr. Julia H. Heinlein, who is assistant professor of child psychology and nursery school methods; and Miss Sara Mall who is assistant instructor of industrial arts.

The following are teaching at the Demonstration school: Miss Mary Bainlum; who is principal of an elementary school in St. Petersburg; Miss Mattie G. Chapman of Orlando; Miss Ruth de Graff; Mr. R. C. Moon, who is principal of the Sealey Memorial school in Tallahassee; Mr. Bryan Nelms of Jacksonville, and Bertha May Stulpner.

An Athletic Association was formed at the Florida State College for Women on Tuesday morning, June 11. The following officers were elected: Mildred Emmelhainz, President; Charlotte Dewey, Vice President; Luther King, Treasurer and Secretary; Mary Miller, Chairman of the Social Committee.

form of practical demonstrations by individual teachers, supplemented by talks from members of the faculty of the school of home economics. Exhibits of illustrative material were placed in the science building and used effectively in the general discussions.

A variety of interesting social activities were also included on the convention program. Following the opening dinner in the dining hall on Wednesday night of last week, the group assembled at the home management house for after dinner coffee. After the welcome given by Dr. Edward Conradi, Superintendent W. S. Cawthon, and Dr. M. R. Hinson, Director of Education, spoke on the value of home economics in education.

Sunday night from 7:15-8:15 open house was held in the home management house honoring Miss Rua Van Horn. On Monday evening, a reception was given in Jennie Murphree by Dr. Conradi.

New Courses In Summer Session

Special Study in Social Case Work, Nursery School Offered

Of a number of new courses being offered this year at the summer session of Florida State College for Women two concern entirely new fields of study.

A nursery school course is under the direction of Dr. Julia H. Heinlein, who has had special training in child psycology at Johns Hopkins. The course is divided into two parts. One is a two year course for those who are unable to attend college for four years. The other is a four year course leading to a bachelors degree in education and a state certificate covering the work of the elementary grades. These courses are a modification of education 203.

Under the guidance of Dr. Elinor Nims and Dr. Raymond Bellamy a course in Methods of Social Case work is being offered. The course is open only to those who have had sociology. Besides classroom study of cases, the students will be afforded actual experience in case work.

FOREIGN STUDENT PROJECT PLANNED

A foreign exchange student project is being sponsored by the local International Relations club which was formed at the Florida State College for Women last year.

The club has asked for accommodations for a French, a Swiss, and a Latin American girl. The Board of Control has waived tuition for these prospective students, and has given permission for them to live in the dormitories.

The club is relying on honoraries and individuals from the faculty to contribute to a fund for supporting this project. Pledges have been made to the amount of fifty-seven and a half dollars. A small amount has been contributed, and sixty-five more is needed.

Miss Martha Whitaker, secretary of the club, has sent a letter to the Insitute of International Education to learn what can be done for this project, and what help they can give.

Scholarships Are Granted Students

Sixty-three girls are working their way through summer school this year, according to Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, the personnel director. In addition to this number twenty-five summer scholarships for projects in the state have been given to juniors and seniors for F. E. R. A. work, lasting ten weeks. They receive $200 through the school year for expenses. Different kinds of work are required: social service work, recreational work, adult education, or office work.

Various ways to work through school have been found: thirty-four girls have dining room scholarships, five work in the pantry, eight are assistants in the library, four assist in the dormitary offices, four work in the gymnasium as life-guards and one is employed as a musician. There are about six girls who have become representatives for various services in town.

FORMER EDITOR BACK

Mrs. Donald McIntosh, formerly Miss Margaret Jordan, class of '32, returned to Florida State College for Women to attend the Home Economics institute held on the campus this week.

Mrs. McIntosh was well known here when she was a student, being editor of the Flambeau in her senior year, and managing editor during her junior year. She is a member of three honorary fraternities, Alpha Chi Alpha, Omicron Nu, and Phi Kappa Phi.

She is now a teacher of home economics in Tampa.

Turkey Changed Since 1926 Says Former YWCA Secretary of Pera

By CAROLINA DeMONTIGNE

Turkey today is an almost complete reorganization of the Turkey which existed before the establishment of the Turkish Republic in 1926, according to Mrs. Esther B. Ferguson, graduate student on this campus, who was for two years general secretary of the Y. W. C. A. Pera Center in Constantinople, Turkey. Since this time the entire educational set-up has been changed from the mosque-centered school to a secularized system with the advice of American and German educational experts. Certain revenues that formerly supported the sultan's harem now go to the support of the schools, which educate the girls as well as their brothers. Formerly, governesses taught the daughters of the privileged class in their own homes. Often teachers for the public schools are sent by the government to study in Germany, France, England, and America and upon their return home are pledged to teach for five years wherever the government sends them.

Turkish girls, Mrs. Ferguson described as eager to take advantage of their new freedom, flocking to the schools, and continuing their education in the University of Stamboul. They have no trouble in expressing their new personality because they have dignity and a native independence much like the American girls. The are, she said, sweet and modest with lovely manners and a good sense of humor, and since Constantinople is only three days from Paris they are generally smartly dressed. Girls have been guarded carefully in their homes for many centuries and only since the adoption of the Swiss Civil Code in 1926 have women become persons before the law.

Divorce is now a process of law; formerly a man could say, "I divorce you" three times before witnesses and that was sufficient. The women have never had such a privilege. Marriage laws have changed, also. An intention of marriage must be filed some days before the ceremony and both the contracting parties must be subjected to a thoroughly physical examination before the license is granted. Turkish women have always had control of their own property, however.

Concerning the City of Constantinople Mrs. Ferguson, said that it has a most inspiring site. The Golden Horn separate Pera from the older city of Stamboul and the Bosporous divides Europe and Asia, flowing between the Sea of Marmara and the Black Sea. Its shores are lined with villas, former palaces of the sultans, summer homes, various embassies, and the two American colleges. The Turks operate a fast, dependable and clean ferry system, and one can go to Asia for tea and return to Europe for dinner.

The official name of Constantinople is Istanboul, which is composed of Skutari, Pera and Stamboul. In addition to the many interesting sights which the city of today affords visitors, there are many museums, well cataloged and organized, which contain such priceless treasures as the captured throne of the Shah of Persia which is set with perfect pearls and rubies; the entirely golden throne of a sultan; the dressing table of Catherine the Great which is outlined with diamonds; and rare old china, some of it studded with precious gems.

Dem School Has Large Enrollment

Manual Training, Spoken English Added to Curriculum

With an increase in enrollment of about five per cent over that reported last summer the demonstration school of Florida State College for Women opened June 10 for its regular summer session. Additional entries next week are expected to bring the present enrollment of 203 above last summer's total of 204. Enrollment by classes is as follows: senior high school, 74; junior high school, 25; elementary grades, 96.

According to Dr. David H. Briggs, principal of the demonstration school, patrons are particularly interested in securing wholesome work and recreation for their children during the summer months. Following this trend, two new subjects, manual training and spoken English, have been added to the regular curriculum. In the elementary grades most emphasis is being placed on music and industrial arts. Swimming, with an enrollment of 100, is enjoyed by the entire school.

Several new teachers have been added to the faculty. They are Bertha Stulpner, Godfrey King, Byron Mills, R. C. Moon, Mrs. Bayne and Ruth DeGraff.

Conradi To Lead Vespers Services

Dr. Edward Conradi, president of Florida State College will speak at the second Vesper service, which will be held on the lawn between the library and history building Sunday June 23 at 7:15. Feature of the service will be a cello solo by Owen Sellers, professor of music, accompanied by Miss Ella Scobie Opperman, dean of the school of music. Everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Vesper services were conducted last Sunday evening by Reverend Jeffery Alfriend, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church. The program was opened with a violin selection played by Martha Reddick and accompanied by Virginia Long.

Committee Plans Recreational and Social Program

Physical Education Department to Feature Regular Play Nite

Recreational and social activities of varied nature are being planned by the social committee for the summer session according to Helenmary Fritsch, director of activities.

Featured will be the regular play night under the auspices of the physical education department, which will take place in the gymnasium, from 8-10, on Friday evenings. These programs will vary from week to week and will cover a wide range of interests.

Tables will be placed in the lobby for ping pong, cards, checkers, and carons. In the gymnasium proper, there will be courts for ring tennis, shuffle board, darts, and horseshoes. For those interested in acquatic sports, the pool will provide races and contests in swimming.

At three o'clock every day, at the gymnasium, students may have access to outdoor shuffle board, tennis, ping pong, and diamond ball courts. Practically any other kind of out door sport equipment is also available. Croquet courts for daily use may be found in front of the dining hall, Broward, and Gilchrist halls, and tables for ping pong are placed in recreation hall and lower Broward.

Other features for the summer program include several sightseeing trips to Wakulla Springs and the Gulf of Mexico which will be organized upon request. Later in the summer Miss Ezda Deviney, of the Biology department, is planning to conduct a trip for the study of birds and their habits.

Other plans for the summer will be announced at a later date.

"OFF THE RECORD—WHAT BUSINESS WANTS IN THE COLLEGE MAN", William L. Fletcher. Scribners, June, 1935.

As an intercessor between employers and college men, Mr. Fletcher is well able to furnish information, for the most part unobtainable, as to just what qualities business desires in its new recruits from the colleges. He finds them to be good health as a foundation for hard work; reliability in such responsibility as is theirs; prudence; initiative; and finally a serious respect for business as a life work. Business, Mr. Fletcher infers, is more concerned with the man who knows how to think than with him who knows what to think—preferring to teach the aspirant those methods of business activity it has found successful through the experience of trial and error.

"IS MAN IMPROVING?", Abbe Ernest Dimnet, Scribners, June, 1935.

Though man himself is conceded a definite step in progress by his evolution from chaos, Mr. Dimnet has doubts concerning the present stage of human success toward achieving an ultimate perfection. And although scientific knowledge of the material universe advances he is disturbed by a lack of that complimentary improvement in the spiritual realm which we need for true progress. Men, it seems, have a yearning for tomorrow, believing it has in store a more complete life; yet history reminds us of the halting steps, the frequent retrogression from ancient grandeur through the Dark Ages to our present peak of civilization. Strangely enough this peak is under the fire of Mr. Dimnet's criticism concerning its religion, its education, its evaluation and happiness. In the light of such findings he concludes we are guilty of success, not progress.

Education Hall Is Almost Ready

Except for a few finishing touches the reconstruction of the education building has been completed and will be ready for classes in the fall. The new building will occupy the same site as was occupied by the original education building and some of the brick used in the old building was used in the reconstruction.

The new building, which was designed by H. D. Mendenhall, resident engineer and architect, was erected by labor obtained through a grant of assistance from the F. E. R. A. Money for the project was obtained from the student activities and building funds.

The collegiate Gothic style of architecture will be featured in the exterior decoration scheme, conforming to the style used in the other buildings on the campus. The interior decoration will include corridors lined with glazed tile.

There are four floors in the building and a total of sixty rooms, including the classrooms and offices.

The ground floor will house the state board of control and the industrial arts department. The laboratories and kiln rooms of this department will also be on this floor.

The offices of the college of education and of the psychology department will be situated on the second floor.

The third floor will be given over to the psychology laboratories while classrooms will be designated to the fourth and sections of the second floors.

Richardson Gives Library Schedule

The schedule of the college library this summer as announced by Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, is as follows:

The doors are open daily at the following hours: Monday through Friday, 7:30 to 12:00; 1:00 to 6:00; 7:15 to 9:30; On Saturdays, 8:30 to 12:00; 1:00 to 5:00. On Sunday afternoons reading rooms are open from 2:30 to 5:00.

Books may be taken from the reserved room between 9:00 and 9:30 p. m., during the week and are due at 9:00 a. m., the following morning. On Saturday books may be signed out between 1:00 and 5:00 and must be returned at 9:00 a. m., Monday.

All divisions are being used except the browsing room, which will be open later in the term.

Copies of regulations concerning the use of the library may be obtained at the library desk.

As in past summers, convocation will be held each week from 12 to 12:30 on Tuesday. The lunch hour on these days will be postponed until 12:30.

The programs will consist of talks and lectures by members of the faculty and different members of the student body. It is understood that the school of music is arranging some musical programs for a later date.

LUCY POPE VISITS

Miss Lucy Pope, former president of the College Government Association and graduate of the class of 1933, was in Tallahassee last Wednesday and Thursday as the guest of Mrs. Anice Elkins.

Since her graduation, Miss Pope has been teaching in the West Palm Beach high school and is now head of the history department there. This past year she was elected sponsor of the Senior class, but because of ill-health was forced to resign her sponsorship, remaining as cosponsor.

Graduate School Shows Increase

Master's Degree in Education Sought By Majority

The proportion of students enrolled for graduate study this summer is greater than in any previous year according to Dr. Paul Finner, chairman of the senate committee on graduate work. During other years half of the graduate students were doing first year work toward their M. A. degree, but this percentage has been reduced to one third this year, with a larger percentage of students registered for third and fourth year work.

Of the forty-eight graduate students, five will receive their degrees at the end of the summer school. Twelve of this number are in their third summer, while thirteen are in their second summer. The first year students number eighteen.

There are more students getting their degree in education than in any other subject. Eight will receive the degree in education, seven in home economics, six in English, and four in history. The remainder are receiving degrees in sociology, Spanish, and psychology.

WHAT IS YOUTH'S CRIME?

By MARTHA WHITAKER

With few exceptions the magazines of our day which deal in any way with current issues of a social or economic nature abound with articles reflecting the dissatisfaction of society with what society itself has allowed to bewilder it. It would be difficult to state definitely which age group is the most bewildered.

In a recent investigation it was found that a surprisingly large number of seniors with above-average grades in a women's college knew almost nothing about the problems of contemporary society. Their personal replies to questions asking if they felt that they had any knowledge of the forces at work in the world today were made in the negative almost entirely; whether from modesty or from frankness they stated most candidly that they were ignorant of the major world problems. The honest admission of their meagre understanding was a hopeful sign, but it was not accompanied by any too prevalent statement that the students ardently desired to know and understand more and why. This then is the distressing situation on all too many campuses. If the greater number of youths could themselves realize the crime about which Rollo Walter Brown writes in "The Crime Against Youth" we would never have to despair of our future state. The crime of which he accuses middle age is that of stupidity in refusing to let function the very minds which middle age most needs in its present bewilderment.

To some of us youths the middle aged seem the most bewildered in a purer sense. Their old world has gone, their standards of living have changed, and they find it hard to change their habits of living to a corresponding level. The bewilderment of youth is of a different sort. It is more complex. Perhaps "bafflement" would more correctly describe the youth mind. We believe more deeply, because we have seen the contradictions sooner, that our society is foreign to our ideals of justice and goodness. To the middle aged mind the disappointments are accepted more as repetitions of history and as fate and the inevitability of economic laws working themselves out. The youth mind senses something decadent and menacing in an economic framework which does not seem to need the honest work of laborers, the intellectual stimulation of scholars and scientists, and the beauty of artists, engineers and musicians. It senses the enduring good qualities in human relationships and would like to eliminate the evil, antisocial qualities which cause us to fight blindly as if in a room with the lights out.

The sense of bafflement enters at this point. The middle aged mind with its advantage of experience and years attempts to stifle the enthusiasm and the moral indignation of the youth spirit with such patronizing dismissals as "You will learn as you grow older that such ideals are impossible. You must not depart so much from the dictates of the crowd. Don't be obnoxious with your continuous talk of social security, international peace and honest government. You've got to learn to play the game and not step on people's toes. It isn't wise to cross the politicians especially if you are in any way concerned with education. Be diplomatic. This is the admonition which the student gets from parents and even faculty. And his bafflement seems to grow deeper when he begins to learn that such is actually the situation. He believes he knows what is wrong. He thinks he has a fairly workable plan if only the middle aged mind would give it a chance to experiment. Or if he could gather together just enough youths to offer his economic and social scheme he could see his way to becoming a useful citizen and a contented one.

The difficulty does not lie, however, in the gathering of these youths with honest minds. There are not twenty in a school of five hundred. The major obstacle is the projecting of the middle aged mind into the body of the other four hundred and eighty youths. So great is the lack of imagination in the minds of college men and women that all they expect to accept for their coming forty years is a struggle, difficult for some of them and less harsh for others among them to get whatever they can for themselves and their small circle of dependents regardless of the consequences which that selfishness may have on other fellowmen (also selfish). The horror of such an ignorant and beastly existence doesn't make a college man ache inwardly. He accepts it as he does his god which made it so.

Bertrand Russell in Political Ideals writes: "They (institutions) make a man's happiness depend upon what he adds to the general possessions of the world, or upon what he can secure for himself of the private goods in which others cannot share. Modern capitalism forces the wrong decision of these alternatives upon all who are not heroic or exceptionally fortunate." The church-going college student coming in weekly contact with the teachings of Christ, fails to see the contradiction between the doctrine of brotherly love and the business ethics of his father. The college student tithes a dollar a month and contributes fifty cents to a fund to support a family the head of which the business executive father has had to fire in order to reduce labor costs. The college student upon graduation will be given a position in the office of his father and concentrate his energies more and more upon the machine and the system. The machine must be perfect and the profits large. What happens to the individuals for whom the machine is supposed to exist?

Perhaps it is not entirely fair to indict the student so harshly. He has been coddled by the philosophy of private enterprise and has been assured that competition for profit is a moral right and duty in order to preserve the spirit of ambition and independence in man. In the exertion to make himself independent and prosperous and respected in the eyes of his fellow citizens (downtrodden but not without hope of acquiring some day a similar position of eminence by the same strategy or ruthlessness) he does not glance back to see those whom his profit motive has made dependent upon society in general. In this case the individual profits at the expense of other individuals and society.

This indictment could become a sentimental plea for more brotherly love. Its main purpose, however, is to point out the ignorance and stupidity of a society which allows individuals to use it so crassly for their own personal happiness. There might come a time when even the individual would realize that he too would be abundantly happy and secure with all men planning together the good and wise scheme for living.

Perhaps our educational system is at fault for not prescribing the reading of more Utopias. Vastly impractical as they are at the present time when we are so far from being, as a people, of one social mind and of one cultural mind, they would, nevertheless, serve the invaluable purpose of stimulating man's desires for a more perfect

The twentieth century intellectual dabbles in generalizations. He makes the statement, "Yes, certainly. I believe socialism is the way out for America. But once impaled concerning the fundamentals of socialism he is lost. He is a pacifist without knowing the history of war. He doesn't know much about the church, but he has read that its teachings are not pertinent to the age, and so he automatically excludes religion from his daily schedule. The reputed intellectual youth is a dilettante in "isms".

It is evident, therefore, that the young radical is not dangerous simply because he cannot crystallize his thoughts. It follows then that with no thought integration he is capable of physical coordination. And the result is that the young radical is neither a thinker, nor a doer, but a dreamer.

On my own campus students are forever bickering and heckling after their "rights" as they call them. After they get them they don't exercise them.

The student body would like this change and the other change. Ask them to defend their desired innovation in an open forum letter to the college newspaper. It's a different matter. That would take time, and require a marshalling of thoughts.

No, the youthful radical is not dangerous. He lacks polish. He refuses to see a thing through. He detests the applying of finishing touches to a project. He is content to talk, to dream, and to justify his dreams with more talk. He is neither to be condoned for his free thinking nor feared for his deeds. He does neither. He is a staunch one hundred per center. And if he has earned any other name it is because every now and then he thumbs the pages of a so-called intellectual article and talks through his hat.

WHAT IS YOUTH'S CRIME?

and less stupid world. We are so concerned with striving independently for security that we fail to realize the turmoil into which society in general is thrown. In describing the days of business expansion in the United States Edward Bellamy wrote in Looking Backwards "To deliberately enter a field of business and destroy the enterprise of those who had occupied it previously, in order to plant one's own enterprise on their ruins, was an achievement which never failed to command popular admiration." Being reared in such an atmosphere of competition the boy or girl who advocates "planning", "government regulation", and such radical innovations is almost a monstrosity and certainly is ostracized by fraternity associates.

So often even the most sensitive and thoughtful scholars in our colleges wonder why such sensible students as we seem to be worry so much about "putting a radio in every home and a car in every garage". Their facetiousness reveals a slight misunderstanding or lack of insight into our fundamental aims. We, too as well as they, dislike having to think continuously of the materialistic and bodily wants of people. But we do not let the illusions concerning the romanticism of poets, creating beauty in poverty and hunger, blind us to the fact that as long as people have not what they need for their bodies they will fight, no matter how humanly, to acquire security. Undoubtedly there are those romatic figures who can compose the most lovely operas in conditions of which we shudder to think. But we believe it better in the long run to sacrifice our lovely story book heroes in order to raise the standard of living for those who have not quite the spark of genius and insensitivity to surroundings which an existence of that sort seems to require.

The acquisitive instinct, the profit motive, the desire for power and prestige, as long as they are allowed full rein, will work to stamp out those few civilized and humanizing traits of which man can be proud today.

It seems incredible that some of our keenest minds fail to grasp the necessity of eliminating as nearly as possible all those brutal forces which men employ to better themselves materially. It is only when men have learned to work in harmony and not at the expense of some one else that there will be time for the edifying and cultural pursuits.

As a result we have the youths today growing up to brand as impractical theorists, unpatriotic trouble makers, and red communists those few youths whose imagination and social sensitivity point out for them a way of useful living for all types of mankind. Perhaps some day our children's children will wonder how we could have been so stupid and slow to realize our own potentialities for a productive and happy life.

Need for Conservation Stressed by State Department

In order that the citizens of Florida realize devastation wrought by forest fires, the state forest service erected in the education building an exhibit which was held in connection with the Institute for Women which convened on the campus this past week.

A miniature reproduction of the state parks being developed by the Florida forest service stands in one corner of the room on the ground floor in which the exhibit is housed. The parks are being developed in cooperation with the trustees of the internal improvement fund of the national park service, the United States forest service, and Florida civic organizations.

Literature prepared by the state and national forest services will be presented to those who visit the exhibit. Of special interest to teachers are the units prepared by Mrs. Clara I. Thomas in aiding the teaching of conservation to grade children. The life of the honey bee, the reproduction of the pine tree, the woodpecker, and the pine forest are all treated in the units.

Instruments used in fighting forest fires are also on display. The cutter rake for raking firebreaks or direct attack on fire, and the fire swatter for grass and wood fires are among those most commonly used.

Electric signs realistically portray a typical fire in the Florida brush country, while a forest that has been completely demolished by fire is also pictured.

The exhibit will be open to members of the Institute and students in the summer session.

Nursery School Is In Operation

Course in Management, Offered Conjunctly, Draws Many

One of the thirty-six F. E. R. A. nursery schools is now in operation on the campus, with Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews as supervisor, Miss Mattie Sue Collins and Miss Sallie Cornell teachers, and Mrs. Margaret Biggs nutritionist. A limited number of observers are admitted.

There are twenty children enrolled, between seventeen months and four years of age, all from families now on relief. No attempt is made to teach the children. There is freedom rather than activity. Stories are told if the children wish to hear them, and the children play at whatever pleases them. If a child is doing something wrong, the leader in charge suggests a better way to do. Bad habits, such as thumb sucking, are discouraged. Children learn to play together happily, to take care of toys, to like the right kinds of food, and to form good habits in general. They enjoy the well-equipped playground under the trees.

At a little before twelve the children are called in from the yard, a few at a time, to get ready for dinner. They rest about ten minutes before eating.

The dinner is served at little tables at which the plates are served before the children sit down. The meals are well balanced, varying every day, but keeping up food values. After dinner the children have a rest period and may go to sleep on cots.

A course is being given in nursery school management, and thirty students, employed as teachers in nursery schools throughout the state, are enrolled. A six-hour credit course is being given, the instructors being Dr. Julia Heinlien and Dr. Elizabeth Connor.

journal of student work published in New York.

For the first time, the Distaff this year was given first class rating by the National Scholastic Press Association, an organization which rates and criticizes college publications. The Flambeau, another student publication here, has received the same rating from this organization twice and the All-American award, highest rating given, three times.

The letter to Miss Fulghum, signed by A. R. Allen, associate editor of Harpers' and author of Only Yesterday and other wellknown works, follows:

"We regard it as a compliment that you have sent us four copies of "The Distaff with a request for our criticism. And we are glad to compliment you in return on the general high quality of the magazine, particularly the critical articles. They, we believe, seem more mature and at the same time fresher and more original than the fiction. Possibly that is because the fiction is about the usual grade of good undergraduate performance and you have contrived to raise the critical work above this level.

"The 'back of the book' does not seem quite as strong as it might be. As you say, the editorial pages with the exception of that in the April issue (which strikes a good note) might be more impressive. Moreover, the book reviews are rather slight. Do you really need 'People on these pages?' Aren't your contributors all familiar to your readers?

"The make up of the magazine shows definite improvement although the margins are not yet perfect and the initials are not entirely in harmony with the sans serif titles. But the illustrations—especially Miss Moore's and Miss Whitaker's work—are excellent.

"All in all, you and your staff have much to be proud of.

"Thank you again for letting us enjoy 'The Distaff.'

Very truly yours,

Will It Be Peace?

By Edith Patterson

The world at the present time is at the cross roads. In an age which seeks for peace and paradoxically abrogates the peace treaties it has made, the civilized nations today must choose the course which they will follow in order to pursue their ways into the future, into tomorrow. The choice must come soon, for the crisis which leads to a parting of the ways of opinion is now at hand and must be met.

Germany has denounced in no uncertain light the terms of the Versailles treaty as they concern the armament provisions. When the treaty was signed, nations were quite sincere in the attempts which they made to establish the wings of peace where the monster of war had so long raged. They wanted peace with the deep sincerity of minds too long in the travail of slaughter and the death agony of innumerable humans dying on the field of Mars. Peace they would have, but they forgot understanding. Germany was the bearer of the brunt as became her position of the vanquished, and upon Germany the victors visited the abuse of grasping and selfishness. She was saddled with a debt inconceivable to pay and her armaments were reduced to a mere nothing. Now there is nothing odd in the victor's taking the traditional lion's share of the conquests, but some hope had been held out that perhaps the world was at last getting around to the business of civilization, and this came as a great shock to the supporters of that belief. Of course, Germany was not forced to sign the treaty as that would have been contrary to the tenets of international law, but she could either sign or take the consequences, a poor sort of Hobson's choice. She signed.

And then came prosperity, and on the wings of prosperity, which seem to bring out all that's banal in humankind, rode in a host of armament dealers and munitions makers. The de Wendels with their German von Wendels, Vicar's armory, the du Ponts, Bethlehem steel, and innumerable other began to flourish in spite of the Washington conference of 1922.

By the Washington conference, a ratio was established for naval armaments. It was largely a matter of politics. It began as a general disarmament conference, but ended by being limited to naval armaments only as were all subsequent disarmament conferences. They came to establish a ratio of 5-5-3, 1.75-1.75 for Great Britain, the United States, Japan, France, and Italy respectively. There was some scrapping of capital ships done, but the ships scrapped were known to be quite outmoded, as capital ships were discovered to have been ineffective during the war.

In 1924, there was a rather abortive attempt at Rome to carry on the principles laid down at the Washington conference, but nothing came of it. However, in 1927, there was another attempt to limit naval armaments and the five powers were invited to attend a conference at Geneva. Whether it was due to innauspicious weather or to something that was eaten for breakfast will probably never be known, but France and Italy declined to accept and remained sulking in their respective corners. France did have the largest submarine fleet afloat, and she was a bit skittish about having anything happen to it. The others tried to continue, but parted opinions on the subject of tonnage versus classes. Great Britain wanted a larger number of small cruisers, and the United States wanted a smaller number of large cruisers. As a result, they split up and there was a deadlock. Subsequently a bill was introduced into Congress to increase naval armaments.

And then came that sad pancake often referred to as the London conference. Diplomats still speak of it in muted whispers. France and Italy deigned to appear and the discussion centered about cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. France and Italy insisted on parity (heresy of heresies), and Italy proposed the abolition of capital ships. She had so few it would not have mattered anyhow. The United States, Great Britain, and Italy asked for the abolition of submarines, but France was simply aghast. The plot dwindled to nothingness. France asked for a security pact which the United States refused, and Italy and France put their chairs in the wagon and departed for their native soil.

And all this time Congress had not been idle. There was an increasing number of bills for more appropriations for armaments, and the de Wendels were manufacturing top-hole munitions, and Germany was grinning after her phlegmatic fashion and was silently preparing to raise the ante. Throughout the whole disarmament proceedings of that period could be seen the strong feeling of nationalism which broke out in some nations with the cankers of dictatorships under such worthy idols of the people as Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin. No one nation was willing to forgo any chance of making herself the greatest nation on the earth. Everything went smoothly until a question of nationalism or sovereignty came up, and then the party broke up.

Germany has succeeded fairly well in raising the ante. She no longer belongs to the League of Nations. The covenant of the League was drawn up in good faith and incorporated into the treaty of Versailles as a means for pacific settlement of disputes. It seemed a good idea at the time, even though it was obtained through the fact that to get rid of Mr. Wilson's persistancy and get on to the division of the spoils, the allied nations let him have his way. It didn't meet with the approval of the Senate sixteen years ago, and to this day it hasn't. The Permanent Court of International Justice met with the same fate as concerns the United States. And so three empty chairs yawn up at the rostrum, and to them may be added those of Germany and those of Japan.

The United States of course, doesn't want any "foreign entanglements" which might spoil her position of splendid isolation. That may be looked upon as a sort of quarantine, much as is done for an epidemic of smallpox. Germany and Japan though, have plainly indicated that they prefer to handle their troubles without the aid of outside interference, to keep it in the family so to speak. Italy has almost come to the conclusion that she can best handle her own affairs too. Germany, ethically has acted no worse in her treatment of the treaty than any other of the "high contracting powers". It is simply a case of the pot calling the kettle black without implying any in between shade of gray. All the "civilized nations" have been steadily arming with the inspiration and support of the munitions makers. Germany may have been a shade more frank in her treatment of the subject, but even that is a matter of conjecture.

And so we come to the cross-roads. Will the bane of imperialism and the greed for additional territory burn and pillage and sack its way through the vestiges of civilizations to provide further setbacks for that very civilization? The same day on which Germany denounced the treaty of Versailles, Congress began a bill for increased appropriations anent armaments. Japan is practically armed to the teeth, and every other pseudo-civilized nation is looking askance at the phenomena of frenzied arming. They all sit around the table waiting for someone to call the hand.

At the present we have France arming against the possible Teutonic invasion, Italy sending troops to Ethopian borders, Germany arming steadily and with customary sang-froid. The United States is by no means backwards in the enterprise either; Congress makes appropriations with the regularity of clockwork. Is it at all conceivable that these nations are merely arming for pleasure as a small boy with a box of lead soldiers?

There is a flagrant distrustful attitude of nations toward one another. This had its beginning in the days when the survival of the fittest was the main issue. It continued throughout the era of the rise of states and the subsequent flourishing of Machiavellian diplomacy. It grew and flourished with the exploitation of weaker and more backward areas by the stron- er states, and the rivalry for col- onies and later mandates, and the close races to establish com- mercial monopolies. There is a marked suspicion among the na- tions of the world, and every political move is regarded doubt- fully by all the other nations. Is it then possible to conceive the nations will leave their borders un- armed, their national interest un- protected, their commercial interests without adequate and effec- sanctions?

MODERN ART TO BE SUBJECT OF LECTURE

Miss Emma Keis of the art department will speak on Modern Art Monday night at 7:15, in the Broward club room. An after-dinner coffee will be served in the lounge preceding the program.

Bird Enthusiasts Make Trip Saturday

Miss Deviney to Conduct First of Field Trips of Session

Nature-study excursions, to be conducted by Miss Ezda Deviney of the zoology department, have been planned for the summer school students of the Florida State College for Women by Miss Helenmary Fritsch, director of religious and social activities.

The first trip, for the purpose of studying birds in their native habitats, will be Saturday morning, June 29. The party will leave the college grounds at six o'clock and return in time for breakfast.

There will be at least two more trips for the observation of insects. These outings are open to all students. Those wishing to go are asked to sign up in the office of the activity director in Bryan Hall.

Watermelon Cutting to Be Given Tonight

The first watermelon cutting of the summer will be enjoyed in the college dining hall tonight, following the usual Friday playnite. This diversion, sponsored by Miss Anna Mae Tracy, college dietician, is a customary feature of the summer session to which everyone is invited.

Other features of the session will begin soon with the playing off of ping pong, croquet, and shuffle board tournaments. Those wishing to participate are asked to select their partners as soon as possible.

Further notices will be placed on the bulletin board in the gymnasium.

Caldwell to Lead Vesper Services

Dr. Caldwell, pastor of the Presbyterian church will conduct the Vesper services Sunday evening at 7:10, between the history building and the library.

Dr. Edward Conradi led the services last Sunday.

After the invocation and scripture reading by Dr. Conradi, Mr. Owen Sellers, accompanied by Dean Ella Scoble Opperman, gave a cello number.

In his talk immediately following, Dr. Conradi gave instances in which obstacles much greater than any we have to face have been overcome.

PRINT SETS EXHIBITED

An exhibit of interest to grade teachers is being maintained in the hall of the administration building, opposite the college book store. Printing material for use in the grades is exhibited and will be explained to interested teachers by Miss Carolyn McGarity of Atlanta, Georgia.

Miss McGarity states that a number of teachers have inquired about the exhibition and that information about the material may be had by writing the Classroom Teacher, 104 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, or by writing to Miss McGarity at 1073 Euclid Avenue, N. E., Atlanta.

Dormitory Plans Are Submitted To PWA For Approval

Building West of Gilchrist To Be Completed By September 1936

A project for the erection of a new dormitory west of Gilchrist Hall will be submitted to the Public Works Administration this week with the hope that the approved construction will be begun within four months and be open for the 1936 fall session.

The dormitory will embody most of the recent developments in dormitory construction. Reception rooms, smoking rooms, a room for dancing, and other entertaining facilities will be included in the building which as proposed will house 371 students.

If present plans meet with approval the building will cost $300,000.

Head of Research Laboratory Talks To Zoology Classes

Slides and Photographs Shown of Malarial Parasite

Dr. Mark F. Boyd, authority on the malarial germ and head of the Rockefeller research laboratory located in Tallahassee, whose findings aid malaria control, gave an illustrated lecture to the Zoology 101 classes last Friday morning. The subject of the discourse was "The Plasmodium Malariae," which the students have recently studied.

Small screened cages containing live anopheles mosquitoes, carrying malarial germs, were passed among the students for inspection. Several of the insects were dissected and used in making slides. By the aid of powerful microscopes, set up by Dr. Boyd's assistants, Miss Lucille Logan and Mrs. Lula Hall, the students were able to see the germs in the salivary glands and stomach of the mosquito.

In addition to the slides, many photographs showing different stages in the development of the tiny animals were placed on exhibition.

PLUNGE PERIOD OPEN TO COEDS

The swimming pool in the college gymnasium will be open every afternoon from 4:30 to 5:30 for the benefit of the young men in school, according to an announcement made yesterday.

Plans Being Drawn For New Golf Course

Student Training Ground To Be On Site of Old Dairy

A nine hole golf course is the newest project of Mr. Mendenhall, the college engineer. It is his intention to utilize the present pasture west of the line of Woodward avenue and extending from the new highway over to the arboretum. This includes about two hundred acres; only about sixty acres, however, will be needed for a course of standard length complete in every detail.

The course will not be made extremely difficult for it is primarily to instruct and train the students, but it will be sufficiently sporting to be interesting. Greens will be built of sand because of the difficulty of constructing and maintaining grass greens.

Plans have not yet been drawn up but it may be ready by September 1936. Ultimately the course will be landscaped to be attractive as a park as well as for golf.

Education School to Graduate Ninety-two

Of the 590 students enrolled in the School of Education for the entire year of 1935, ninety-two will graduate this summer. Thirty-seven will receive the bachelor of arts degree and fifty-five the two year certificate. The total number of graduates for both the summer and winter session, receiving the bachelor of arts were 127, while 92 received the two year certificate.

The summer school graduates are composed mainly of teachers. These students have specialized in varied lines, such as high school, elementary, and nursery work. They are representative of many parts of the state, as well as of other states.

Poetry Reading Proves Popular

Dr. William H. Rogers of the English department, read a selection of poetry which he termed "Tidbits" before a large group of students and faculty members in the Augusta Conradi theatre Monday evening. Preceding the program, after dinner coffee was served in the Broward club room.

Dr. Rogers explained that a "tidbit" could be anything from a poem of two lines to the "Ring and the Book" by Browning, which is over two thousand lines.

Selections of poetry were read by Dr. Rogers from Edna St. Vincent Millay, Sara Teasdale, John Masefield, Charles Kingsley, Samuel Coleridge, and other poets. His choice ranged from love lyrics to nursery poems as he interpreted each with his inimitable poetic diction.

Among the most popular selections were those from Sara Teasdale. The meeting closed with the reading of Edna St. Vincent Millay's "Ballad of the Harp Weaver."

Mature Students Given Privileges For This Summer

Minor Rules Dispensed With in Case of the Older Students

Mature students of the summer session met in the administration building June 24, to discuss the privileges allowed to the older women on the campus.

Resident directors made a list of students, not yet complete, whom they felt were mature enough to be allowed to dispense with many of the minor rules on the campus.

These students are asked to observe quiet at all times in cooperation with other students, but they may leave the dormitories without signing up if they sign in the hall book when they go to town in case of calls during their absence. There will be no punishment, however, if they do not do this. Married women may have dates with their husbands without permission from the directors, but they are asked when leaving town to notify their director.

Any complaint against older students will be filed with the director of the hall in which the student lives, and the director will take up the matter directly with the offender.

It is hoped the older students will appreciate these privileges and not abuse them.

Two Buildings to Undergo Repairs

Gilchrist, Administration Building to be Reconditioned

Two buildings on the campus are in need of reconditioning. Gilchrist Hall has been closed this summer for repairs. The left wing of the administration building was condemned last spring.

As yet no definite date has been set aside for the reconstruction to begin on the condemned north wing of the administration building.

Plans recently worked out by R. D. Mendenhall, resident architect, call for the reconstruction of the building in reinforced concrete. The skeleton framework, existing doors and windows, and the terra-cotta trim of the building will be utilized in the reconstruction.

In the reconstruction it is proposed to condition the present attic into a usable floor on which classrooms will be situated. The attic, in its present state, is inaccessable.

The wing, when completed, will house the registrar's offices, the business offices, the book store, and the post office. The classrooms that formerly occupied the wing will be housed there also. Additional space will be converted into more classrooms.

The total cost of the reconstruction will be approximately $100,000. Plans for the financing of the project are now being worked out by college authorities. It is hoped that the wing will be rebuilt with the assistance of F.E.R.A. labor.

Gilchrist is in need of paint, a new plumbing system, and general floor repairs. Due to the lack of funds, this work has not yet been begun. Only a minimum amount of the work may be done immediately because of this difficulty. It is assured, however, that the dormitory will be ready for occupancy in September.

What Has Become of American Initiative?

The frontier still exists in current American history. No longer, however, is it the moulder uf strong American character, of the rugged individualism for which America is famed.

With each development of a frontier into a civilized component uf American culture came a corresponding advance in our thought, our mores, aad our social aad economic system. As the inevitable barriers were surmounted, our people, strengthened through struggle and toil, deepened the traits of initiative and ambition which supposedly characterize our nation.

Yet today, as Alaska, the last American frontier, receives immigrants from the mid-west we see little evidence of the ingenuity and earnest endeavor that characterized our earlier development.

With all transportation expenses paid hy the government, and with the wilderness of the frontier softened by an advance CCC group who prepared the way hy clearing and building, these modern pioneers began their influx last spring, taking advantage of an opportunity such as has not been available for many years. Yet so changed is our character that these people, instead of realizing the value of this new start in life, exercise their ingenuity to a surprising extent in composing hitter letters and telegrams to Washington, complaining that their homes are not completed and that food is too expensive.

What has become of the initiative which was the mortar for the blocks of our nation? Like "peace" and "cooperation" is it now only a term, a lost ideal, this quality so essential to any progress? Coddled by a benign government, have we degenerated into a race incapable of self-support? Quite different from early frontiersmen, shrewd, competent, are these apparently helpless souls. With unlimited resources at their disposal, this transplanted society writes home for assistance when with small concerted effort it could effect a solution to all its needs.

If the attitude of these settlers is any indication of a typical contemporary American at-observe the average dependent titude, and it would seem as we
American youth that it is, then the situation is disturbing. No nation, comprised of individuals who expect life to be cut, well-baked and served on a platter for them without their even lighting a match to the fire, can ever hope to advance in this world where golden platters are no more.

Youth Need Not Be Bored

"It is not the fast tempo of modern life that kills but the boredom, a lack of strong interest and failure to grow that destroy. It is the feeling that nothing is worth while, that makes men ill and unhappy." Aptly did Dr. Harold Willis Dodds, president of Princeton University, thus expose the roots of our social evils when he recently delivered the baccalaureate address before the Princeton graduating class.

This feeling of futility is entirely too prevalent among our college students and the generation which they succeed. Partly is this true because from observation of our divergent systems they have learned that nothing is stable, nothing wholly dependable. Yet more is this attitude the result of a refusal to face life as it is. Lethargic in mind, they prefer not to think of the problems confronting them and are content to wander the too frequently traversed course of least resistance.

Through various forms they seek escape and in the life to which that search leads them, they find little, it is true, that is worth while.

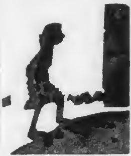
A rather cowardly tendency, this conditioned inability to cope with life. Were it the culmination of a defeatism, a rationalization that convinces them of the futility of a positive philosophy, the situation would not so loudly cry for a change. But this is not the cause. Rather, utter indifference, an attitude which prohibits the recognition of their own potentialities is the basis of this weakness in American character.

In search of happiness, they do not realize with Paul Elmer More that "there is a happiness of the soul which is not the same as the pleasure of fulfilled desires, whether they be for good or ill, a happiness which is not dependent upon the results of this or that choice among our desires, hut upon the very act itself of choice and self-control."

Equipped with qualities of self-control and intellectual integrity, youth whose dominating trait is supposed to be an eager quest for truth, can make of life not a boring sojourn on this spinning planet, hut an existance vital and wholly worth while. There is a joy which springs from the facing and solving of prohlems that too few of our youth or elders have experienced.

Conventions seem to be quite popular at the present time. A convention to discuss whether anything is accomplished at conventions is now in order.

STRUGGLE
By JANILEE RHYNE



There are lots of hills around here. Maybe you've come across one or two of 'em. They're practically everywhere. It seems that we can't avoid going up them at some time or other

Most of you have to go up one of 'em at 8.00 every morning. You come out of the dorm. You gaze wistfully up the hill. At the top of the mountain stands the Ad building. You know you must get there some way, you look around for a taxi, or a pair of roller skates—not spying either, you face east, and with a brave smile, start up the hill You remember what the hygiene prof told you about holding up your shoulders, so you walk the first few yards exemplifying the perfect posture for a modern lady, and lo, 'n' behold suddenly your steam is all gone.

Not to be outdone, you try again. With a tilt of the torso from the waist, you thrust the old head forward, crook the elbows into an awkward position, and swing up the hill much in the manner of an elephant. But you soon find such a jolting gait equally tiring.

There's one final possibility. Perhaps this method may last you until you've covered those remaining few miles. Leaning forward at a decided diagonal, and using the feet and ankles only as a sort of anchor, you practically fall up the hill for the remaining distance. Then with a great effort and a final slouch manage to drag around the corner and into the door, safe at last in the darkness within!

Book Reviews
By STANMORE CAWTHON

GOOD-BYE, MR. CHIPS

Are you tired of reading about the depression and the many ways that it can be cured? Do you feel that to attempt any serious reading in this weather is to court insanity? If so, I suggest that you read "Good-bye, Mr. Chips" by James Hilton. This book was apparently designed for summer school students and any others who think they are weary of intense mental activity. It requires no concentration whatever, and it is so short that you finish it almost immediately after you begin.

The book has been reviewed about 978 times before, and so far as I know all of its reviewers liked it. This in itself is something of a record. The writer proved no exception to the rule, so this review is favorable just like all the rest.

However, it is the humble opinion of this 979th reviewer that the first 978 grossly overrated Mr. Hilton's delightful little story, just as so many of the sporting gentry overrated Maxie Baer. The book was never intended to be taken seriously, any more than Maxie was. As a character study, it is a superficial effort at best. As a description of English atmosphere it is only a very little better. But as a relaxer and a tonic for those "coffee nerves that we read about, it is splendid. Read "Good-bye, Mr. Chips" for amusement, and you will be well repaid; read it for intel-

SENSE AND NON-SENSE
By NIT AND WIT

Heavenly daze—what a week. It has really been too hot to snoop but here's our contribution.

We heard someone remark about how good the food is in the dining room this summer. The faculty evidently things so. Dr. and Mrs. Diffenbaugh and the two little "Diffies" are regular boarders, also Dr. Rogers and his pipe. (The Rogers family are sojourning at the beach.)

It would be advisable for someone to donate a metronome to the dining room in order to liven up the blessing a little more. It's bad enough to stand up for ten minutes without having to stand five minutes more to hear that funeral dirge. It seems to us that some of these do-re-me nuisances could put what they are trying to learn to good avail by "pitching" more accurately and with better will.

And this is the season for baseball, the great American sport. The St. Louis Cardinals brag of their "Dizzy" Dean. Why should we feel left out? We have three or four on our own campus. And speaking of pitchers, have you seen the swell new silver ones in the dining room?

And did you hear of the coed who when asked if he wanted hot tea replied, "Sure, I mean to try all these drinks while I'm up here."

It has been rumored about campus that there are some A. D.Pi's living in their mansion on Jefferson ——aw Jefferson street, you nit wit. Ze great soothsayer and pacifists (in words only) is holding down the fort at the Tri Delta house. When asked if she ever gets lonesome she retorted tartly, "No, I'm always alone, even in a crowd."

From all reports the poetry hour was a success. After one victim had been crushed by the blithering herd it was suggested that the informal gathering be held in the Little Theatre. How these "school marms" do lurve poetry or—well, poetry.

Since our Beth Lancaster won a national tennis championship her public is certainly giving the ping-pong tables fits. We can all be champions in our own little world. (Quotation from the Rubiayat or something or other.)

We wonder what a certain gym teacher thinks of the boys in her folk dancing class We know what the other members of the class think!

From the looks of things some "blondes" on this campus don't know that peroxide went out with prohibition—and that, my children, is talking from the shoulder.

As for nuisances—have you any little "softsoapers" in your classes? you know the "Bear's Paw" who sits on the front row and spends the class's time and patience making inane remarks in an effort to rate an "A". The tragedy is that they usually get them which goes to prove you can fool some of the people some of the time.

Incidently, it must be rather humid weather when the profs start throwing erasers at students in order to keep them awake. Reflection on student or prof?

And so sour-grapishly we bid you goodbye with this warning, "If you don't watch out the supersnoopers will git you and we mean we're bitter.

Miss Dorothy Smith and Miss Kaye Sands were visitors on the campus this week.

Education Society Has First Meeting

Kappa Delta Pi, education honor society, held its first meeting in the education conference room Wednesday week, when officers for the winter school were elected to serve for the summer session with the exception of the vice-president Miss Nita Pyburn, who is away for the summer.

The officers are Mrs. Dora Skipper, president; Pat Priest, a member of Upsilon chapter at Gainesville, vice-president; Lillian Cross, treasurer; Margaret Pfluge, secretary; Helen Smith, historian and publicity chairman.

At the first meeting, plans were made for the banquet given at the Floridan Hotel June 19, in honor of Dr. William C. Bagley, the founder of the society, who lectured here recently. On the banquet program were Dr Edward N. Conradi who gave the welcoming address; Mrs. Paul T. Finner, counsellor of the chapter; Dean N. M. Salley, who was master of ceremonies; Dr. Bagley, who is counsellor of the Laureate chapter of Kappa Delta Pi; and Miss Mary Reeder who played a harp solo.

The regular weekly business meeting was held last Monday evening at the Demonstration School library, where a program of round table discussion of Dr. Bagley's lectures was planned. Mr. Robert Moon, summer program chairman, outlined the programs for the remaining meetings.

NOTICE TO TEACHERS

All students wishing extension of certificates are asked to see the bulletin boards in the lower floor of the demonstration building and by Dean Salley's office, and to be sure that their names have not been omitted from the lists there.

Communities Now Only Frontiers Says Sociologist

Mims Emphasizes Importance of Realization of Responsibility

"There are no more frontiers to conquer," said Dr Mary Mims Louisiana extension sociologist who lectured recently before the Woman's Club Institute held at Florida State College

"They have come in to us so that we now build in our own communities because they are our frontiers.

"The program of work of this new epic is so different that we find we can well use the term 'pioneers' in describing the present community builders." she continued "The four fundamentals of social life from which we make a program are economic, health, civic, and recreation". And the spiritual runs through them all

"The pioneer of today must build the soil rather than hunt for fresh soil; he must be a cooperator rather than a competitor in building and shipping standard products, he must reforest rather than slaughter forests; he must prevent disease rather than cure it; and he must realize a democracy to sustain rather than seek to establish one.

"We must grow citizenship." Dr. Mims emphasized. "Impressions of citizenship begin with the baby at home, including honor, truth, tolerance, cooperation and righteousness. When we grow twenty-one years of the right kind of citizenship, political rights will not be in dangerous hands. Boys and girls need an outlet. If they are kept busy constructing, they will not find time for destructing; they will not be kidnapers. Crime is not a parasite, but grows out of a social order whether that be home or community

"Beauty," said Dr. Mims, "is most essential in building community life. Men, women, and children must all be taught to assume a share of the responsibility. It is important for a child to fall heir to a community of high standards for it is as essential to his welfare as his heritage of blood. After all, the spirit of man will change the conditions in the community. Therefore it is necessary for him to be in tune with the Infinite.'

Dr. Mims closed her talk by declaring that the nation can help but it can not build a community. Communities are built by local groups, acting individually And the nation is a product of community life

Daniels to Lead Vesper Services

Rev. J. H. Daniels, pastor of the Methodist church, will conduct the Vesper services next Sunday evening at 7:15 on the lawn between the history building and the library.

Dr. Caldwell, pastor of the Presbyterian church, conducted Vesper services Sunday evening at the Augusta Conradi little theater.

After the invocation and scripture reading by Dr. Caldwell, a solo was given by Virginia Peace Johnston, accompanied by Mrs. E. P. Turner.

Following this musical feature, Dr. Caldwell, using as his subject "Prune Whip", gave a talk in which he challenged all people, but particularly the teachers, to give youth something real and substantial for their spiritual diet.

PRACTICAL ART TO BE SUBJECT OF DISCUSSION

"Art in Everyday Things" will be the subject of a talk which Miss Henrietta R. Slyyer, of the home economics department, will give Monday night at 7:15, following an after-dinner coffee in Broward club room

Dean Ella Scoble Opperman will play a number of southern airs appropriate to the occasion.

After the announcements community singing was led by Mrs. Catherine Hodges Murphree.

Spryest Spirit In Spiritdom Strikes Students

By UNA UMPHREY

People often speak in glowing terms about the spirit of liberty, the spirit of education, and the reform spirit. The Christmas Spirit causes no end of conversation and the spirits of ammonia causes the end of something, but when it comes to the real old honest to goodness, right-there-everytime-ready-for-anything spirit, that which takes possession of ninety-nine out of every 100 persons the day before the Fourth of July is undoubtedly the spryest spirit in spiritdom.

It takes an unusual spirit to limber up the sparkle in weary study-dimmed eyes and put the old let's-make-whoopee note in cranky voices. Just mention July Fourth and see a countenance which a moment before had worn a far away and disillusioned look suddenly blossom forth and become a thing of beauty or animation, at any rate.

Just ask, casually of course, someone who looks like the ghost of summer before last this meaty question, "What are you going to do on the Fourth?" If you are good at chiseling you might get in a word during the next fifteen minutes, but if you aren't you can at least prove to that doubting roommate that you are a good listener.

Many apparently grave and sedate looking students at F. S. C. W. this summer went to Carrabelle, Wakulla Springs, St. Marks, or other points south for the holiday. Do you suppose they wore that look on the Fourth? They did indeed not! No one who has felt the touch of the old spirit we are talking about can be, look, or act, or think anyway but hilariously, happily, and uproariously.

Well, anyway, tests come soon—too soon and it's a good thing I suppose that the good old feeling the Fourth inspires doesn't last long. It would be just too much to contend with and go to summer school at the same time. But O, isn't it great that mid-summer has one holiday!

AN EDUCATIONAL FALLACY

"Human nature cannot be changed." How often that phrase is utilized to excuse deficiencies in our social and moral systems. When it is used as a premise on which our educational system is to be based, as it was by one of America's foremost educators, Dr. W. C. Bagley, who recently lectured on this campus, then it must be challenged.

What, first, is human nature? It is not a quality or qualities inherent in the individual. human nature becomes daily sult of conditioning, and individuals are conditioned from the moment they enter this world.

Profoundly influential is the conditioning they receive in the schools. Here are moulded their social attitudes, their mental attitudes, their attitudes toward life in general. These will be progressive or negative according to the methods of training employed in the class rooms.

If those methods be based on the fallacious assumption that human nature cannot be changed, the child, taught the traditionalized subjects advocated by visionless educators, can only develop into an unthinking, robotized individual.

If it is accepted that human nature is incapable of change, what reason is there for education? What a futile, hopeless outlook would education present were this negative attitude prevalent among all our educators.

Too long has our system remained static because of this false postulate. Motivated by this principle, our schools have offered courses dead, traditionalized, uninspiring. Needing to be jolted from their acquired inertia, students are instead, from kindergarten through most colleges, led routinely through old dogmas which far from changing their natures toward a progressive attitude of mind and spirit, crystallize their mental patterns. Instead of spurring the naturally mentally active child to thought, education based on conservative doctrines such as this create in the student not critical, sceptical attitudes, the requisites of advancement, but strengthen the tendency to accept unquestioningly whatever tenets may be offered them.

That human nature can and does change has been repeatedly proved by psychologists. Even intelligence, which the majority of psychologists declare an unchangeable inherited set-up, has been demonstrated capable of improvement through education. Certainly if intelligence can be increased, attitudes, the components of human nature which progress in direct ratio to intelligence, can be changed.

The changing of attitudes of human nature becomes daily more essential as a motive force for education. Were it true that human nature cannot change, the prospect of an advancing civilization would be an ephemereal one. Only through change does progress come. The sooner educators realize this, the sooner will we have an alert teaching profession and a progressive citizenry.

THE NEED FOR PARENTAL COOPERATION

The coming to Florida State campus of a parent-teacher institute is a noteworthy indication that parents are increasingly becoming aware of their responsibilities toward cooperation with teachers in the training of the American child for life and citizenship.

Too often do parents shirk this responsibility, leaving the vital prohblem of educating the child almost entirely to the teacher. And if the child does not develop into a socially-minded, well-balanced individual, the parents all too blithely place the blame on the educational system.

That our system of education is in imperious need of improvement, the educational world knows full well. Teachers are themselves too frequently uneducated in the true meaning of the word. Ill-equipped for life themselves, they are unsuited to directing others toward an integrated life. With our rising standard of education, however, this weakness in our system is gradually being eradicated.

Yet were the system of education perfect, if home cooperation is lacking, the value of classroom guidance is rendered relatively negligible, for but a few hours of the child's day are spent there. The remainder of the day he is under the environmental influence of the home and its associations. If these be totally at odds with school training, all the painstaking direction of the competent teacher is undermined.

Parents and teachers must work together in providing situations that will strengthen the character of the developing child, that will lead him to constructive effort and active thinking, for the child despite the opinions of certain conservative educators to the contrary, is ever an individual capable of thought.

It is to be hoped that through this conference, ideas will be organized and plans formulated for constructive and integrated programs of cooperative and intelligent home and school guidance.

No More Glamour
By JANILEE RHYNE

As I was ambling around the campus t'other day, mine eyes beheld a mos' peculiar thing. Like kings of old who stood upon their high thrones and surveyed their kingdoms, our campus janitors were gathered upon the front porch of the Ad building. They seemed to be engaged in some secret rite the meaning of which was known only to themselves. I'm telling you they made a grand, dramatic scene. The porch made a perfect stage, the facade of the Ad building served beautifully as a backdrop, and the palm trees furnished a touch of green to make the scenery set-up complete. I sat on the edge of the fountain pool and behaved like the perfect audience—and what a pantomime I saw!

I imagined that the janitors were representing some dance form, perhaps one that our ancestors knew in the age old jungles of Africa—though their costumes, I must admit, were a little different from those that their various grand-pappies might have worn in days of yore.

The dance began this way: first the company assembled in the center of the stage much in the manner of a football huddle; then the actual performance began. Big Dan (by virtue of the fact that he is head janitor no doubt) held to the middle of the stage, and the others with graceful rhythm moved out in several directions. One went toward the north and one toward the south, one toward the east and the west. But suddenly the outward movement ceased. Big Dan made a motion with his hands—Billy Washington, Donnie Dan, and Boodder, all of them, came rushing back to the center. Then the rhythm changed again abruptly. The pack of them rushed into the dark doorway of the building. I waited in breathless expectancy. When they emerged would they bring a victim to be sacrificed on the altar or gold and silver to be offered? They came out. They were carrying bookcases, filing cases, and tables—rats, says I in utter disgust, is there no glamour left in the world? They were just moving somebody's office from somewhere to somewhere else.

With a sigh I got up and ambled on about my business.

Book Reviews
By STANMORE CAWTHON

If you are not like most summer school students and feel fresh and strong, and if you want something that will improve your mind, try "The Robber Barons", by Matthew Josephson. In spite of the fact that the book is of the "beneficial" type, there is a strong possibility that you will enjoy it.

It is a well written account of the activities and the economic philosophy of our great American capitalists during the forty years that followed the beginning of the Civil War. The Morgans, the Rockefellers, the Vanderbilts, Jay Cooke, Jay Gould, Andrew Carnegie, Jim Fiske—they are all here. Their cunning, their greed, and their ruthlessness are shown in clear, cold portraits that are in no way prejudiced against them either individually or collectively.

Read the book by all means. I guarantee that you will learn some history in a perfectly painless manner. Furthermore, the descriptions of the methods that some of these boys used may give you some ideas as to how you can get rich. The only trouble is that they have a lot of laws against such things in this slightly more enlightened age.

SENSE AND NON-SENSE

Presbyterians Give Pickaninny Party

A pickaninny party given by the Presbyterian students attending Florida State College for Women was a social feature of Tuesday evening.

Assembling at 8.00 on the church lawn the group enjoyed an evening of games and entertainment, which were planned according to the pickaninny motif.

Features of the entertainment were negro folk songs and spirituals sung by a quintet composed of Mildred Emmelhainez, Jane Tonebaugh, Claire Redfield, Charlotte Dewey, and Carolyn Battie, musical numbers and songs by Nedra McNamara with guitar accompaniment; and a reading by Doris Terrell.

A watermelon cutting later in the evening refreshed the group and brought the event to a close.

Esther Holek, acting student secretary of the Presbyterian group, planned and made arrangements for the party. She was assisted by Monica Wiley and Mary Miller.

SECOND FIELD TRIP TOMORROW

The bird study last Saturday morning was made along the bicycle road, west of the college for about a half-mile. Among the many birds seen, were grackles, mocking birds, a red winged blackbird, brown thrashers, cardinals, towhees, ground doves, and an orchard oriole. A blue heron was seen in an old field on the way out and on the way back. Because most birds feed early in the morning, a more than ordinary number of them was seen. Miss Deviney called attention to the calls of the birds and made comments on nesting and other habits.

WILL IT BE PEACE?

This leads us to the crossroads Will the great community of nations retrogress to back-fence bickering which leads to an exchange of blows or will they seek to settle disputes by means of a pacific manner? If they choose the latter, and it is hard to imagine any people preferring the rigors of war to the well oiled machinery of peace, it must come via education. We must not, as a moral obligation indoctrinate our nationals with "America right or wrong" or "Heil Hitler" or other nationalistic propaganda. The good to be demonstrated is that of a community of nations federated, and with definite sanctions governing such a federation, and with a strong central governing unit. The cause of ineffectiveness in the League is the fact that it has no universal means of enforcing its conventions. Some of us see as a future issue an international federation of states, closely knit under a strong central executing force, having a judicial body with the strength and capacity of carrying out its decisions, and with a legislative body, wise in its law-making and freed from the fetters of dealing with fifty seven varieties of sovereignty and nationalism.

Petty naval conferences will be of no value when at the same time as the delegates to a peace conference are arguing across the table, the tools of industry are humming in the dockyards and the munitions factories. Naval limitations will serve to no end when land and air armaments are increasing almost perceptibly. To bring up the question of France—do armaments include only the tons of metal made up into the tools of war (the effective armaments) or do they include natural resources and the population with the capacity or reasoning, inventing, and rationalizing? It is merely a matter of definition, but a point upon which most armament conferences go astray.

And it is at this point that the world must choose her course into tomorrow. Will it choose the path that Mars has trod or will it educate for an all time record of amicable relations?

Juvenile Delinquency Problems Outlined by Probation Officer

Hungry people need more than food, according to Mrs. Agnes B. Colee, probation officer of Volusia County, who is attending the college institute of social case work. Hungry children, too, she pointed out, can occupy only a small part of their day in eating. The hours between meals are the ones most important in building the characters of boys and girls, and probation officers must care for these hours in cooperation with the social welfare boards. Dependent, as well as delinquent children, who are reported or who come before the juvenile court are the human materials with which Mrs. Colee has worked for the past four years. Most of her work has been done outside of the courtroom, and for the past year she has done intensive work in the schools in keeping down the gangs and social cliques which are so demoralizing to the individuals which compose them.

"Each case is different, and must be dealt with in an entirely new way," Mrs. Colee stated. "The first thing to do is to win the child's confidence; we work with some of them for a long time before we can accomplish this. Parents often make things more difficult for us by threatening the children with the probation officer, or the policeman, and thus they are terrified when we arrive. Most of the cases concern petty thievery and small offenses, although 'repeaters' sometimes give us serious trouble."

It is seldom that children are taken from their homes, unless it is impossible to leave them there, but often parents are put on probation together with their children. During the past year Volusia County has not sent a single boy to the Marianna Industrial School, while only four years ago thirteen were taken there. Most of this improvement has been due to the cooperation of socially minded people Mrs. Colee believes.

During the past year the case load has increased considerably, due perhaps to the strained financial conditions which force people to move into smaller houses and thus drive the children into the streets for their recreation. To offset this, the social workers are providing recreational facilities, vocational training schools, and the Y. M. C. A and Sunday schools. Musically inclined boys are given training and instruments through the cooperation of civic clubs and organizations, and the department has a large band of instruments for this purpose.

Social workers have found it more difficult to arouse interest in girls than in boys. There are not many of these cases, however, and whenever possible, adjustments in the homes are made. If this is utterly impossible the girls are sent to the school at Ocala, and, just as with the boys, a program of rehabilitation within the home is set up.

In the opinion of Mrs. Colee, interest in humanity is the primary requisite for the probation officer; he must also be a person of many sides, or personalities, and must be able to adjust these personalities to fit each case. In general, the requirements for this type of work are the same as those for a good social case worker, including the capacity for hard work and balanced judgment, for each method of dealing with a case determines the future of that individual.

Sororities Pledge Two Hundred and Twenty

These Things I Know

By BARBARA GARFUNKEL

I have lived twenty years, and behold, I know three things. I was born once. I am living now. Some day I shall die.

I am not concerned with my genesis into and my exodus out of this orb. Biology satisfies my problems as to my embryonic origin and my unromantic expiration. The first and last chapters of my life are easily dispensed with. I was born. I shall die.

Would that I could find the answer to the years that intervene between these two events. But just a minute. Don't misunderstand me. That statement was not written as a lugubrious complaint from a world-weary adolescent. Quite the contrary. I think this business of living is jolly. It is not nearly so complicated as we pretend, and that which is called a "big, blooming, buzzing confusion" is not that at all.

Therefore, what I intended to say is not, "Would that I could find the answer to life", but "Would that the answer I have found to life prove to be a legitimate one." You understand my position of course, my devious manner of leading up to what I want to say? I am of a befaddled generation. Intellectual, oh, my, yes. They know about everything, but cognizant of all, they insist that there is no answer to anything. For me to dare to offer a pattern for life is apostasy.

But perhaps I shall be forgiven if I beseech you not to look upon what I offer as a pattern for lives. It is not that by any means. I have found the answer to one life, my life. And for me, therefore, life begins at twenty, something like this.

I was about to aver that I did not have a philosophy of life, because to me, life is a concatenation of readjustments, but even as I write I know that the very cause I quote as the reason for the lack of a philosophy, is my philosophy. Life is just this, a series of readjustments.

What I do today, I shall eschew tomorrow. Eternal verities? There are none. As for beliefs, I am inclined to believe with Randall that "Beliefs are the imperfect and constantly changing symbols of the truth that forever eludes our grasp, while faith is the inner power by which forever pursue more adequate beliefs."

Well, then, since life is a series of adjustments, what is the best way to live such a life? The answer I give is the answer as I have found it.

To begin with, I don't take myself too seriously. My little world was not always here. In fact the earth was born out of the sun something like two thousand millions of years ago. And even now it is one of the minor planets, fourteen hundred of which could be serried inside Jupiter with room to spare. My own existence is mere accident.

Why this plaintive dirge? Because such thoughts are the prelude to impersonal living, and this is the answer to a life that demands constant readjusting. How an impersonal life is the best buffer against changing events is clear enough.

First, let us examine what there is in life to which I must continuously readjust mystelf. Well, there is Time. There is, shall we say, Fate? There is man-made Convention. To these three forces I must adapt my life. That all three of them are greater than I am, I immediately acquiesce. But though I cannot conquer them at least I can be loosed from them, for once admitting their reality, I am free to maintain an impersonal attitude toward them. Mentally I emancipate myself from exacting Time, coquettish Fate, and inane Convention. And life becomes to me at once, a luxurious daily affair.

For instance, I look at these two henchmen, Time and Fate. It is true that often I am their dupe. I am obsequious to their whims. But it is also true that though they bind my acts, I rise above them in my thoughts. I admit that they may interfere with my way of living but never with my attitude toward living. If I fail because of either today, I have the satisfaction of knowing that by the very fact that I even attempted something in the face of my "enemies", I rose above them. And there is always a tomorrow to come.

Concerning Convention, of course there are things to be comforted to. Of course there are things you are expected to do. And living an impersonal life I do them.

Ah, but what of my personal integrity, my freedom of cerebration, you ask? The answer lies in the fact that, viewing life impersonally, I am not harassed by mental disappointments. I spend my life living, not thinking how to live. I believe with Walter Pater that, "With the sense of the splendor of our experience and its awful brevity, gathering all we are into one desperate effort to see and touch, we shall hardly have time to make theories about the things we see and touch."

I submit to convention, yes, for even in such submitting I am experiencing life. I do not stop to say, "Well, here, I can't violate my own integrity like this." I submit readily to that which is standardized by society in order that I may be free and familiar enough with that society to suggest my modest improvements to it.

I see life close-up, but with a distant point of view. I do what is expected of people today in order that I may have time to work for what I would have expected of people of tomorrow. Thus, even in comformity there is freedom.

You have more questions? I have described the impersonal life. Doesn't all this seem rather pagan? I see. Somewhere in my life you would have me reserve a corner for a God. I have. My God is an impersonal God. My God is not absolute. He is a God who continually readjusts himself to life even as I, in the hope that together some day we might ascertain the final readjustment.

I end even as I began. Life is a series of readjustments. The best buffer against a world that demands continuous right about faces to its desires is the impersonal life.

Recall that at the beginning of this dissertation I said "Would that the answer I have found to life prove to be a legitimate one." For I do not contend that this is the answer to every man's life.

I merely claim, these three things I know. I was born. I shall die. And I think I know how to live in between these two events. And so life begins for me at twenty, and I like it.

TERMITES INVADE REC

Remodeling work on rec hall has just been finished due to a termite invasion. The work was undertaken a week ago last Thursday when a door jam was found to be in a weakened condition. Two new partitions had to be put in. Over forty million termites have been killed, according to Mr C. C. Allegood, the shop foreman.

If There's Anything I Can Do—?

By MAE HIMES

"Oh, I won't be able to help you this week with the tickets. Awfully sorry, but I'll be out of town until Thursday. Friday—I would like to, but I'll be busy with the—dance. If there's anything else I can do, just let me know."

I hung up the receiver and sat back exhaustedly to meditate on those last words, "If there's anything else I can do, just let me know", already too familiar to my over-irritated eardrums. I think I can say without hesitation that that sentence is the most meaningless although the most useful in the English language. Furthermore, I feel sure that this sentiment is shared by anyone who has ever had the unfortunate experience of attempting to organize and put over ticket sales for the benefit of some worthy civic organization.

My first introduction to that sentence occurred several years ago when, in a burst of civic pride, I joined an organization dedicated to raising the cultural level of the community through play production. I attended my first meeting a bare two weeks before a major production. After several welcoming speeches to new members mixed with pep talks designed to promote co-operation, the business manager broached the subject of selling tickets. Though enthusiasm dimmed and silence fell, the business manager went valiantly on to explain a new competitive scheme involving two captains, teams, and a banquet to reward the victors. Then he waited for volunteers. Much to my surprise everyone looked uneasy and cast expectant eyes at his neighbor. I began to feel a bit uncomfortable and looking around noticed all eyes pinned on me. Trying hard to look proud, my friend whispered that I was appointed to the rather doubtful honor of team captain. Rather pleased, however, at the attention I had attracted at my first meeting, I picked my team and launched them on what I vainly thought was the road to success.

Taking my responsibility just as seriously as any transatlantic flier trying to break the world's record, I started on what I termed a telephone campaign to call all those whom I could in regard to new meetings at new times. It was then I built up a firm conviction that that sentence "If there's anything else I can do, just let me know", is a great salve to the human conscience.

After I had delivered the tickets by means of personal calls on the various individuals on my team, I determined to keep a neat record of all tickets given out, money received, and so fourth, to turn in at the end of the campaign. To my chagrin this record never materialized. The tickets were divided into three groups member, adult, and children. These were traded about at every opportunity by the different members, so that any complete check became impossible. To complicate matters the more, no one could remember either how many tickets had been given to others nor with whom they had been traded, thus making a veritable merry-go-round of my records. I pass over these difficulties casually, however, for they are as nothing when compared to the major calamity of soliciting advertisements which, it seemed, was an integral part of my job. When I paid my tenth visit to the business manager, he gave me a rather sinister smile and said:

"By the way, here are a few ads we were going to divide up between the two teams. Unfortunately, the other captain is busy. If you sell all the ads, you'll get a complimentary ticket."

I tried to look grateful and failed completely. But I had not spent the last few days in vain. So I said enthusiastically:

"Why I would love to, but I'm leaving town for a few days next week and won't have time. If there's anything else I can do—"

"If it's next week you're leaving, you'll have plenty of time. These ads have to be in tonight."

I was right—it was a sinister smile! There were eight ads to be gotten in a day's time. With a desperate effort to keep calm in emergency, I gathered up the program, price list, and list of probable customers, called a friend and started out. All that afternoon we walked and walked and walked, facing all the disappointments that solicitors for aid to amateur dramatics usually receive. In several of the stores they told us point blank they weren't interested; in others the managers themselves came to tell us the managers were out of town for the week-end. This continued until we were able to read the man's answer on his face before he gave it. Those who did take ads assured us it was not that anyone would read the ad but simply a matter of civic reciprocity. By four-thirty that afternoon both our feet and dispositions were worn out and only five ads. We became so desperate that we changed our method of attack from active persuasion and cajoling to just telling and sitting. We got two promises this way. Back to the business manager we went with the results of our day's labor. He, kind soul, referred us to a place about two miles from the city, finishing his speech with "If there's anything else I can do to help you—".

It was too much. It was the last straw. I didn't scream. Instead I walked quietly out of the store. But the next week I left town, left the tickets in the hands of others, and return[illegible] time to see the play. Pragmatic Doctrine of Beauty False Says Sivyer in Talk

"It is said that human discontent today is caused not because life is hard, but because it is not beautiful," said Miss Henrietta Sivyer, instructor of home economics, in a lecture on art in everyday things, following an after dinner coffee served in Broward club-rooms Monday evening.

"There are several different definitions of beauty," continued Miss Sivyer, "the oldest being that everything good is beautiful, based on the fact that in early times cathedrals were considered the highest type of beauty. A more recent definition of beauty is that it is that which is harmonious to the senses. This depends, however, on the environment of the person concerned. Still another definition today is that "The chief function of contemporary education is the development of and achievement of personality and character," declared Dr. Ralph L. Eyman, professor of education, at the open forum discussion held Wednesday evening in the Augusta Conradi theatre on Contemporary Education.

"To increase the growth of the student rather than to convert him into a storehouse of facts is the aim of contemporary education," Dr. Eyman asserted. "These contemporary trends have come to us from other countries that have been subjected to the same evolutionary process through which America is going at the present. The new problem confronting education is the breaking down of old traditions and the setting up of new practices. The

The Roosevelt Taxing Program

By MISS SADIE YOUNG, Assistant Professor of Economics

The message of President Roosevelt to Congress on June 19 regarding various taxation and distribution of wealth proposals has been a center of great interest and discussion.

To Congress it has served as a challenge to the House Committee on Ways and Means, and to the Senate Committee on Finance. It necessitates consideration of the plans proposed as a part of the taxation schemes now being drafted. The Committee on Ways and Means has made it the subject of study and discussion, and most recent newspaper reports seem to indicate that the Committee will make it a part of its report. The Senate members have been busy suggesting possible modifications which they shall make when the measure reaches them. The chief immediate interest of the members of the Committees centers on the questions as to whether the proposals will yield a sufficient amount of revenue, and whether proposals with such far-reaching consequences should be seriously considered by a Congress which had hoped soon to finish its labors.

Each of the above questions has brought forth approval, disapproval and many modifications. Many schedules of possible rates have been suggested with the idea of increasing the amount of revenue to be secured. There has been a persistent group in Congress that has seen for the President's philosophy regarding the happiness and security of the common man, no other answer than a redistribution of the wealth and income of the nation. They are filled with joy at the challenge which they see in this message. Those who feel that the program is lacking in power to realize that objective have many modifications to suggest. Then there are the followers of the old laissez-faire economic philosophy who see it only as a force to bring greater economic disaster.

The general public probably has the keenest interest in such questions as whether it will affect the tax bills of particular individuals, and therefore their businesses, whether it will aid in debt reducing for the government, and just what it will mean in the long run to the wealth producing and capital accumulating structure of the country. The latter question is discussed in an article by S. J. Woolf entitled Ford Answers Wealth Sharers, in the New York Times Magazine for July 7, 1935.

The President's proposal carries major points. The first would levy additional taxes on large inheritances and gifts, providing no special rates excepting to suggest a special tax on all inheritances above 10 million dollars in addition to the present scheme, and to make the gift tax heavy enough to provide against evasion of the estate tax. The second proposal would decrease the rate of the graduated tax on large personal incomes. The graduated feature in the present law stops at one million dollar incomes. The new law would make it necessary for the man with a five million dollar income to pay a higher rate than the man with a one million dollar income. The third point would use a graduated tax for corporate incomes also. The President suggested a rate beginning at 10¾% for smaller corporations and ranging to 16¾% as a maximum rate. The present law provides for a flat

A CRISIS IN CHARACTER

It has been rumored, even headlined, that there is at present in the United States a movement unique in its history, a youth movement, a definite attempt by organized youth to comprehend and solve its problems. Unlike the movements in European countries today, ours is not revolutionary, not impelled by nationalistic enthusiasms, but is supposedly an earnest search for a constructive answer to youth's problems of social, educational, and economic security.

Indicative of this trend have been conventions of such organizations as the National Youth Congress, the Young People's Socialist League, and the National Student Federation of America Most progressive has been perhaps the last mentioned of these organizations, which has worked with government sponsors of President Roosevelt's recent plan for aiding American youth.

The President is right in believing that this investment of public money will prove of utmost national value. Accurate also is Commissioner John P. Studebaker, supervisor of the project, in his statement that "From this point on in our national development, the educational system must accept the definite responsibility of guiding the youth of the country to successful integration into the life and work of the nation."

Yet even more important is the fact that youth itself must realize its own responsibility. The government is willing and eager to help. Parents do their best to equip youth for life Yet, as a majority, youth are too prone to take like for granted, to be indifferent to life and to its responsibilities.

In campus affairs, not to mention those of national concern, they evidence disheartening interest. They drift. Their main ambition seems to be to "get by" with as little effort as possible. Freshman, arriving in college with at least a faint desire to learn are admonished by the older students to get as much fun out of college as possible, to join numerous organizations. They are advised by these wise ones as to what professors are "hard," what courses, "crip." The tendency of human nature to imitate is too strong for these impressionable students long to resist such influence. Unthinking slaves to the desire to be "like everyone else," they soon groove into an apathetic intellectual decline and join the rest in a mad escapist whirl.

With limitless possibilities for moulding and strenghtening character, nationally organized as they are, our sororities and fraternities are content to emphasize only social conformity, yearly turning out stamped groups, mentally and mannerly patterned. Certainly, our educational and cultural honoraries should be imbued with some sense of responsibility.

Yet such is not the case. While faculty members bewail the state of student lassitude, these self-centered organizations thoughtlessly continue their purposeless paths, blithely heedless of the decline of student character.

This crisis in American character students must face. Critical of their elders whom they observe and condemn as selfish and grasping, they do not see that they are cutting for themselves similar patterns.

It has been said that "American youth have come to the conclusion that their generation lacks the traditional heritage of American youth — confidence and opportunity." It is not that America has lost these qualities. Youth has thrown them into the discard. Youth, the leaders of our immediate future, the builders of future generations, must awaken to their loss of standards, of principles, must develop their potentialities of self-reliance and initiative.

Youth movements as an indication of national interest are excellent, but as beggars for more support, they reveal perilous implications of a character disintegration.

Wherein lies the fault is difficult to ascertain save that it is somewhere in the educational system Perhaps it is in the elementary schools where habits of thought are set. Or perhaps it has its origin in the college system which grinds out teachers of future youth. But wherever lies the fault, the remedy is definitely within the hands of youth, of the students now preparing to teach.

They must realize their influence and exercise it with judgment. Teaching must be recognized and guarded by them as the powerful profession that it is and not as a detour, and a rather dusty one, to other highways. The realization of the value and necessity of an unselfish purpose, an aim, in life must be fostered and emphasized. Youth can do this for itself and can help future generations in the rebuilding of character. But only youth can do it not the government. Once the youth organizations realize this, the necessity for prolongation of dependence will be eradicated.

IT'S FUNNY--PECULIAR

By JANILEE RHYNE

The weather is a subject that I feel that I must discuss. Something has got to be done about it. Perhaps the situation isn't peculiar and certainly it has gotten to the point where it isn't funny but as a conscientious objector I feel it my duty to bring up the question, even if I have to do so in a "Funny Peculiar" column.

My firm belief is that the weather is entirely too hot. People go around with their tongues hanging out. They gaze pitifully at one another and silently wonder how long each can stand it. The Professors use dozens of handkerchiefs each day mopping their feverish brows. The matrons get all hot and bothered and wonder why damsels must have dates in such hot weather The dates themselves, poor lads, come into Bryan hall with a pathetic gleam of desire in their eyes—if only they could get their coats off for one teeny minute. I tell you it's indecent for it to be so hot. The weather ought to be reasonable about it. Just think what effect this heat might have on our entire lives. Me, for instance. I always cherished a desire to live in Africa, but not now

I'm all for catching the next boat that heads for Norway, Sweden and points north

Everything is affected. Heat waves run around loose everywhere and blur things. We all wilt in this hideously horribly harrowing heat: My very intellectual powers are rapidly waning and if they wane very much 'twill be a major tragedy!

Students! I call you to the fray. Since we all agree that something must be done, I'd like to call a meeting for some day, some week, sometime, and I shall expect you all to be on time

Book Reviews

By STANMORE CAWTHON

"Roosevelt versus Recovery" by Ralph Robey, is a rather depressing dissertation on what the New Deal has done that it shouldn't have done and what it should have done that it hasn't.

Reading Republican speeches in the newspapers may have already convinced you that the New Deal has made numerous mistakes. However, you really don't know how many mistakes have been made until you read Mr Robey's sprightly little tale of faulty economics and wasted billions. Furthermore, if he is anywhere near correct, you ain't seen nothing yet His dire predictions for the future will turn your hair gray, if it isn't already white from reading about what we've gone through since Roosevelt took office.

Certain parts of the book are undoubtedly very valuable. Mr Robey has shown very clearly many of the numerous inconsistencies of the New Deal He suggests things that might have been done to prevent the mistakes that were made. But he has absolutely no plan to prevent future mistakes except a return to the principles of "liberal capitalism", whatever that may be. For the future of the country if the New Deal continues, he offers a number of alternatives— all of them bad.

As for reading the book in its entirety, I can't conscientiously recommend that you do unless you are particularly interested in a dolorous tirade against the alleged fascism of the New Deal or unless you are trying to justify yourself in voting Republican in 1936. To the average layman, the book will be rather dull The writer goes to great pains to omit all personalities or other light material that might have made the book a little interesting. He does not mention the name of a single New Dealer except Roosevelt You can imagine the thrill of wading through chapter after chapter of errors that have been made in the past and more errors that will surely be made in the future.

If I feel this way about the book, why did I read it? Well, we all slip up now and then

"IS MAN IMPROVING?" Robert Briffault, Scribners, July, 1935.

As the second in a series of three articles on the progress of man this discussion by Mr Briffault marks a note of emphatic optimism. Progress has been conceded before in the material and mechanical aspect of human activity, but the possibility of spiritual improvement has remained for the most part in question. Mr. Briffault is impressed not so much by the tangible achievements of men as with the perfection in mental equipment and the advances made in the power of critical discrimination.

Ample proof of man's progress is furnished in that far reaching discovery of our time: namely, that the human mind is a social product. Realization of this fact throws a new light on the issue. No longer is improvement in the physiological organism of prime importance but rather of the social organism in which it develops. This being the case, argues Mr. Briffault, our present social order demands an evaluation before the progress of man may be fully determined. The machine, he believes, is but an instrument toward the realization of a more efficient and healthful life its importance in molding our happiness rests in an intelligent use of its possibilities. In conclusion, a prediction is made for continued progress if modern states will but lay aside rugged individualism and nationalism of a competitive nature.

"HAS PSYCHOLOGY FAILED?" Joseph Jastrow, The American Scholar, Summer, 1935.

Mr. astrow, although recipient of Mr Jastrow, although recipient of Johns Hopkins, expresses a scepticism toward present forms of psychological investigation and teaching. He cites the folly of separate schools of thought within a field, where each pitted against the other can only contribute disgust to the confusion of a general populace. Behaviorism and psychoanalysis in claiming supremacy have not been solely to blame for chaos in present day psychology The conditioned reflex, uncritical acceptance of the I Q and an exploitation of applied psychology has each played its part in blurring issues.

Despite its flounderings of the past, Mr. Jastrow holds some hope for psychology. As an interpretation of the most critical force in the universe, the human mind, he feels it must succeed or be accompanied by extermination of the race.

Men are more active in social life, too, the women preferring to stay at home in most cases. Baseball, basketball, swimming, and movies are mainstays of amusement with the Cubans, but the really gala occasions are "fiestas" or carnivals which may last for two or three nights. Dancing at these differ greatly from ours, too, although they have adopted and adapted our fox trot. The "danzon," "son" and the "rhumba" are the most popular native dances. It is interesting to note that while restricted in many activities taken for granted by American women, there is no stigma attached to smoking by women.

Cuban food is highly seasoned, and favorite dishes are fried bananas, rice and beans cooked together, and spiced meats. Desserts are extremely sweet, resembling the candies found in the Cuban shops in Tampa. Cuban sandwiches, a conglomerate combination of meats and cheeses, are well liked by the natives.

The school in which Miss DeGraaf taught is located in Nueva Gerona, the capital of the Isle of Pines, and the only city there which has well paved roads. Although it is in the center of the English speaking colony, only one student was an American, the others being German, Canadian, English, Cuban, Swedish, and Norwegian. She stated that these children all thought differently, and each English expression must be explained carefully, for most of the pupils spoke English at school only using their native language at home. The curriculum is much the same as the one outlined in the Florida State Course of Study.

The largest "presidio", or prison, in Cuba is located on the Isle, and many political prisoners are brought here. The families of these men often visit the Island, and since they are usually from Havana their American manners and customs are in definite contrast to those of the natives.

The political philosophy of the Cubans seems apparent with these people, for each time their difficulties are mentioned, they shrug their shoulders and laugh, saying casually that the party in power is always opposed, so why worry? Miss DeGraaf stated that present day conditions in Cuba are much better in every way than they have been in years.

School of Education Leads in Enrollment

Sixty-two Counties Are Represented With Leon in Lead

Statistics from the registrar's office show an increase in summer school students, at Florida State College for Women, especially in the school of education, and a wide area represented by the students. The school of education, having the largest enrollment, has 578 as compared with 491 of last summer. Forty-three are enrolled in the graduate school, 172 in the school of arts and sciences, 54 in the school of home economics, and 23 in the school of music.

The total of 870 students represent 62 counties in Florida and nine other states. Of the Florida counties, Leon has the largest number, 137. Duval county has 66; Dadsden, 46; Escambia, 40; Jackson, 39; Dade, 34; Santa Rosa, 29; Hillsboro, 28; Washington, 25. The remaining fifty counties have less than 25 representatives.

Georgia comes next to Florida in state representation, with twenty-seven enrolled from there. Three students are enrolled from Mississippi, and two from Alabama and Indiana. Illinois, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, and West Virginia are each represented by one student.

Students Throng To Theatre Foregoing Pleasure Of Study

By UNA UMPHREY

Times are changing. In the good old days round-ups usually came in the fall. Now they come once a week. In Tallahassee as in many other towns Thursday night witnesses a coming together of the populace, young and old, rich and poor, that rivals the gatherings that used to take place at camp meetings and Bryan speeches.

The lure that brings these victims together is the strongest lure that can be offered to man—gold. Someone out of the vast multitude assembled before the moving picture theater and the few who are fortunate to arrive in time to get a seat are breathlessly awaiting that time somewhere between seven and nine o'clock when a stupendous amount of money is to be given in the custody of some lucky individual. Of course everybody expects to go away clutching the prize. That explains the dreamy look on many countenances. A dreamy feeling comes over all of us when we think, "Ah, what would I do if I had that much money".

Summer school students are wont to wander casually toward town Thursday night and "just happen to be standing outside at a certain time, or just wander in and sit down without realizing that it happens to be Thursday".

At last the great moment arrives. The picture is forgotten, the heroine might be in the clutches of the cruel villain but that is forgotten. Every eye is fixed on the proceedings now taking place. A name is drawn from an innumerable number. The announcer looks at it, the Judges look, the announcer hesitates as if he isn't sure of the name, the crowd is tense, hushed, throbbing with expectancy. One girl said that she was sure the first time she went to bank night that her name had been drawn and the announcer just couldn't decipher her hieroglyphics.

When everybody has had sufficient time to get blue in the face from holding his breath so long the announcer clears his throat and pronounces very distinctly and with an air of awfuly finality the name of the winner. Nine times out of ten he cannot be found anywhere. Somebody suggests that he has probably fainted from the shock and is unable to answer. The tension relaxes and the show goes on but the interest has departed for many of the onlookers and the return to the open range begins. Next week to be repeated.

Wonder what the average summer school student will gain by taking a night off from pleasant, easy study to mingle with the excited, milling crowd before the dispensary of hope and despair. Probably they go back to work glad that something, even if it is a D, is sure and certain and doesn't depend on the fickle lady called Luck.

ROOSEVELT TAXING PROGRAM

attempt to analyze the Pres- program, which contains ng that is especially new to the States, must take into con- n the policy which he s his guide. He stated "If rnment be prudent its taxes duce ample revenues with- couraging enterprise; if it be must distribute the tax bur- tably." The honest and care- must first decide whether n sympathy with that policy. economists have long ac- such statements as a sound taxing in a free enter- der.

ther questions which must wered have to do with the proposals for realizing the licy. Only a brief state- be made about each. There ly more sound information ich to base a judgment re- the possibility for sufficient than for deciding the other ountries of Europe and the Department of the United keep accurate accounts regarding revenues collected under the present taxes of these same types. The Revenue Act of 1926 provided for a Joint Committee of Legislative action which has done much study of such taxes. On the basis of these figures it has been estimated by the Treasury Department that the proposed laws might yield from 118,000,000 dollars to 191,500,000 dollars additional revenue, depending upon rates adopted. One question affecting amounts has been raised in the personal income tax. Many critics insist that this tax would yield more revenue if the exemptions in the lower brackets were lowered from the present $2,500 for married persons and $1,000 for single persons. They insist that the much larger number paying down in these brackets would increase amounts. The President apparently relies upon a step graduation above the one million dollar income level. Some idea of possible amounts may be gained by considering the fact that the Treasury Report for 1933-34 showed 46 persons with incomes of one million dollars and above.

Other questions center about the long run influences of such measures. Just what are the possibilities if a tax program is such as to discourage enterprise. The large immediate revenue must be weighed against the possibility of reducing the tax paying base of the future, thus reducing governmental revenues, and creating economic instability throughout the country. Much has been written and said on either side of this issue. Authorities question whether enough careful studies have been made to give a final answer. Certainly there has been no adequate proof to show that enterprise in England has been discouraged by taxes of this type levied since 1911, neither does there seem proof of such conditions here since the adoption of such taxes in 1916.

Regarding the possibility of an equitable distribution of the tax burden, it is generally agreed by all students of taxation that the tax burden is best distributed when taxes are levied on the basis of ability to pay. There is little dispute today that personal and corporate income taxes and estate taxes meet that test today better than do most other forms of taxes. The President also supports these taxes on the basis that persons and businesses subject to such taxes receive greater benefits from society and government. The state becomes an active partner and as such is entitled to large returns. This basis for a tax doesn't receive as much general support as does the ability to pay principle.

The feature of the President's proposal that probably means the greatest amount of future changes is that plan to use the taxing program as a means of bringing about a more nearly equal distribution of wealth. Consideration of that issue involves thinking of the most fundamental features of the old "rugged individualism." Such distribution he would secure first by reducing large incomes and estates, by taxes paid to government, and then by spending those funds create much free income, thereby increasing the real income of masses of people. He would also break the power of great concentrations of wealth, which give them exclusive market advantages, thereby giving to smaller business units an opportunity to compete more freely, and thus provide greater numbers with purchasing power. The graduated corporate income tax and larger inheritance taxes particularly look to this result. The possibilities of such taxes are so far-reaching that many feel the time before the present Congress is too short to make such decisions. The citizen here is forced to ask and try to answer these questions. Is a more nearly equal distribution of wealth desirable and possible? Shall the taxing power be used as a means of bringing about such a change?

The President answers the first by saying in the message that great accumulations of wealth with the accompanying economic power transferred from generation to generation is as inconsistent with the ideals of this generation, as inherited political power was inconsistent with the ideals of the generation that established the American government.

The rugged individualist says that such a program means the destruction of all that has been developed in these United States. Some place in the confusion congress and citizens seek the answers.

Plaque Commemorates Services of Bryan for Florida Recognition

By BENNIE MILDRED LEE

On the porch of Bryan Hall is affixed a brass memorial plaque commemorating the services of the Honorable Williams Jennings Bryan, United States Senator from Florida, in securing the name Florida for an United States Battleship.

It was through the urgent request and untiring efforts of Senator Bryan that a United States battleship was given the name Florida. In recognition of his efforts to have Florida thus honored, the Martha Reid Chapter No. 19 o fthe United Daughters of the Confederacy of Jacksonville had the memorial plaque made. When the SS Florida came to Pensacola to receive her christening gifts from the State of Florida, the brass plaque was officially presented to the ship by members of the chapter. There it remained in an honored place until 1930.

Five years ago when the Florida was dismantled it was through the efforts of the same chapter of United Daughters of the Confederacy that the plaque came to rest in Bryan Hall, named for the patriotic senator. The presentation of the plaque was made, at the request of the chapter, by Governor Carlton November 14, 1930, and accepted by President Edward Conradi of the College.

The design of the plaque is a crusader's shield surmounted by the head of the senator who died an untimely death while in the service of his State. The head, in heroic size, is crowned by a wreath of laurel and oak, typical of fame and statesmanship. The plaque, designed by Mr. Adrian Pillars, a Florida sculptor, also bears an historic inscription explaining the purpose of the memorial.

GROWTH OF STUDENT AIM OF MODERN EDUCATION

old drilling in reading, writing, and arithmetic taught subject matter admirably, but it did not teach any relationship to life."

Dr. Eyman believes that education will progress rapidly in the near future. "Before many years," he declared, "two years of college will be required of every teacher. After that will come a requirement of four years. In our day we will see the policy of granting a state certificate only to those who have a master's degree and a year's apprenticeship in teaching.

"We must sell the public the idea of education," he declared. "The state must set up standards and select the teachers. To conquer the new frontiers in character development, the teachers must be given the training and freedom necessary to teach the students in the class room by direct methods how to use their leisure time. This can be done by providing the teachers and students with better facilities. Instead of taking from the curriculum it must be added to.

"It is in the schools," Dr. Eyman believes, "that we must safeguard democracy. With the freedom to discuss and analyze communism, fascism and such like movements the student can decide wherein we have or have not democracy."

"The schools of the future," he hopes, "will teach the student how to work. The teachers and students will analyze social problems together, assisted by the parents who will live in closer contact with the schools. There will be more in the schools to offer the boys and girls under eighteen who today are holding jobs that breadwinners need, instead of being in school. The school of the future will be a training school with the absence of the old time police power which has been in evidence.

"The surface of contemporary education," Dr. Eyman continued, "is hardly scratched for the foundations which need to be laid if democracy is not to be a thing of the past. The chief task will be to ripen the judgment and mature personality so that the students can go out into the world and handle social problems. Individual differences must be recognized and treated as such.

"To accomplish this," Dr. Eyman added in conclusion, "we will have to go back and place a different concept of education into the saddle of American education. The change will not occur by leaps and bounds but by a gradual process of growth."

anything useful is beautiful. But," she said, "though all beautiful things are useful, it does not follow that that which is useful is beautiful."

According to Miss Sivyer those who are to be future advisors in the selection of everyday things should bear in mind that many ugly articles are put on market because public taste demands them. It is up to those interested to study the best thus raising the selling standards.

"Simplicity," said Miss Sivyer, "is the keynote of good selection. In contrast to this is the over-elaborateness of the Victorian period. After the nineteenth century due to the swifter current of life this was discarded for a more direct and forceful decoration. Other factors which should enter into selection, according to Miss Sivyer, are as follows: strength of line, contrast of dark and light, elimination of unnecessary curves and details, and definiteness of design.

Through the use of slides Miss Sivyer illustrated the contrast good and bad selection in interior decorating, ornaments, lighting and accessories.

Memorial Service Held at Convocation for Bloxham

Convocation Tuesday morning was given over to a memorial service commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of William D. Bloxham, the only man in Florida's history since statehood was reached to hold the office of governor twice. Municipal judge Charles S. Ausley, whose family was intimately acquainted with the Bloxhams, was chosen by Dr. Conradi to give the memorial address.

Judge Ausley dwelt at length on the personal characteristics of former Governor Bloxham. According to Judge Ausley, Governor Bloxham was "a man of rare personal charm, possessing great administrative ability, charming and courtly manners and a genuine love for his fellow men. He was a gifted public speaker and his dignity and friendliness inspired love and respect wherever he went."

Ah, The Glamour Of Field Trips!

By MARY MOOTY

Ah the glamour of field trips! The fascination of Botany, Bug, and Bird trips! Florida State ranks high in inter-collegiate circles in the perfection with which it launches such social events. For many years now scientific jaunts have proved a favorite outdoor sport and their reminiscences a morsel for parlour gossip.

The social season is on again. Our campus fairly swarms with scurrying tingres boot-clad, trousered, armed with field glass or scalpel as the case may be. All scramble in eagerness for a truck which waits to whisk them away to the latest field-costume-ball.

Queer tales drift back from these excursions. A veritable folk lore has grown up wherein girls swing from treetops, rivers run underground, fields of wild orchids and other marvels bloom for the picking. There are yarns, too, of rattlesnakes just missed thes unto-death among sects.

We Need Confidence And Co-operation Declares Bellamy

Foresees Disintegration of Civilization Unless Changes Effected

"Contemporary social trends are moves for social reform along any line whether by Adolph Hitler, Huey Long, or the average layman," declared Dr. Raymond Bellamy, professor of sociology, at the open forum discussion held Wednesday evening in the Augusta Conradi theatre on "Contemporary Social Trends."

"Social reforms," Dr. Bellamy explained, "lie along the lines of thought of the person advocating the reform. The whole world is asking what is happening. We don't know. Everything we see and hear is subject to interpretation and reform."

In comparing our nation with others, Dr. Bellamy believes that we need only to get away and have a greater perspective in order to realize that our country is in the same chaotic condition. Out of this chaotic condition, Dr. Bellamy explained that some things remain true while others are more transitory. "Institutions grow old," he asserted. "They become outdated due to new ideas and inventions. This generation is living in a period of breakdown. The old institutions don't fit.

"We are starving," Dr. Bellamy declared, "in the midst of plenty. Statistics prove that we need from 70 to 80 per cent more milk for our children. Yet every day we shoot milk cows. People live in the midst of a cotton field clothed in rags. Yet they plow under the cotton. We need 200 per cent more citrus fruits. Two years ago over one thousand trees were burned.

"Co-operation is superior to individual competion." Dr. Bellamy continued "and yet we cling to the institutions built on the laissez-faire idea. This is proved by the

Philippine Customs and Progress Described by Former Teacher

As Told to Carolina De Montigne

Public education, sanitation, virtual freedom from scourges of cholera and smallpox, and a wide-spread clean-up campaign have been outstanding results of the United State's possession of the Philippine Islands, according to Mrs. Lucile H. Ferulsse, who for four years taught English in the School of Arts and Trades at Manila. Much of the credit for progress is due to the late Governor-General Leonard Wood, American army officer and physician who established, among other things, the famous leper colony at Culion. This is one of the two colonies in the world which can conquer this dread disease by the use of "chaulmoogra" oil. Physicians there can cure the malady in its early stages and arrest its growth in further developed cases.

Despite our nearly thirty years of influence, the Filipinos are still quite a primitive people except in the more highly civilized centers near the towns, according to Mrs. Ferulsse. Perhaps the presence of nearly forty nine different dialects each unintelligible to the natives of other tribes, may account for this "Tagalog" is the most common dialect because it centers around Manila.

There are two large groups of natives: the lowland or Christian tribes and the non-Christians who live in the mountainous sections. The Igorots, who are enthusiastically pro-American, the Mohammedan Moros and the Negritoes comprise the principal tribes of the Non-Christians. Historians agree that the latter, a tribe of aboriginal dwarfs, are the original natives of the Philippines and that through the centuries they have been pushed back into the mountains by other tribes.

Filipino folk lore tells the story of a giant, who, standing in the middle of the sea, seized a huge rock and threw it into the water with such force that it broke into the pieces which are now the more than a thousand islands of the Phillippines, many of them too small to be named.

Despite the rockiness of the soil, the Islands are principally an agricultural country. Sugar, tobacco, rice, hemp fibres, cocoanut oil,

Varied Wood Is Diverting Hobby

"I have no collection of canes, nor am I at all interested in collecting them," said Dr. Raymond Bellamy, instructor of sociology, when approached on the subject of his rumored hobby, that of making canes. "What I have and am interested in is a collection of different types of wood. To put this wood into the form of a cane simply makes an easier and more convenient way of saving the various kinds of wood in which I am interested."

"The reason for my interest in wood," continued Dr. Bellamy, "is that I always like to carry some side interest in some phase of nature which will afford me exercise and recreation. A few years ago I studied flowers, then birds, and am now working on wood."

"My method of making a cane is quite simple. I first find a section of a tree or shrub that I wish to use for my cane. Then I split this with an axe and hew it down to a rough stick. After planing this down, I scrape it with glass and sandpaper it to a smooth finish."

When questioned as to the shape of his canes, Dr. Bellamy said that he never tried to make them into any fancy shapes or unusual designs, but simply made plain canes to preserve the wood for his collection.

"But," he added, "I try to represent many different types and variations of each type of wood in my collection. I make several canes of the same kind of wood with such variations as leaving the bark on one, taking another from the heartwood, and still another from the sapwood; or I may make several canes of the same species to show different types of wood.

"It's lots of fun — collecting wood," said Dr. Bellamy in closing the interview, "for it gives me plenty of good exercise, and I run across a lot of surprises. For example, I found that the button bush, which grows plentifully around swamps, has a hard wood with streaks of rose-pink in it. Also the

FLORIDA SCHOOLS FACE A FINANCIAL CRISIS

Again, the schools of Florida face a crisis. With the announcement that Florida's public school fund may be cut from $10,500,000, the estimated required amount for full time operation, to $7,100,000 as a result of the recent court ruling on the state's chain store tax, the schools are confronted with the almost inevitable necessity of again being forced to close their doors.

W. S. Cawthon, superintendent of public instruction, has assured the county school heads of $4,900,000, less by $600,000 than the meagre sum portioned last year to the schools. Other authorities judge that the sum will be equivalent to that of last year, $5,500,000, and may reach as much as $6,500,000. Whatever the total may be, it will be derived chiefly from old sources of revenue for state funds with a small additional gain from the occupational levy. And even this will be offset by the loss resulting from the reduction of the homestead tax.

The larger counties, where local taxation supports the system, will not suffer so much. Teachers may be cut, courses may have to be eliminated. But the process of education will continue, as it has in years past, on a minimum scale, both for payment of hard-working teachers, ond for the children who will suffer for forced lack of progressive methods and curricula.

But the smaller counties, dependent on the state for support, these counties where the need for education is of vital importance, will again find themselves without funds long before the nine months' school year has terminated.

Legislators, who spent so much time talking of what they were going to do for the schools, and who finally rushed through this program at the last minute, knew when they did so that the chain store tax could legitimately be questioned as unconstitutional. Why put it off on the schools, on which depend the very future of our state? Of all divisions of the state, the school system should be assured of a sufficient revenue to educate its citizens.

If Florida is to advance, the distributors of its finances must realize the importance of complete and modern education facilities for all its people—adults as well as children. With sufficient funds our schools could become an organized unit of the state, developing independent and efficient citizens capable of work for the advancement not only of the people, but of the state itself. Only through an educated public can any state progress, and no public can be consistently educated if schools continue to be forced to close their doors.

A HOPE FOR DEMOCRACY

The increasing complexity of this world daily emphasizes the necessity for an educated public. Whatever system of government a country may have, it is the people who comprise that government who determine whether the country shall progress, remain static, or decline.

In our own country, democratic as it is, this is especially true. Our citizenry must be educated. Modern youth has that opportunity as never before. But it is the adults who guide the controlling forces of life today, oftentimes adults who never had a chance to be academically trained. These molders of deed and thought not only influence our contemporary life but they further our racial heritage.

Consequently the movement inaugurated in 1926 by the American Association for Adult Education for the education of adults, is a most significant one. Through the open forum, the institute, individual schools, museums, corporation educational programs, and workers' education, advance is constantly being made.

Government projects further this national step, and encouraging comments come from many parts of the country. A news item in the New York Times recently quoted an educator in the field as declaring "If the students in American high schools and universities had the same willing enthusiasm and candid curiosity that our adults show, they would learn a lot more."

This is indeed an encouraging sign of the times, an indication that the masses of our people may not be after all so indifferent to our major crises. They are awakening to our governmental, our ethical, our educational problems. They are beginning to realize that the blind cannot lead the blind. They see at last their duty to prepare their children for life, a hopeless task if they themselves are unprepared.

As William H. Kilpatrick, noted educator declares, "From any angle, the success of democracy, the saving of freedom of thought and discussion, seems bound up with every great successful extension of public study and thought. Adult education in some form certainly, becomes democracy's hope. It may well turn out that our democracy itself stands or falls with our adult education movement."

"CHALLENGE TO COMPLACENCY," Stanley Casson, Atlantic Monthly, July, 1935.

In this intensely interesting article, Mr. Casson has predicted the archaeologist's conception of London or New York a few years after the fall of our civilization. Such complex cities, dependent upon organization in every small phase of daily life, will fall more quickly he avers than will rural regions still tinged with remnants of our past civilization. Once the occupants of cities have vanished climatic rigours will soon make an end to skyscrapers and all public buildings. Therefore Mr. Casson is convinced no modern metropolitan center will sink into a slow decay as did the ancient cities of Greece and Babylonia. Instead the glories of concrete and steel in New York will lie decomposing under green meadows while London shall sink again beneath the lapping of marshy waves.

Excavators of the future will find not the multiple treasures of our babbling press, but rather a few accounts and legal hieroglyphics tucked away in safes. Mr. Casson insists he is no prophet, that he is writing a simple archaeological thesis of the development of events, —yet world war he warns, will bring inevitably just such a series of events.

"STILL NOT BY BREAD ALONE." M. Beatrice Blankenship, Atlantic Monthly, July, 1935.

In answer to the query, "Why do you send your children to Sunday school?" Mrs. Blankenship has formulated three justifications. The first rather superficial she admits, is that they may be afforded an opportunity to meet influential people. As a second reason for their attendance, Mrs. Blankenship desires her sons to be thoroughly acquainted with the language and contents of biblical literature. In the third argument, however, lies most of her purpose, as she sees in Sunday School attendance the foundation of an interest in the church itself.

Realizing a void in her own life due to the lack of organized religion, she seeks to protect her children from a similar situation. Yet the church without reorganization of its program can hardly hope for success she feels. It must somehow make clear to the coming generation the beauty which lies in pursuit of the good life.

"WHERE IS YOUNG GERMANY HEADING?" Vyvyan Adams and Jochen Benemann, Forum, July, 1935.

In this dialogue between Mr. Adams and Herr Benemann diametrically opposed ideas concerning the German youth movement are presented. Herr Benemann, spokesman for the German viewpoint, has unlimited faith in this program, believing the spirit of dependence upon its leader makes for cooperation within the nation. He justifies Hitler's setup for military training of adolescents on grounds of the health consciousness it fosters in physical activity. German's national ideal is explained as the achievement of unity and as a return to those privileges enjoyed by other nations.

Mr. Adams, voicing English thought, finds the movement questionable. He sees devotion to a national ideal as a form of blind nation worship. Dependence upon a dictator is in his eyes dangerous since possibilities are offered for stifling individual expression. The English point of view has at its very foundation a democratic ideal which can never be in sympathy with Germany's present policy. Mr. Adams sees a note of militaristic preparation for war in forcing attendance at labor camps.

Werewolves

By JANILEE RHYNE

What happens to a werewolf when the full moon gets contrary and goes into an eclipse? That's what many of us wondered Monday night as we sat up into the wee sma' hours and watched a familiar moon do unfamiliar things. All around the campus there were groups of be-nightled, (not benighted, but be-nightled) damsels gazing expectantly up into the sky —but occasionally these damsels would cast a wary glance around into the shrubbery—Course there aren't such things as werewolves but just in case there were, one should be a wee bit cautious and be ready to take off in high if one of these strange animals should show his ugly self around here.

But after giving the matter much careful thought, I don't believe there was much cause for worry. You see, werewolves are only werewolves when the full moon shines. Now on Monday night from 11 to 1 the full moon was definately not functioning, so—imagine the embarrassment of a werewolf just when he was getting ready to devour some pretty F. S. C. W. girl, to have the moon go into an eclipse and him turn back into a man just like that.

Despite all the buzzing about werewolves, there have been none to appear so far. But believe me, they missed a grand chance for a big meal Monday night 'cause there were just oodles of girls who'd make nice steaks running around everywhere practically asking to be eaten.

Book Reviews

By STANMORE CAWTHON

Frank H. Simonds, journalist, and Brooks Emeny, former Yale professor, have collaborated to make a valuable contribution to contemporary history. They are joint authors of "The Great Powers in World Politics," a very keen analysis of world politics, international relations, and economic nationalism.

The story of international diplomacy before and since the World War is a fascinating story indeed, and these gentlemen tell it well. They take each of the great powers and describe its aims and ambitions in the field of world politics. They tell what each nation wants and what their chances are of getting it. The potential military strength of each nation is analyzed by the use of charts showing its strength in essential raw materials. Finally, the efforts that have been made to preserve peace are summarized and conclusions drawn therefrom.

Although the book is so recent that it includes such events as the assassinations of King Alexander of Yogoslavia and Chancellor Dolfuss of Austria, many events have taken place in the never-static field of international politics since the book went to press. It is extremely interesting to read the prophecies that these gentlemen made and to

About a week two after I started remaking character, I met this yipping pup to face. My first desire was ush across the street and leer him from a distance. Then I re- bered—I was a new person. espite the fact that I am a d person, I am a source of ever- ing joy to my more enterpris friends. They look upon me h as a thrifty housewife looks an old table. To find my possi- ties and develop them has more action for them than a crossword puzzle. Whenever I see a group of them approaching me with a purposeful look in their eye, I shudder. Bitter experience has taught me that that look means one thing—they are going to make me over whether I want them to or not. As one of the darkest chapters of my life—to this category I relegate my friends first attempt to change me, and the catastrophe which arose therefrom. A few years ago a group of them descended upon me with the bald statement:

"We've been talking about you."

I had already suspected that. Lately I had heard no gossip. So I ventured weakly, "W-what did you say?"

The spokesman of the group pointed a forefinger at me:

"You," she said dramatically, "are the long slinky type."

"What?" I gasped.

On further explanation I learned that it was a scheme to make me over, not to turn me into a snake or lizard or some other crawling insect as I had first feared. I further learned that I was to look mysterious, sound mysterious, and wear mysterious clothes. As to actions, and this is the most important, I was to cultivate a daring walk, look superior and say nothing but intellectual things. "Regarding the success of their experiment I can only say that for two weeks I wandered around looking like a dying calf and making weak attempts to express myself on the affairs of the universe, the nation and the South. My daring walk and low guttural voice I won't even go into—the comments were too caustic to mention. At any rate by the end of two weeks I looked twenty years older. A sight of me then even dampened my friends' ardor, and they are the "do or die" type. At date, however, they have recovered themselves sufficiently to attempt to make me the electrifyingly enthusiastic and athletic type—whatever that may mean!

In view of all that has happened, I confess I do not want to change. I prefer to remain society's menace, the timid withdrawing type. I can not be positively dangerous to society. I am much too timid for that. Timidity too has its brighter side, its compensation. Only as a timid person could I ever know that glorious feeling of superiority and achievement that comes after ringing a bus bell, approaching a strange house, or expressing myself (however haltingly) in a group of people. I do not want to change, but if I did, I could not. Although now I am able to put up a good bluff outwardly, inwardly I remain the same. I am the leopard. I cannot change my spots.

MORE ABOUT PHILIPPINES

and dried coconut meat known as "copra" are the principal exports. In the cities, cigar manufacturing is a rapidly growing industry, and "narra", a native wood, is competing successfully with our mahogany. Bamboo grows very large, sometimes five inches in diameter. The natives construct the framework of their houses from these huge stems, whipping the posts together with ropes and covering them with "sowali" matting for the walls. Roofs are thatched with "nipa", large bundles of grass which are placed on the framwork much as our shingles are. These give the name "nipa houses" to the huts.

Because of the fragility of these houses storms are disastrous. Typhoons, which come during the wet season from the first of June until about the middle of September, tear the "nipa" loose and disjoint the bamboo frames. These are followed by floods, equally fatal. In direct contrast comes the dry season, with April and May constituting the "hot months". During this period there is little rain, and vacations in the Philippines come then so that inhabitants of the lowlands may escape to the mountains. The climate there is much like that of Florida in the winter time, and it is the one place on the Islands where American vegetables and flowers can be grown successfully.

Philippine natives are of the brown Malay race. They are small, perhaps because of their undernourishing diet of fish and rice. Hospitality, ambition, love of books, cheerfulness, and a willingness to accept conditions as they are characterize the Filipinos. Despite their love of literature, however, a committee from the schools of Manila, after work for over a year, could find only the novels of Jose Rizal, national hero, and one or two native poems as a result of their search for strictly native literature. This survey did not include those professors who write in English and have been educated in America.

Woodcarving, weaving, and basket work prove the Filipinos' skill with their hands, as does the elaborate embroidery found on their clothing. Native dress is lovely, said Mrs. Eernisse, although most of the citizens of the towns wear the American custom made clothes. The men combine their native dress with the American, wearing white drill trousers topped by a brown "tagalog", a garment which hangs loosely around the knees. For festive occasions, however, both men and women don their traditional costumes. The "camisas", or blouses, are made of fibre cloth—the "pina" cloth woven from the long firm pineapple fibres and resembling a sheer organdy, or the "siminy", a fine material made from the "abaca" fibre and printed with dainty figures. A full satin skirt and a "topis", a black net apron beaded and embroidered, complete the costumes. Igorot policemen are picturesque in their choice of uniform. Although the Igorot tribesmen wear only the bright colored loin cloths, the officers add to their dress a soldier's hat and coat, which make a strange contract to their bare brown legs. Girls in the American schools usually wear the practical American white middy blouses and skirts.

Many social customs of the Filipinos are of Spanish origin, including the strict chaperonage of the girls. Like the Spanish, Filipinos are fond of social events, balls and banquets. At the latter they serve quantities of food in infinite variety, but unlike the Latins', most of it is unspiced. Baseball and cockfights are favorite sports, although almost any American game is welcomed.

The Spanish influence dates back to the discovery of the Philippines by Magellan in his famous voyage around the world. The supposed spot of his landing is on Muctam Island. "From the tiny village of Opon, where the natives pump coconut oil into the huge tanks of the boats, one can bump over the unsurfaced trail to an open cove, surrounded by coconut palms, where the government has erected a small obelisk to Magellan. The monument is surrounded by an iron picket fence, and the natives spread the cassava root (from which tapioca is made) within the fence to protect it from goats while it is drying. Across from the monument is a tiny rural school, rather unkept, which is named the "Magellan Elementary School."

Some of the oldest universities in the Orient were established by the Spanish priests, Mrs. Eernisse concluded, and are noted for their museums and book collections. The American schools, however, with their program of popular education and full curriculum, have made it possible for officials to fill civil service and school positions, with Filipinos, so that the Islands are rapidly becoming a nation, efficiently administered by its own people.

observe how accurately some of these prophecies are turning out. For example, the authors maintain throughout the book that Britain has ever since the Armistice been attempting to restore to Germany some of her former military and economic power. The reasoning behind such a move on the part of England seems simple enough when explained by Simonds. Britain wants a strong Germany so that the "balance of power" on the Continent will be maintained. If Germany is too weak, France is correspondingly too strong. The British believe that the security of the Empire is dependent upon the fact that no Continental nation completely dominates the European scene as France seemed about to do after the World War. So England played a double game of diplomacy after the War in an effort to weaken France, her former ally, and strengthen Germany, her former enemy.

How correct this description of the situation is has been shown by the signing of a treaty between Germany and England since the book was printed. This treaty allowed the Germans to build a larger navy, and is obviously just another step in England's long fight to keep intact the Continental "balance of power." The authors may well pat themselves on the back and say "I told you so."

Let's Take Some Definite Steps

By STANMORE CAWTHON.

If we really want to stay out of a war, and since we are supposed to be a civilized nation it is assumed that we do, it is time we are taking some definite steps in that direction. We talk a great deal about world peace, but we seldom make any concrete effort to insure it. As a nation, we have done nothing for the cause of peace since Charles Evans Hughes did such excellent work at the Washington Arms Conference more than a decade ago. Even the work of this great diplomat has passed into the discard in recent years. A few sporadic efforts since then and that is all.

There are at least three definite steps that we in America can take that would help keep us out of the next European war, assuming that such a war will be fought.

The first step is to adopt the suggestion of Senator LaFollette and provide for a national referendum before any war can be declared. If a majority of the electorate votes against going into the war, America stays out. This plan would permit those who are expected to fight the war to have a definite say-so as to whether they want a chance to die for the good old country. As has been pointed out, Mayor LaGuardia of New York was one of the few Congressmen who had the decency to fight in the war after voting us into it.

Perhaps a more important step would be to adopt a new policy of neutrality before the next war begins in Europe. Our policy as pursued in the past can lead us nowhere but into the midst of a war that is none of our business. In the World War we declared over and over again that we were entitled to trade at will with any belligerent nation as long as we sent them no arms and ammunition. As will be remembered, we were in trouble with one side and then the other almost from the day the war began. Both sides were attempting to cut off supplies from the other and the only way this could be effectively done was to interfere with our commerce. Consequently, we exchanged a number of sharp notes with both England and Germany and finally went into the war on the side of the Allies when Germany went so far as to sink the Lusitania.

When nations are at war, they are prone to forget the fine points of international law. After all, it is a bit difficult to sit by and watch your enemy receive supplies from neutral countries when you are trying to starve him out. Besides, who can say just what is the categorical distinction between arms and ammunition and peaceful products? Certainly the rifle bullets alleged to have been on the Lusitania were ammunition; but what about Chlorine, which is useful in making dyes but even more useful in making poison gas?

If our merchants want to get rich by trading with belligerent nations in an international conflict, let them do so by all means—but at their own risk. It's a little difficult to see why we should go into a war to protect the commercial interests, a very small percentage of our population. The profits in war time trade are great enough so that a great many would run the risk anyway, so our manufactures would not be greatly harmed. As for the ones that don't like the idea of having their boats captured by the enemy, let them stay at home and trade along the banks of the St. Marks river. I see no reason to fight for their right to get rich.

A third step, and one that has often been suggested in recent months is to do something drastic about the munitions makers. We can do any one of several things: (1) have the government take over the manufacture of munitions entirely; (2) limit the profits which the munitions makers may receive; (3) have the government take over the munitions plants the day that we declare war on any foreign country.

The third proposal would appear to be the best, since the first would give the government an unwieldy industry with which they would not know what to do, and since limitation of profits is virtually impossible. The third proposal would make the munitions makers a little less interested in getting us into a war, since their profits would be wiped out as soon as hostilities began.

What we don't want is for present conditions in the munitions industry to continue. Senator Nye's committee revealed such juicy tidbits as the fact that while our doughboys were fighting in the lovely French mud for the munificent sum of one dollar a day, at home the DuPonts waited several months to build a much-needed powder factory because they were not satisfied with the mere twenty per cent profit which they had been guaranteed by the government. These patriotic gentlemen haggeled over profits while the dollar-a-day boys were striving to hold back Ludendorff and Von Hindenburg. The necessity for a change here is quite evident.

thought. Mr. Vance pointed out the lack of dogmatism and the frank, liberal attitude toward the problems of the day as indicative of their nature.

"If there is one characteristic more marked than any other, it is their reasonableness, and their rationality," he declared. "Moreover, they do not make any special pleading. I have seen in the same magazine, articles defending and condemning the New Deal, defending democracy and advocating anarchism, deploring religious indifference and scoring the church, advocating the case of the schools and berating them, ridiculing feminism and extolling the genius of women".

In presenting his fourth point, that the magazines are authoritative, Mr. Vance cited eminent men in all branches of thought who write for the 'qualities.' In the field of education he mentioned President Angell of Yale, Dean Gauss of Princeton, President Chase of New York University, John Dewey, Harold J. Laski, Howard K. Beale, and Abraham Flexner. On subjects related to politics and economics he mentioned Fairchild, Laski, Tugwell, Berle, and others; on historical subjects, Charles A. Beard, Louis M. Hacker, and James Truslow Adams; on religion, Holmes, Fosdick, Bell, and Dean Inge; and on science, Haldane, Huxley, Sullivan, Millikin, Conklin, Whitehead, Eddington, Hubble, and Bridgman.

"In this connection", said Mr. Vance, "may I say that one of the most refreshing things about reading from these journals is that such reading gives one contact with men who have a bigness, a generosity, and an honesty altogether exhilarating, in contrast to what one observes in the general run of humanity. Such contact with the few real leaders of thought enables one to maintain sound standards in a world where he seldom sees such standards applied. In such a world, in fact, it is about the only way to avoid losing sight altogether of sound values respecting the true, the beautiful and the good, values that alone differentiate civilization from barbarism."

study of animals. Years before man the animals who co-operated were the survivors. "The populace of the country is drunk," he declared. "They don't know what is happening, they are not interested in what is going on, and consequently they believe that whatever is told them is silly. The saddest thing of today's condition is the breakdown of confidence among the people. Here Dr. Bellamy made a provisional prophecy: "If certain outdated policies are continued there will be dire results. The disintegration of civilization may come in our generation. We may have reorganization, progressive changes, and happiness if we do things sensibly. On the other hand civilization may go to pieces. However, at the time of disintergration, we may not fully realize it. In looking back upon history the darker ages are more clearly seen than were realized at the time."

Projected Plans For Buildings Await Approval

If the applications to the Public Works Administration for building funds are granted, Florida State campus will soon be the scene of much construction and repairing. A new dormitory, additions to the infirmary and dining hall and repairs for the administration building are the leading projects underway, according to H. D. Mendenhall, college engineer.

An application for $370,000 for the dormitory, and $221,000 for the dining hall, has already been submitted and is expected to be approved within thirty days. $90,000 will be requested for the infirmary addition and a reply will likewise be heard within thirty days after application.

The Works Project Administration has already granted $50,000 toward a fund of $150,000 necessarry to repair the administration building, the rest to be gained from college funds.

Work on these projects can be begun ninety days after approval and each will be finished twelve months after construction has begun.

Among the other activities planned by the engineering division of the college is the building of a golf course on the site of the present college dairy which will be moved to the new buildings by September first of this year.

Joyous Sentiments of School Life Evaporate in Face of Examinations

One week to go! Can the world spin calmly on these seven nights and days without contracting a dizzy leap in velocity? The fever of this final week of flurry must surely be contagious! So many facts are there to be crammed in ringing heads, so many odds and ends to pack—and where's that library book, anyway?

Can eight long weeks finally pass? Why isn't it tomorrow? No, that's suicide—how in this world can those professors expect one weak student to perform such a mountain of miracles? And so it is that some eight hundred souls end hopelessly in confusion.

Seen in retrospect Summer School becomes rather fun, and students drooping from overwork forget the midnight hours of study, the grind of day after day spent in monotony. They are impressed in their musings with the perfection of these best of all possible days and the big kind hearts of professors, while these in turn have forgotten the density of block-like brains in the more stirring images of mountain and seacoast.

Then sentiment suddenly evaporates at some warning twinge of recollection: exams all week and a trunk to pack, which lies nearer a school teacher's pocket-book, the bus? the train perhaps; fifteen hundred pages of parallel left to go; those few final impressions to be made upon a stern professor; and (for the hundreth time) examinations! What a relief it will be to get down off straining toes again and talk to Donald for a change.

Art Of Greece Traced By West In Broward Talk

In her lecture on Greek art in the Broward club room on Monday evening, Miss Edith West, assistant professor of classics, stated that her main object was to "trace, in a cursive fashion, the serenity, moderation, and love of perfection that enables us to speak of 'the glory that was Greece' ".

Thus tracing the rise of Greek art, Miss West illustrated her lecture with slides showing the different works of art. She discussed first the earliest art of the Grecians that revealed the influence of the Egyptians, and carried her discussion through the archaic transsitions, periods to the golden age when it was at its height, and to the hellenistic age when came the beginning of disintegration.

Abysinnian Problem Discussed by Shores

Need For Raw Materials And Markets Is Cause Of Present Crisis

"In discussing the Abyssinian question it is necessary to consider the background comprising the geography, its location and people, and its relationship to the rest of the world," said Dr. Venila Shores, professor of history, in opening a lecture of the Abyssinian question at a forum held in the Augusta Conradi little theatre Wednesday evening at 8:15.

"The need for raw materials and a market for them lies at the basis of the present situation," explained Dr. Shores. "Italy, looking on Abyssinia as a market, wants to build a railroad to connect with Croatia, one of the colonies, and Somaliland. France has a permanent monopoly of railroad building in Ethiopia. As Italy is so anxious to get this railroad concession, she will give the French a port on the Red Sea. So far the emperor hasn't thought it wise to get the emnity of France and let Italy further into the territory. Protecting the water supply for her colony at Sudan constitutes England's chief interest in the question. By the treaty of 1902 England obtained the right from Abyssinia to build a dam to check the overflow of the Blue Nile river."

"France and England are both in a delicate situation. To incur the emnity of Italy may mean to abolish their interests in Africa, as it might appear a weakening of the amity between the three cono-

Social Work and the Economic Crisis

By ELINOR NIMS, Assistant Professor of Sociology

New Profession Presents Challenge To American Men And Women

Social work is one of the last activities to develop a body of knowledge which can be taught, skills which can be learned, and a code of ethics—to become a profession, in short. Break-downs in community life, especially at the time of the World War and at the present time of economic depression, have done much to mould nineteenth century charity and philanthropy into twentieth century social work. Twenty years ago psychiatry was emphasizing the individual's maladjustments. Today, economics is emphasizing the maladjustment of the masses. The field of social work, therefore, is as wide as man's social relationships for he may get out of step anywhere along the line.

Since social work had long been dealing with poverty, ignorance, mental quirks, illness and too large families, it was logical that social workers should be called on to deal with the great burden of unemployment in 1930. The 9,000 qualified social workers in the United States (only about forty of whom are in Florida today) could not deal with the stupendous problem. As in the time of disaster, promising persons were recruited, some of whom can secure training with little difficulty. The bulk of them, however, do not

To absorb the finer things of life our thriving freshman class, the dogs, have swamped the campus. From every backdoor of life, they come to us to receive the blessings of education and any stray bits of food that providence and the dining room see fit to bestow on them. We should be proud of our dogs! For, representing the flea-bitten mongrel class of indefinite origin, they lend a distinctively democratic element to our campus.

Yet they do not lack intelligence. The entire group is working its way through college. Some of the less objectionable types are the proud owners of dining room scholarships, which entitle them to meet the regular student at the door and usher him into the dining room. As compensation board and room are given free of charge. Others, a little bit the worse for wear, have stationed themselves in front of Bryan Hall. Realizing that fundamentally this is a woman's college, they earn their way by barking at any male marauder who approaches the feminine contingent housed within. The most beautiful of our canine classmates simply lend dignity and grace to the cam-

THE CHALLENGE OF RESPONSIBILITY

Two weeks from today nine more credit hours will have been amassed by several hundred teachers and would-be teachers, nine credits representing hours of earnest effort gleaning facts, memorizing rules of technique and administration. That these are necessary and important is indisputable, but more indispensable in the equipment of a teacher is his realization of his responsibility as a guiding influence upon the youth of America, a responsibility too often indifferently accepted.

Wherever he goes, he will be the wielders of a mighty force in the development of American attitudes. Though they are not professionally recognized as such, primary teachers are the most important members of the early educational system for they receive children at their most impressionable age. Certain attitudes have already been acquired by these pupils through home and other environmental associations. If these be incompatible to the social mindedness essential in modern society, it is the duty of the teacher to reconstruct them and to build in their place the attitudes that will aid them in realizing an integrated and successful life.

Attitudes of respect, toleration, open-mindedness, must be germinated and strengthened; qualities of initiative, independence, self-restraint, must be developed that America may have a citizenry united through the group-mindedness, that cooperative thinking that can only result from people so constituted.

Alexander Mieklejohn, recently director of the Experimental College at the University of Wisconsin, and now professor of philosophy there, has said that "Above all, Americans must learn to think together about common problems. Without a technique for sharing our ideas and building our point of view by common effort, objectivity of thinking is lost; and without the ability of the people to share in the enterprise of objective thought, democracy cannot endure." This attitude is one that can and must be created in childhood. Individualism is a necessary component of character. It is essential to progress. But it must be modified by consideration of the rights of others.

The intolerance of youth, the impatience to get things changed immediately, an obviously impossible task, the irreverence of youth, are frequently deplored by discerning critics whom youth rashly and wrongly brands as incapable of understanding. These ill-founded attitudes based on an entirely false method of reasoning are but the inevitable result of improper training. Certainly the fault does not lie entirely with the teacher. But with him does lie the remedy.

The challenge to the teachers of America to develop children endowed with attitudes requisite to successful living, capable of critical, integrated thinking, is one that must not be disregarded.

UNSEEING AMERICANS

So busy are we of today in criticizing our government, our institutions, our leaders, so involved are we in the pursuit of material gain that we deny ourselves the very privileges and rights we think would result from perfection of government, institutions, leaders, from possession of personal fortune.

Engrossed in the activity of criticizing and accruing, warped by the American drive to be forever doing something, we seem unable to enjoy those things in life which are ever with us, whatever our circumstances.

Lamenting this attitude typical of America, James Truslow Adams declares "We have been 'doing' for three hundred years. We have cleared and settled a continent. We have accumulated the most colossal store of material power and resources the world has ever seen. Is it not time that we began to think what to do with all our means, what the end is that we wish to attain? Are we forever to continue getting more things in order to get more things with which to get more things, and so on, ad infinitum? Are we forever to seek the means without considering the end for which we seek them?"

Happiness, the universal goal of humanity, is never attained merely through material success. Rather, such achievement has been shown destructive and corrosive to happiness. That state of mind and spirit comes only with the understanding born of an appreciation of the deeper values of life. The inspiration of music, the stimulation of interchange of ideas, the elevation of spirit felt in contemplation of the pure poetry of the natural world untainted by the hard superficialities which attend our supposed "civilization" — these requisites to the full life are omnipresent. They can not be bought. They are ours for the taking.

Would we but relax a bit in our hectic rush to be doing, and feel and see the actual beauty which is permanent, unchanging, life would be so much more worth while for us all.

By MARY MOOTY

"THE PARTY LINE-UP FOR 1936", Paul Mallon, Current History, July, 1935.

Mr. Mallon is convinced the trend of American politics, in thought as well as technique, continues to concern the two major parties. Whereas the Republican party has heretofore been dominant, with only an occasional Democratic setup thrown in to serve as a chastiser, the latter group at present seems definitely in the ascendancy.

Much of the party's potential power for the future lies in the powerful political machine which the New Deal has built up. Mr. Mallon cites three groups which may be depended upon for support in the coming election; namely, the officeholders, the indirect beneficiaries, and all people directly benefited by government policy such as the Civilian Conservation Corps, persons on relief and the recipients of farm benefit payments.

Long and Coughlin are but negative political factors in the eyes of Mr. Mallon. He sees rather than any third party formation, improvement in technical organization within the Democratic party and its advocation of program of economic change.

"DUST BLOWING", Avis D. Carlson, Harpers, July, 1935.

Dismissing all purely descriptive facts which concern the recent dust storms of the middle west, Mrs. Carlson deals with such basic factors as have caused the present trouble. She finds them to be three: destruction of the native grasses of the region by unrestricted herding, a poor land policy, and the limitations imposed by the capitalistic system. The first of these, destruction of the grass, has lead to drouth and a loosening of the top soil.

In settling the west, homesteads were laid out in such small acreages as to be almost inadequate toward supplying a livlihood. This fact along with the expense of farming under a capitalistic set-up has necessitated the use of a dust mulch as an economic measure. Consequently the sustained drouth of the past two years created havoc in this region

Mrs. Carlson has no fears lest the middle west revert to a desert, but she is firm in the belief that only organized scientific planning by a central authority can avert serious damage in the future.

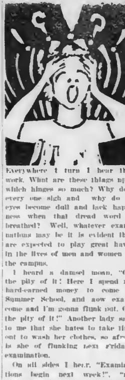
"SHALL WE SCRAP THE CONSTITUTION? A DEBATE", Paul Blanchard and Glenn Frank, Forum, August, 1935.

Shall we scrap the constitution? Yes, thinks Mr. Blanshard, because it is too inflexible for use in a democratic country, allowing minority control as it does. It is impractical, he believes, since it imposes upon us an artificial and obsolete distinction between executive and legislative functions. Furthermore central control of our economic life is prevented and our labor codes lack unity because we adhere to this constitution. Likewise it frustrates our need for compulsory social insurance and permits no program for sound economic planning.

Shall we scrap the constitution? No, Dr. Frank insists. For the constitution is not a dead issue but a workable compromise for present day government. It lies between the dangerous extremes of centralized tyranny and an aimless anarchy. A re-draft of the constitution would be highly colored by our immediate need for efficiency. And this, Dr. Frank believes, would unquestionably lead to Fascism.

Examinations!

By JANILEE RHYNE



Everywhere I turn I hear that work. What are these things upon which hinges so much? Why does every one sigh and why do all eyes become dull and lack happiness when that dread word is breathed? Well, whatever examinations may be it is evident they are expected to play great havoc in the lives of men and women on the campus.

I heard a damsel moan, "Oh, the pity of it! Here I spend my hard-earned money to come to Summer School, and now exams come and I'm gonna flunk out. Oh, the pity of it!" Another lady says to me that she hates to take time out to wash her clothes, so afraid is she of flunking next Friday's examination.

On all sides I hear, "Examinations begin next week!", "my teacher is giving four examinations instead of one." "Oh! woe is me; I have three examinations Monday and a date on Sunday Oh woe!"

We're all gone nuts on the subject. Oh, what are these terrible things called examinations? So potent are they, so filled with dread that the very shadow cast by this coming event changes a comparatively sensible campus into one that is strange and unknown to me. Verily, examinations must be the greatest crisis that men and women are called upon to face!

Book Reviews

By STANMORE CAWTHON

Busy readers will welcome a chance to read economics in short doses, just as they sometimes like to read short stories. Twelve essays, each about a different aspect of contemporary economics, have been compiled into a single book. J. G Smith edited this collection of essays and very wisely chose the title "Facing the Facts". The essays are from twenty to thirty pages long and are surprisingly comprehensive considering their relative brevity. For the most part, they are written in a style that is much simpler and easier for the layman to understand than are many economic treatises.

Each essay is written by a different man and each of the twelve authors is a recognized authority in the particular field of which he writes. Several of the authors have become Rooseveltian braintrusters since the book was written. This fact in itself is enough to show the liberal character of their economic philosophy.

The book was published in 1932, but instead of being out of date today, it is very much in step with present trends in economic thinking. One of the best essays in the book is the one in which Leslie Thomas Fournier sternly indicts utility holding companies in a plea for more strict regulation of public utilities. Another topic discussed in the book has also become a vital issue since the book appeared: the Federal Budget. Harley L. Lutz, prominent financial authority, gives us the startling view that a balanced budget is nothing for to worry about unless normal e penditures cause it to be unb anced. He points out that it is v tually impossible to go through a crisis such as a war or a financ panic without the ordinary bud being knocked a little askew

The book is divided into th parts. The first group of four cha ters treats of topics within t broad field of public finan money, taxation, tariff, and pub debts. The next division is co posed of five chapters which d particularly with some of the r cent developments in business ganization and practice. Fin the third division discusses subj that affect the life of the man in America: liquor contr plight of the farmer, and un ployment.

Take my advice and read th book. It will be time well spe even with exams close upon u will give you a well coordina view of the problems we are ing and some of the cures that will be forced to adopt

Mr. Rickards read excerpts from the addresses of several outstanding men at the convention, where most widely discussed was the question of academic freedom.

The new president of the association, Mr. Rickard reported, is Miss Agnes Samuelson, state superintendent of Iowa, who succeeds Henry L. Smith.

A feature of the convention was the awarding of prizes by the State Teachers magazine to those who had contributed the best articles to the magazine. Mrs. W. M. Bottelle of the laboratory school at Gainesville won one of the first prizes.

INSTITUTE CLOSES

Teachers, and the third, an afternoon lecture course given by Mrs. Roe before parents, teachers, delegates, and visitors.

State officers of the congress in attendance at the institute were: Mrs. H. Sumner Covey, of Daytona Beach, president; Mrs. M. H. Tallman, of Miami, first vice president; and Mrs. H. T. Humphries, of Jacksonville, sixth vice president.

According to Mrs. Covey, it is expected that through this year's institute, a much better understanding and a closer relationship will be effected between the parents and teachers of Florida. Many new parent-teacher associations are expected to be organized throughout the state this fall as a result of the institute, she said.

The annual state summary of parent-teacher association reports was given by Mrs. H. Sumner Covey, of Daytona Beach, president of the state association, in the session Wednesday afternoon conducted by Mrs. Roe.

Mrs. Covey announced the theme for the coming year in parent-teacher study will be the study of the safeguarding of wholesome family life. "The association will continue its efforts," she stated "in placing art, music and physical education back on the mandatory list."

In reviewing the projects and activities of the past year, Mrs. Covey said that the following were the most outstanding: juvenile protection, community needs, adult education, child welfare, purchasing of books for libraries, recreation provided on school grounds, a wise use of leisure time, tea dances for high school students, safety, health and citizenship projects.

Mrs. Covey urged that the local units report their activities to the state congress. As much valuable work is being done of which they have no record.

"The aims of the Parent-Teacher association," explained Mrs. Charles E. Roe in her lecture Tuesday afternoon, "is to provide better homes, better schools and better communities, for happier children. If the Parent-Teacher association functions properly throughout the year", she continued, "these aims can be accomplished through study, action, and fellowship."

Mrs. Roe asked the question, "How are we going to get the people interested?" "The people will grow interested in the work," she answered her question, "only when the committees of an association function efficiently and happily. The P. T. A., she asserted, "has in its hands the power to develop between the educators and the general public such united efforts as will secure for every child the highest advantages in physical, spiritual, and moral education. Through this organization home service, character education and international relations can be greatly improved."

In comparing Florida to other states Mrs. Roe praised the activities of the state very highly. She state that Florida and Texas are the only two states that conduct annual parent-teacher institutes.

The F. E. Compton company has on exhibit on the lower floor of the administration building encyclopedia and picture teaching material covering all of the subjects from the elementary grades through high school.

This work has been placed on the market because of the new curriculum. It will prove helpful to teachers of geography, social science and history. The reading and spelling of the pupils is also aided by this new method of teaching.

Until this year only the encyclopedia was on the market. Now these pictures are worked up into complete units and the encyclopedia is not needed.

Mr. W. D. Bradbury is in charge of the exhibit here. He is covering all of the teachers training schools in the state. According to Mr. Bradbury the students at Florida State College for Women have shown more interest in the exhibit than students at any college he has attended.

College Students Have Place In Parent-Teacher Movement Says Roe

"Better homes, better schools, and better communities for happier children:" this slogan of the Parent-Teacher's Association serves likewise as the organization's general aim, said Mrs. Charles Roe, national instructor of the national congress of parents and teachers in an interview yesterday. These national purposes are repeated in the state and local groups as the association works toward them through activities, projects, and programs dealing with parent education, intelligent home and school cooperation and community betterment.

The national congress has as its topic this year "The home as the index to national life," while the Florida congress is studying "Safeguarding wholesome family life." These topics will be emphasized in addition to the general aims of perfecting homes, schools and communities for child welfare, Mrs. Roe stated.

Accomplishments of the past year include support of public education, development of parent education, maintenance of study groups, and a program of summer round-up for children. In over forty states parent-teacher support was actively given last year to bills before state legislatures that provided for school finance and support. The local Parent-Teachers Associations have reported that about eight thousand study groups have completed courses of study concerning the nature and needs of the child, while over ninety thousand children who entered school for the first time last September have gone through the summer round-up clinic for the discovery of remedial defects. The special achievement of the past year has been the emphasis placed upon homemaking by the local Parent-Teacher Associations under the impetus of the homemaking program of the national congress.

"The college girl has an important role to play in connection with the Parent-Teacher movement", said Mrs. Roe. She emphasized the opportunity this organization affords for expression of what theories of child guidance she has learned in college. Material thus gained may be forgotten before the student begins to rear her own family unless she puts it into practice with an organization where it can function. If college students are at all interested in adult education, a beginning may be made through the Parent-Teachers Association. Mrs. Roe also referred to the vast number of students preparing to teach who would almost automatically be afforded an interest and an opportunity in connection with the organization's program.

ABYSINNIAN QUESTION

tries. The immediate occasion for the critical situation at the present time is a clash between the Italian troops and native escorts of a joint Anglo-Abyssinia commission. The Abyssinian government made complaint to Italy who refused arbitration and demanded damages. Mussolini sent armies to Erotia and Semaliland. Abyssinia reported and appealed to the league to take steps for peace. In cooperation with the league Italy agreed to give up demands for apolgy and damages. Plans are being made for a joint-commission to reach some agreement. If this is not decided by July 25, 1935, the question goes back to the League."

"It looks as if Abyssinia is to be dissolved in nation," concluded Dr. Shores.

Library Gets Rare Volumes

Fifteen Valuable Books Depict America Of Colonial Days

Through the committee on Historical association the library "Americana" of the American received fifteen rare books on early American history this week.

Among them are Capt. John Smith's "Generall Historie of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles", printed in London in 1624 and a supplementary edition entitled "True Travels, Adventures and Observations," printed in 1630; and "A New Discovery of a Vast Country in America," (1699), by Lewis Hennepin, a companion of LaSalle and one of the first to describe the great Mississippi valley.

Thomas Jefferson's "Notes on the State of Virginia" (1787), which were written in answer to an inquiry of the Marquis de Barbe-Marbois, secretary of the French Legation in Philadelphia, is of unusual value to collectors, one copy having sold for five hundred dollars at a recent auction, according to Miss Louise Richardson, librarian.

Others are Jonathan Lind's "an Answer to the Declaration of the American Congress" on a fifth edition printed in 1776, and "History and Present State of Virginia" (1705) by Robert Beverley, a native of Virginia and clerk of the council when Andros was governor.

Because of its high standing this library was invited to share in a cooperative plan to purchase early "Americana", and thereby bears only one-half the cost of these original volumes, the other half being a gift.

an obnoxious individual who asked in a challenging tone of voice, "Are you a grower?" Somewhat taken aback at first the representative answered, "I'm as much a grower as you are: I have three trees, and you probably don't have any."

And the school funds fight goes on. Now the Florida Education association has withdrawn support from the plan which seemed most likely to go through. Mr. Henry Filer, president of the organization, wrote, "passage of the recovery act by the house leaves the recently proposed program of school revenue so indefinite that it cannot be considered dependable. Therefore, the Florida Education association is compelled to withdraw its support from that program."

Senator Beacham of West Palm Beach commented on the action, "I want this school lobby to lay off me as one senator. I think every member of this senate is as capable of judging the financial condition of the schools as their high-paid head lobbyist. The lobby has raised a large sum from the under-paid school teachers of this state."

And now the solons would have the Spanish game of jai-alai come under the same regulations and taxes as racing does.

For those girls seeking recreation during examination week down at the capitol, we suggest as added entertainment, the hazardous climb to the Capital dome. The view of Tallahassee is worth it.

West Initiated Into Honorary

Mrs. Helen Hunt West was initiated into Alpha Chi Alpha, journalistic honorary, Monday evening in the Dean W. C. Dodd's office with Elaine Klepper, president of the local chapter, presiding. Mrs. West and members of the honorary had dinner in the college dining hall before the service and gathered at Louise Robertson's home after the initiation to complete the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. West, one of the most outstanding newspaper women in the state, is an alumna of Florida State College and was editor of the "Talisman," the only student publication of the college in 1908. She began her journalistic career with an article on the engineering project of the east coast railway which won for her a position in the magazine department of the National Engineering Society, but she refused the offer, feeling herself more adapted for writing in the southern states.

She has worked on St. Augustine papers, and for many years was a reporter and society editor for the Jacksonville Times Union. Last summer, as vice president of the Women's Party, she lobbied in Washington for the passage of the women's equal rights bill as an amendment to the constitution.

At a meeting of the physical education association Tuesday night, Beth Daane was elected president, Marian Weeks, vice president, and Felicia West, secretary-treasurer for the coming year.

During the meeting plans were made for a dinner to be given Friday night in the dining room in honor of the senior physical education majors, and Miss Marjorie Mayer, and Miss Mildred Stewart. Miss Mayer is expecting to teach in the University of Colorado next year, while Miss Stewart will take a leave of absence for further study in her field. Caroline Oliver and Viola Brooks are in charge of arrangements for the dinner.

The association is composed of students majoring in the field of physical education.

Junior Class Officers Elected Tuesday Night

At the meeting of the incoming junior class held Tuesday night officers for next year were chosen. Mary Miller was elected president of the class; Sue Whitaker, vice president; Peggy McMichael, secretary; Betty Mack, treasurer; Hazel Viertel, athletic manager; Marie Taylor and Marie Spurlock, representatives to Senate.

Mary Jeanne McKay was elected chairman of Odd Demonstration; Betty Peck, chairman of Junior Minstrel; Marjorie Moore, chairman of Fealty. Peggy McMichael and Dimples Turner were re-elected cheerleaders.

Students Meet P. T. A. Leaders

Safeguarding of Education Is Goal Of Association Says Director

The following visiting officers of the Florida Parent-Teachers Association and national congress of teachers were presented to the F. S. C. W. students, at convocation last Tuesday: Mrs. H. Sumner Covey, of Daytona Beach, State president of P. T. A., Mrs. M. H. Tallman, of Miami, first vice president, Mrs. H. T. Humphries, of Jacksonville, sixth vice president, and Mrs. Charles E. Roe, of Washington, D. C., national instructor of the national congress of parents and teachers.

Dr. Conradi, president of Florida State College, introduced Mrs. Covey, who brought greetings to teachers from the Florida and the national congress of teachers, of which this association is a branch.

Mrs. Covey then presented Mrs. Roe, who spoke to the audience, using as her subject, "And a Little Child Shall Lead Them." The child's success, as stated by Mrs. Roe, depends on constant and intelligent cooperation—a real partnership based on the understanding of what home and school are doing. This year the theme and goal of the Parent-Teachers Association is the safeguarding of education. Requests for appropriations are based on the needs of the child. Foundations are being laid to fit children for life situations, and the home and school must be depended upon for help.

SOCIAL WORK

have the educational background necessary to acquire professional education.

Because of inadequately trained personnel and because of the necessity of dealing with large numbers of clients, there is a tendency to handle differently the problems due primarily to unemployment, and those due more particularly to other causes. This has led to the development of the Works Progress Administration to provide for the former, the local social agencies being left the responsibility for the involved case work problems.

Social work is a profession appealing to those interested in perfecting the functioning of our social institutions. It seeks to adjust those thrown out of step by rapid social changes. It is concerned in making practical the American ideal of democracy—an equal opportunity for all. It is endeavoring to preserve uniqueness of personality, while helping the too "different" person to fit into the social order. It is increasingly performing the welfare function of government, especially in the interests of the aged, the unemployed and of children.

A sound knowledge of the social and biological sciences is prerequisite to professional training for social work. The professional training now given in some thirty graduate schools consists of those specialized fields of knowledge and those techniques basic to such social therapy. The idea of an internship such as is required of medical students is gaining a place in the thinking of educators in this field. There is a challenge and opportunity for men and women thus equipped to enter a new profession with roots going back to the earliest days of men living in groups and helping each other to meet the hazards of life.

Graduates To Meet At Home Of Finner

There will be a meeting of all standard four-year graduates and the graduate students of Florida State College at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Paul Finner Thursday evening, August 1, 8 o'clock

As part of the program, graduates receiving their Master's degree will give a review of their work and the problems they have solved.

In the receiving line will be Dr. Edward Conradi: Miss Louise Conradi: Dean Olive W. Dorman, Miss Maud Flowers, Miss Florence Tryon, Mrs. Leslie.

Kaye Warren and Helenmary Fritsch will serve punch. Assisting Mrs. Finner as hostesses will be Miss Sarah Burwell, treasurer of the alumnae association, Mrs. T. Moer, Mrs. Frances Johnston, Mrs. Arthur West, Mrs. Lillian Cross, Mary Schornhurst.

pus in return for their education. We cannot say enough in praise of the determination which drives these worthy members of our college to defy long and loudly the spray or any other method used to discourage their further pursuit of education. Such an attitude might be profitably emulated by their lesser contemporaries, the regular students.

Our four-legged friends prefer to audit their courses rather than follow the usual academic procedure. In order to get a liberal and varied education, they never stay long in any one class, but wander hurridly from one classroom to another. Recreationally, gamboling on the green appeals to them more than ping-pong, croquet or any other campus sport. One, however, did go down to playnite a week or two ago, and according to all reports, enjoyed himself thoroughly. As their contribution to extra-curricula activities, they have formed a glee club, performing at all hours with or without a request. By dint of constant practice this canine chorus has become so skilled in the past few weeks that the "do-re-mi" songsters, composed of summer school students, have challenged them to a joint-musical. Today our only wonder is how we ever got along before this distinguished group of doggy students came to our school.

A friendly big sister attitude has been adopted by the campus at large toward these—our promising freshman class. Several students have remarked on their affectionate and lovable natures. One girl, in an effort to reciprocate the affection lavished on her skirt, remarked that she hoped some one would give those dogs a bath. Another girl is so pleased with this sample that she wonders if any more are coming. Everyone, matrons, students and faculty, all have become interested enough in their progress to wish them a speedy and happy graduation.

Since I first started writing an appreciation of our star borders, the dogs, reports have come that some have left our campus and turned to other fields of interest. Why? Can it be that college dogmatism has proved too much for them!

MUSIC SCHOOL REVEALS INCREASED ENROLLMENT

The school of music has the largest enrollment in the history of Florida State College summer school. There are 25 students majoring in the department besides students enrolled from other schools who are electing subjects in music.

Mrs. Harold Tyler and her two-year-old daughter, Peggy Ann, will be visitors on the campus next week. They are enroute to their home in Atlanta after a visit in Tampa. Mrs. Tyler will be remembered at F. S. C. W as Miss Martha McKnight. She was a student here, and served several years on the Flambeau staff.

New Courses Are Presented For Freshmen

Contemporary Civilization Is Combination Of Four Studies

LIBERALITY IN CURRICULUM SEEN

Others Are Geography, Home Economics Open To All Students

Four new courses have been added to the curricula of Florida State College for Women, according to S. R. Doyle, registrar.

The courses are a freshman journalism course, a freshman course in the social studies, a survey course in home economics open to all students, and a geography course in the conservation of natural resources.

Freshman Journalism Offered

This is the first year that a freshman course in journalism has been offered. The new course "Introduction to Modern Journalism" treats with the origin, development and influence of the periodical press on social forces, with emphasis placed on contemporary journalism. Newspapers and magazines are studied in order to create interest in current events, and to demonstrate methods of getting information about current affairs. Earl Vance, associate professor of English and journalism, is instructor.

Courses Are General

The course in social studies, known as the "Introduction to Contemporary Civilization" is open to freshmen only, and is designed to introduce students to the contribution which the social studies make to an understanding of modern civilization.

Following a series of open forums last spring, plans for this course began to take shape, their composers guided by student opinion and popular demand. The course is to be a combination of history, social science, political science, and economics, giving to the freshmen enough of a survey of each to introduce him to more specialized studies of contemporary civilization in any of its phases he may choose to pursue.

The course is designed to acquaint the student with the purpose and functions of the home and family in society today. Leisure time activities, budgeting of the income, the relation of good nutrition to health, and the relation of dress to social and economic efficiency are studied as factors of successful living.

The home economics course was added to the curriculum at the request of the college senate after a number of students expressed the wish for a study dealing with a general survey of problems in the field of home economics.

The geography course presents the need for the conservation of forests, minerals, soils, wild game, and land and water resources in the country. H. F. Becker, associate professor of geography, is the instructor.

Dodd Speaks In First Assembly

Faculty Attends as Conradi Welcomes Students

What college does for and to a girl was the subject chosen by Dr. Dodd at the first convocation of the school year Tuesday. Dr. Dodd pointed out that the good in college is not only in its "contacts" but also in making available information and the opportunity to coordinate knowledge after it has been acquired.

Dr. Dodd told students that a girl could enjoy the aesthetic appeal of music, artists' series, drama, and the campus itself if she would take the time, and he pointed out also that the best of human contacts with faculty and students are available on this campus.

Convocation was attended by the faculty, who marched in, headed by Dr. Conradi, and followed by members of the senior class. Dr. Conradi spoke a few words in greeting which he terminated with a short prayer. He then introduced Miss Augusta Murphy, associate professor of violin, formerly of New York, who played Vreisler's arrangement of Conperin's "Chanson Louis XIII and Pavane."

Rich Freshman Again Appears

Mysterious Millionairess Still Unknown Among Classmates

"Rich! I'll say she is. Why, she has a personal maid, a chauffeur, and Marian told me that a whole suite of furniture has been put into the girl's room. Can you imagine it?" . . . And amid such exclamations the fabulously rich freshman arrives at the Florida State College for Women each fall.

Mysterious as it would seem, however, no one ever actually meets this freshman. Perhaps she gives up in disgust after the first day of dormitory life and departs for another campus. Or maybe she sends the maid and the chauffeur away with her regrets. At any rate these two are never seen about the campus after freshman week, and upperclasmen as well as the freshmen look in vain for their comrade with the overstuffed suite of furniture.

Surprisingly enough this same freshman continues to come to Florida State College every fall, and each year no one fails to lend a credulous ear to the same old story, concocted, no doubt, by some capricious upperclassman in an attempt to dupe the new class.

Fifteen Join Faculty Ranks

Five Members of College Staff Will Spend Year in Study

Fifteen new faculty members, five of whom are filling vacancies made by instructors who are now on leaves of absence, have been engaged by Florida State College for Women, making a total of 141 faculty members for the term of 1935-36. Two nurses and a joint secretary for the dean of students and the dean of the school of music have also been employed.

Dr. Rhey Boyd Parsons of Mayville, Kentucky, has been appointed superintendent of the demonstration school and associate professor of education. Dr. Parsons holds the Ph.D. degree from the University of Chicago. He has formerly been connected with Baylor College, the University of Tennessee, and the University of Oklahoma.

Dr. Sarah Parker White is the new orthopedic physician and teacher for the college. Dr. White received her Ph.D. from Cornell University and for ten years has been a physician at Syracuse university.

Dr. Gladys Freed, of Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, will teach in the classics department. Miss Freed received her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

Miss Fern Boan, of Chicago, Illinois, has been appointed associate professor of sociology. Miss Boan received her M.A. degree from the University of Chicago.

Miss Betty Washburn, of Frankport, Michigan, and Miss Nellie Bond Dickenson of Wilson, N. C., both holding M.A. degrees from Columbia University, will serve as instructors in physical education.

Miss Margaret Campbell, of Ft. Pierce, who received an M.A. degree at the recent summer session of Florida State, will instruct in the English department. Mrs. Mary B. Alfriend of Tallahassee and another alumna of F. S. C. W. will also be an instructor in the English department.

Miss Helen Davis, for the past several years assistant dietitian of the college, will now also serve as an instructor in institution economics. Miss Davis received a B.S. degree from Florida State.

Three of the new faculty members who will teach in the Demonstration school are: Miss Martha G. Chapman, of Orlando; Miss Elizabeth Hutt, of Beaufort, S. C.; and Miss Ruth DeGraff, of St. Petersburg. Miss Chapman received a B.S. in Education from Florida State, and an M.A. degree from George Peabody College in Nashville, Tennessee. Miss Hutt is an instructor of foreign languages and received an M.A. degree from the University of South Carolina. Miss DeGraff will act as elementary critic teacher in the Demontsration school. She received an A.B. degree from Florida State.

Dr. Lunn L. Ralya, associate professor of education, who holds a Ph.D. degree from the University of Wisconsin, is supplying for Dr. Ralph Lee Eymar. Dr. Eyman is filling the position of a

De Montigue Is Librarian

Louise Robertson, formerly on the Flambeau staff, is now a reporter on the Daily Democrat, and Carolina DeMontigne, president of the student body last year, is librarian at Landon high school, Jacksonville.

Sara Wilkerson, past president of Panhellenic, will teach at a school in Jacksonville this year, and Frances Parks will soon begin her duties as history instructor and basketball coach at Monticello high school.

Barbara Garfunkel, editor of the Flambeau last year, is instructor in journalism at Miami high school, and Nedra McNamara, a reporter on the Flambeau last year, is teaching in Miami also.

Jennie Rae Nall, past president of Y.W.C.A., has a secretarial position at WQAM, radio station, Miami, and Caroline Attanasio has a stenographic position at the Capitol building here.

Georgia Ruth Work, chairman of house chairmen last year, is doing social service work in Jacksonville, while Mary Elizabeth Cooley is employed by the McFadden Publications of New York.

Among those who are doing graduate work are Martha Whitaker, who plans to attend Yale university this year; Margaret Nickle, who will attend the University of Toronto in Toronto, Canada, and Helenmary Fritch, who is continuing her studies here.

Edith Patterson will study international law at the University of Chicago, Florence Jennings will continue her studies in psychology at Johns Hopkins, where she has a scholarship, and Mildred Boss will study retailing at New York university, where she also has a scholarship. Melvyne Wahniah plans to study at Columbia university this winter.

Lecture Series Plans To Be Formulated Soon

No definite plans concerning a lecture series for F. S. C. W. during the coming term have yet been formulated, according to Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel. These lecture programs, designed for the enjoyment and edification of the students of Florida State College for Women, are arranged each year by the Daytona Beach Forum.

Premature Appearance of Autumn Fashions Seen on College Campus

New Style Features Show Shorter Skirts, Old World Trends

Although nature has given but slight evidence of autumnal behavior, winter fashions with all their dashing hues are being displayed on the campus of Florida State College.

With the beginning of rush week freshmen began the style parade. At a glance one can tell that their carefully groomed appearance took hours of laborious preparation.

At a glance one can distinguish the upperclassmen from the freshmen. 'Tis not by any marked distinction, but one "just knows." In sharp contrast to the well-groomed freshman is the senior. We find her strolling about the campus in the good old standby, last year's sweater and skirt, or perhaps a favorite wash dress. Her feet are encased in comfortable walking oxfords. To the dignity of the senior we pay our tributes, but to the freshman—ah! we cast envious glances.

Who is this walking toward us? Surely it can't be a Renaissance character brought to life. No, it is only a fellow student in one of the new halo hats. These off-the-face, but not quite off-the-head millinery creations add an air of innocence and youth to almost any face. They are held in place by a clever little gadget which snuggles under the curls at the nape of the neck, and baffles science professors by seeming to defy all laws of gravitation. Then, too, there is the hat which has an insect-like appearance—with antennae and all up front. One almost feels tempted to scratch it and see if it can crawl.

"Going up! Going up." oNt the Gilchrist elevator but fall skirts. Twelve inches from the ground they've gone already and who knows the next stop?

"Going up! oGing up." Not the perfectly matched people. Now don't jump at conclusions—we do not mean the ideal couple, but those students whose attire is faultless, even to a matching flower in the hair, and who are the despair of their classmates.

So in this mixed-up campus world what is one to do? One wears one's fall clothes while summer is still here, one's winter clothes in autumn, and in December the spring hats and suits appear. It doesn't make sense—but after all, there is nothing like the thrill that comes from being "one of the first" to step out in new attire to herald the coming of the next season.

AAUW Will Meet Monday

The Tallahassee branch of the AAUW will hold its first meeting of the year Monday night at the home of Mrs. C. P. Heinlein, 904 West Park Avenue. This meeting will be devoted to business purposes and will be in charge of Miss Anna Forbes Liddell, president of the AAUW.

Officers of the AAUW for this year are, besides Miss Liddell, Mrs. Heinlein, first vice-president; Miss Sadie Young, second vice-president; Miss Sarah Herndon, recording secretary; Miss Lillian Cross, corresponding secretary; and Miss Edith Lynn, treasurer. Miss Helen McKean is chairman of the publicity committee.

Psychology Tests Will Be Repeated

Those freshmen and transfer students who did not take the psychological test during freshman week are requested by Miss Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel, to report to room 203 administration building on Saturday, September 21, at 8:45 a. m. They are asked to come promptly and to bring two pencils with them to the test, which is required of all new students in Florida State College.

Harpers Lauds Distaff's Work

National Scholastic Press Gives Magazine First Class Rating

Tribute was again paid to the high quality of writing being done by the students of Florida State College, when Lucy Fulghum, editor of the college magazine, The Distaff, last year, rceived during the summer a letter from Harper's Magazine complimenting the staff on the general high quality and particularly the critical articles of The Distaff.

Harper's had already awarded first prize in its third national prize essay contest to Edna Hoffman, graduate of Florida State College for Women and former member of the Flambeau staff, for her article "And They Call It Relief" which appeared in The Distaff last year. Another article, "Religion Comes of Age," by Louise Robertson, associate editor of the Flambeau last year, was accepted for publication by the Literary Workshop, a journal of student work published in New York.

For the first time The Distaff was given first class rating this year by the National Scholastic Press Association, an organization which rates and criticizes college publications. The Flambeau, weekly college newspaper, has received the same rating from this organization twice and the All-American Award, highest rating given, three times.

The letter to Miss Fulghum was signed by Frederick L. Allen, associte editor of Harpers', as well as author of Only Yesterday and other well known works.

His letter says in part: "We regard it as a compliment that you have sent us four copies of The Distaff with a request for our criticism. And we are glad to compliment you in return on the general high quality of the magazine, particularly the critical articles. They, we believe, seem more mature and at the same time fresher and more original than the fiction. Possibly that is because the fiction is about the usual grade of good undergraduate performance and you have contrived to raise t critical work above this level.

"The make-up of the magazine shows definite improvement although the margins are not yet perfect and the initials are not entirely in harmony with the sans serif titles. But the illustrations —especially Miss Moore's and Miss Whitaker's work—are excellent."

300 Qualified For B Average Last Semester

Senior Class Leads List With a Count of 95 On Approbation

Aspiring Frosh Provide Yearly Campus Laughs

Sagacious Upperclassmen Enjoy Usual "Breaks" Of the Lowly

"And then there was the freshman," is a phrase getting to be as common as, "That wasn't no lady: that was my wife." Unlike the old-timer, however, the former story grows better each year.

Of course, you heard the newcomers thundering down to breakfast at 7:30 o'clock Saturday morning, just as you were turning over for a second beauty nap, but maybe you didn't hear the little number from this year's crop of green-horns who exclaimed upon seeing the silver crossed at the tables in the dining-hall, "What a cute new way to set a table!"

One freshman, during the posture exam at the gym, announced that she would "go back home to Mother" rather than take gym in those immodest angel robes—all the while clutching said robe frantically.

Still another frosh, when asked to serve the plums at breakfast, timidly inquired if they weren't to be served for dessert.

During registration, one member of the lowly class, told Dr. X not to sign her up for Dr. X's class because she had heard he was hard as nails. Dr. X, with an expression of chagrin, did not sign the young lady for his class.

After church Sunday one aspiring frosh hurried up the aisle, asking everyone if she knew the attractive preacher. "I want to meet some of the better element in this town", was her assertion. Apparently, she did not know of the existence of a better element on campus.

"And then there was the freshman—"

YWCA Furthers Project Schemes

Recreation Center to Be Established at La Fayette Park

The Young Women's Christian Association recreation project which came into existence last May at a gathering at the Y. W. C. A. hut is now getting under way as a definite program for the coming year. The idea of the center was conceived by Lucy Gee Linn, president of the Y. W. C. A., and Gladys Oliver, chairman of the committees for the new project.

The aims of establishing this new center are to help in character building of children and to serve as a means of enlisting more girls on this campus in Y. W. work, which is to be carried on through the medium of committees. The following have been chosen to serve: program committee, Beth Daane, Mildred Emmelhainz, and as adviser, Miss Dorothy White of the physical education department; survey committee, Elizabeth Kirby-Smith and Anita Jones; administration committee, Catherine Barrs and Carol Farabee.

Helen Kierce, a transfer student from Louisville, Kentucky, who is specializing in social case work, has had experience in recreational leadership, and is interested in Y. W. C. A. work, has been appointed FERA assistant for the entire project.

The site for carrying out the playground activities is the Lafayette Park, which is in the northeast section of the city near Los Robles. The recreation center is under the auspices of the Exchange club of Tallahassee, which is working with the college group. A special committee of the club has been at work on the project during the past summer months, and the Exchange members expect to furnish the equipment necessary for the center.

The recreational park will be open from 3:30 to 5:30 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons, and its activities are to consist of games, story-telling, handicraft, dramatics, and musical activities. The children attending the center will come from the ages of three to 12 years, and children from all over the city are invited to come.

Students on campus interested in assisting at the center are asked to notify any committee member at once.

Slides shown at local theaters, announcements and posters in schools all over the city, P. T. A. publicity campaigns, and news-

Student Heads Take New View On Regulations

Blood, Graham Assume Active Leadership In College

Many Revisions Are Made In Social Conduct Regulations

An aggressive position on matters of college government policy has been taken by Katherine Blood, president of the student-body. In an address to the members of the freshman clas recently she told the students that "respect, honor and consideration are prerequisites for entering this college, and sincerity, firmnes of purpose, friendliness, and the desire to gain a well-rounded education are expected."

Judiciary Takes Liberal Stand

Notable liberalization in social regulations for students at Florida State College for Women for the 1935-36 session is the stand taken by Margaret Graham, chairman of the judiciary.

The new privileges granted this year, while not considered experimental in nature, are expected to meet with such cooperation from students that a basis will be laid for further liberalization in the future.

Constructive work on the operation of the honor system is also planned by the judiciary this year under the guidance of Margaret. According to her, though the enforcement of rules is necessary, the construction of an honorable, social-minded and responsible attitude of citizenship will be the main objective of the judiciary during the school term.

Plans for carrying out the educational policies which were decided upon by the college government asociation last year have been made definite and are as follows: reorganization of the freshman advisory council, regular meetings of the upperclassmen as a body, informal gatherings of faculty and students, more extensive preparation for performance of official duties, strengthening of the tie between the day students and the campus, enlarged activities of the freshman commission, and inauguration of a campus program in cooperation with the National Student Federation of America.

Important revisions in college government by-laws, going into effect this fall include the regulations concerning riding with men. A senior may ride at any time. A junior may ride in the day-time and to and from town at night. Two or more sophomores or freshmores going together may ride in the daytime and to and from town at night.

Without signing up students may ride in the daytime to and

Organization Will Arouse Student Opinion

The most recently organized of all student groups on campus, the local unit of the National Student Federation of America, is drawing up definite plans for the year's work, to be presented at its first meeting early in October.

Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman of the unit, states that the organization will conduct two forums each month and sponsor a bulletin board in the administration building on subjects of current interest. Still under consideration are a number of other plans designed to stimulate intelligent and constructive student opinion on questions of national and international importance.

Although Florida State College has been a member of the NSFA for several years, the students had never planned a definite program to link them actively with the other half million members until last May, when the student senate sponsored the organization of a local unit.

The officers elected at the May meeting to serve during the present year are Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman, Marjorie Harris, senior charman, Hazel Bowman, junior chairman, and Phil Asber, secretary.

Summer School Attracts Many

Varied Social Program Is Carried Out During Eight Weeks

Florida State College for Women was opened June 10 for the twenty-second session of summer school with an enrollment of 870, a 21.8 per cent increase in registration over last year. Men and women from 62 counties in Florida and nine other states gathered for this term which came to a close August 2.

One hundred fifteen students were candidates for degrees at the graduation exercises in the college auditorium. W. S. Cawthon, state superintendent of public instruction, delivered the commencement address, while the preceding Sunday, Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the Baptist church, of Tallahassee, gave the baccalaureate sermon.

In addition to the regular school, the college was the scene of two institutes and a convention this summer. The Florida Federation of Women's clubs sponsored a five-day institute June 17-21; the Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers had its second annual institute July 22 to 26, conducted by Mrs. Charles E. Roe, national instructor and field secretary of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

About 70 teachers attended the home economics convention which was held on the campus June 11-18. The twenty-third annual short course for Home Demonstration club girls was held at the college the week ending June 7.

Besides the regular routine of classes the students enjoyed many social activities. The residence directors were hostesses for teas given in the several dormitories for the students and faculty. Friday night was designated as play night in the gymnasium where a variety of entertainment was provided, including ping pong, croquet and shuffle board tournaments. Swimming pageants and dancing programs were other forms of amusements provided at the gym, and following the play nights all students took part in watermelon cuttings in the dining room arcade.

Discussions, informal talks and open forums proved an important part of the extra-curricula activities. The Broward club room each Monday night was the scene of discussions, instructors in the college being invited to speak. With teachers of the college also as speakers, a forum was held each Wednesday evening in the Augusta Conradi theater and many of the professors spoke at special group meetings.

Vesper services were continued through the summer and Dean Opperman presented a series of organ recitals in the college auditorium. Convocation programs, many of which were devoted to special programs, were held each Tuesday. Municipal Judge Charles S. Ausley spoke July 11 at the convocation program which was given over to a memorial service commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of William D. Bloxham, the only man in Florida's history, since statehood was reached, to hold the office of governor twice.

Of interest not only to the summer students, but also to the students now enrolled, is the announcement made in July to the effect that seven members of the faculty of the Florida State College were included in the 1935-38 edition of American Women, the official who's who among the women of the world. Of the 85 names listed from Florida, 11 were from Tallahassee. The list for Tallahassee includes Katherine T. Abbey, professor; Elizabeth G. Andrews, personnel director; Olivia N. Dorman, educator; Viola Graham, educator; Madeline A. Jacobson, lawyer; Anna F. Liddell, professor; Sara W. Partridge; Hazel M. Richards; Louise Richardson, librarian;; Mary L. Richey, assistant professor, and Jennie Tilt, professor.

Among the outstanding social events of the summer were the student-faculty dinner, July 12, and the annual alumnae tea given the last week of school. At list of well-known people, including Gov. David Sholtz, were invited to sit at Dr. Conradi's table at the student-faculty dinner. Graduates of F. S. C. W. summer school were honor guests at the alumnae tea, while members of the faculty, alumnae, members of the graduating class and visiting delegates of the Parent-Teacher association were invited guests.

Kappa Delta Pi, education honor society, pledged and initiated 12 students during the summer session.

An interesting fact about the summer school is that of the 872 students enrolled for the summer session only 33 were men, a slight proportionate decrease from last summer.

from town with persons with whom they are acquainted and whom they know to be in good standing with the college.

Students may use approved taxis without additional registration provided they have made proper arrangements for absence from the campus.

While dancing is still not permitted except at specified hours and places, an informal dance will be held in the gymnasium every Friday night and in one of the residence halls on Saturday nights. Dancing will be permitted in sorority houses on Saturday from 2:30 p. m. to 11 o'clock.

Any student may go alone with her escort to the theater, to luncheon, to dinner or to church. Seniors will have an unlimited number of dates; juniors may have an average of four a week, sophomores three a week and freshmen two a week on Friday, Saturday or Sunday nights.

Parsons to Be New Supervisor

Demonstration School Has Staff Changes

On the staff of the Demonstration school this year are four new members including Dr. Rhey Boyd Parsons, superintendent; Miss Emilie Hett, instructor in modern languages; Miss Martha Chapman, instructor in English; and Miss Ruth DeGraff, fourth grade instructor.

No radical differences in policies atthe Demonstration school will be inaugurated, according to Dr. Parsons, but since it is a laboratory and experimental school he said that he hopes to make the opportunities for students and practice teachers the best possible, striving always for a smoothly organised favorable learning environment.

With the home room plan of organization in use throughout the junior-senior high school Dr. Parsons also plans to have school clubs through which the various scohol activities will be undertaken. Every effort is being made to strengthen extra-curricular activities in the school through an extensive program in music, art, spoken English, and physical education, according to the superintendent.

Dr. Parsons received his B.S., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Chicago. He has been connected with the University of Oklahoma, Baylor college, and more recently associate professor of education at the University of Tennessee.

Miss Hett has the M.A. degree from the University of South Carolina, while Miss DeGraff holds the bachelor's degree from Florida State College for Women. Miss Chapman was graduated from Florida State College with the bachelor's degree and from Peabody college with the master's degree.

member of the education faculty of the University of California who is on a leave of absence from that University. Miss Gladys Garland, instructor in chemistry, with the M.A. degree from the University of Maine, is supplying a fellowship from Duke University out of a list of 200 applicants. Miss Augusta Murphy of New York City, associate professor of violin, is supplying for Miss Anna Mae Sharp.

Miss Mildred Long, assistant professor of home economics, with the M.A. degree from Columbia University, is supplying for Miss Leila Venable.

Miss Nellie Bond Dickenson, instructor in physical education with the M.A. degree from Columbia University, is supplying for Miss Mildred Stewart. Miss Stewart has begun work on a master's degree at Columbia University.

Mrs. Florence M. Cooke, of Jacksonville, Florida, has been appointed head nurse at the college infirmary. Miss Beverly Horn, also of Jacksonville, has become a member of the nursing staff. Miss Margaret Gaillard, former president of the Student Government association of Florida State College and also of Jacksonville, has been employd as secretary to the dean of students and to the dean of the school of music.

New Spoons and Clean Fountain Give Dash to Higher Education

Shiny new cream pitchers, gay flower beds, interesting dining room chandeliers, and a clean fountain are a few of the improvements made on campus this summer. Several upperclassmen have voiced their appreciation of these changes, while college-weary freshmen take them as just another part of higher education.

The cream pitchers made a successful entrance on Tuesday of Freshman week, adding a certain dash to the breakfast table. At dinner gleaming new vegetable spoons made everyone self-conscious about serving. The chandeliers give a pleasingly soft light at dinner, lending a friendly atmosphere.

There is not a freshman on campus who has not taken the boy from home down the walk in front of the Ad building, allowing the flowery border to make the setting right. The new path around the fountain has also been popular, the trickling water reminding one of Niagara Falls. In spite of general satisfaction, there are few souls who can not appreciate the clean fountain. Better dirty and picturesque, they say.

Senate Elects Campus Officers

New Students to Assume Judiciary Duties

The senate of College Government association yesterday elected students to fill vacancies left in campus offices for the current school year.

Marie Spurlock and Betty Peck were selected to be junior representatives to judiciary. Marjorie Moore, who was elected to this position last spring, did not return to school and one additional junior representtive was provided for under recent constitutional changes. Sally Bert Nuzum, a sophomore, was also elected to be a member of judiciary.

At the same meeting Melba Hutchinson was voted to fill the position of house chairman of Bryan hall, succeeding Marjorie Harris who recently resigned.

Other officers selected at this time were seven seniors to comprise the off-campus committee, a new division of judiciary. According to the revised constitution, "the off-campus committee shall be made up of six seniors living off-campus and a chairman of the off-campus committee, who shall also be a senior and live off-campus. Off-campus committe members shall not act as house chairmen in their own houses."

The duties of the committee are to deal with infraction of minor house rules in off-campus houses and to cooperate with the dean of students and the director of off-campus housing in handling any governmental problems which might arise off-campus. Any recommendations made by the comittee will be approved by judiciary.

Members elected to this committee were Nancy Wilkinson, chairman, Carlotta Cubillas, Sara Hosea, Edith Perkins, Harriet Lawrence, Mercia Scott, and Elizabeth Kirby-Smith.

Dormitory Improvements Made With Repairs And Colorful Furnishings

A serving room to be used for teas and receptions in Reynolds hall is one of the many improvements made in the college dormitories during the past summer. New beds and mattresses and freshly painted entrances are additional improvements made in this hall.

The offices and parlors of Gilchrist, Reynolds and Jennie Murphree halls have been repainted, and linoleum has been put down in the halls.

The pressing room in Broward is being repaired and improved at the present time. The atrium between Bryan and Broward halls has been repainted and the roof on Gilchrist repaired.

Furniture in all the dormitories has been repaired and reupholstered, and plans are being made for new curtains and drapes in Gilchrist in the near future

Amateur Sherlock Holmeses Prevent Freshman Starvation

Amateur Sherlock Holmeses have discovered the cause of the unusual abstinence of freshmen in the dining room.

Last week a great deal of concern was felt as buxom freshmen began to grow hollow-cheeked and haggard while dinner plates continued to leave the dining room untouched.

Starvation must be averted at any price so freshman advisers agreed among themselves to start an investigation.

Diplomatic cross-examination revealed a rumor that all freshmen who gain over five pounds of weight on dining room food would be required to pay an extra fee, how much, no one knew, but some one had heard it was exhorbitant!

That the rumor was swiftly denied has since become evident.

"When In Rome—"

Again the great number of new students who annually matriculate at Florida State College is with us. It will not be long, we hope, until the majority of these freshmen will be so oriented into their college life that they will be able to find their particular place on our campus.

This year one of the major changes is in the increased attention given to new students. Several weeks before the opening of school a freshman bulletin containing an abundance of valuable information was sent to each prospective freshman. In this bulletin was an explanation by the dean of students as to the requirements and objectives of college citizenship. A list of social privileges and regulations, the organization of college government association, the organization of residence halls, and the purposes and plans of the Y. W. C. A. were also included.

Familiarity with such essential knowledge before her arrival at the college must undoubtedly give the incoming student a different outlook upon college life. Knowing what privileges she is allowed keeps her from getting into bad habits during the first week and lessens the fear that she might unknowingly be doing something unsocial. For in a community of over sixteen hundred people there must of necessity be some group regulations so that one person will not interfere with the liberty of another.

With her entrance into this large institution the new student will be offered opportunities for scholarly distinction, social or religious leadership, athletic prowess, and for distinction in other activities. However many students who have hitherto been leaders in smaller communities may feel that their contributions will not be needed here. In fact there have probably been many students graduating from Florida State College in previous years who never found their particular niche or sphere of influence.

Now for the first time, however, the participation of freshmen in extra-curricular activities will be placed on a directed and organized basis. During the second semester freshmen will be included in such activities as publications, dramatics, and social life.

But upperclassmen and school officials cannot help a person when she says "nay." If a student who can lead chooses to follow, who only gets by when she could accomplish more, and who sits idle when there is work to do, she will be a liability to her school instead of an asset.

Do the Greeks Have a Word for This?

Florida State College Greeks have just ended their annual "rush week," beginning with formal receptions and lasting through three hectic days of dates. Tuesday, over two hundred students began wearing the pledge emblems of the groups to which they will probably belong for the rest of their lives.

While the conflict of freshman week activities, social functions in honor of the incoming students given by groups and officials not connected with the sororities, registration, entrance examinations and orientation made of this year's rushing season a mad scramble to accomplish the impossible in a negligible amount of time, and so ended with the majority of the campus in a far from calm state of mind, this objection to the new calendar of events is only another to add to the longstanding list of grievances against first term rushing.

Deferred rushing is constantly being attacked on many grounds, with much wailing about the house bill and similar expenses from most of the fraternities. Besides, they contend, a freshman needs her group of ready-made friends to help her get started in the campus social whirl. Pledging should be completed the week before school begins, they say, so it won't interfere with scholastic work. So, taking them at their word, this year Panhellenic set rush week dates so that pledging would end before school started. Conflict after conflict followed, and not only did the freshmen exhibit their usual bewilderment, but upperclassmen, campus officials, and the fraternities themselves were involved in the jumble, out of which they emerged as surprised as the frosh—an unusual affair for F. S. C.

None of these difficulties, however, seem to bother fraternities or freshmen at the University of Michigan, where both systems have been tried, and deferred rushing retained as the best. During the first semester freshmen have time to decide whether they want to join a fraternity, and which one they like the best. Their friendships are not ready-made, but are formed regardless of fraternal affiliations, and they are able to orient themselves in the college curriculum without the distraction of intensive social life. And, still more important, freshmen can evaluate each group at their leisure instead of being forced to depend on snap judgments, the influence of secret promising, the pressure of "hot-boxing," and the gushing personalities of the chapters' crack rushers, "later reminiscent of the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde situation" shrewdly adds the Columbia Missourian, with whom we agree heartily on the subject of deferred rushing. Missouri is urging the trial of second term pledging on the university campus and other colleges are following the precedent of Michigan as well. There students must make a C average this fall to be eligible for rushing, and maintain that average in order to be initiated at mid-term or in the spring.

Panhellenic at F. S. C. has greatly improved rushing conditions on campus with the innovation of the quota system, this year. Deferred rushing is the next, the intelligent, the forward advance.

A Five-Year Plan For Youth

The recent announcement by Dr. George F. Zook, president of the American Council of Education, of a nationwide five-year survey to determine what is being done and what should be done to further the best development of youth into effective citizenship marks the innovation of a subject to which college students might well turn a watchful eye.

Conducting the survey will be a non-government commission appointed by the Council, which will co-ordinate with the National Youth Administration, a new federal agency set up to meet the present emergency facing out-of-school unemployed boys and girls.

Explaining the purpose of the study, Dr. Zook said: "Recent social and economic changes in the United States have given rise to difficulties in the care and education of young people with which existing institutions are quite unprepared to deal adequately. The changes not only have greatly intensified the problems which confront the schools, but also have created an urgent need of protection and further education for millions of youth whom the schools are not reaching."

Invited to serve on the Youth commission are fourteen men and women among whom are such familiar ones as Robert W. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago; Dorothy Canfield Fisher, author; John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education; Lotus D. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota; and William F. Russell, dean of Teachers college, Columbia university. Naturally any venture into which these and other prominent men and women might enter would come in for its share of attention, but especially are we interested in this project for it may help us college students as well as other young people to meet our problems.

Although the Flambeau does not always adhere to ideas and opinions expressed in its Pro and Con column, contributions from all members of the student body are welcomed. Here's the individual student's chance to air that pet theory that her roommate always refuses to listen to. Here's her part of the Flambeau. Bring it on—anything from riddles to recipes—if message is of campus interest, and let other FSCWites argue it—Pro and Con.

WHERE ARE THE YOUNG REBELS?
By Pearl Buck
Harpers, September, 1935

It does us good to see ourselves with all our weaknesses neatly pigeonholed and categoried on the printed page. It makes us resentful and that is good.

With the objectivity of a critical observer in a foreign country yet with the understanding of a fellow countryman come home, Pearl Buck analyzes youth, that is, the so-called "intellectual" youth of this nation.

She finds in this intellectual young of the upper middle classes a "spurious superiority" and a lack of enthusiasm which she attributes to environmental factors. We were nourished, she says, by parents who did not lay down the Iron Rule as their fathers had done for them but who let us grow up to be "different."

Our parents have fought and struggled for us, excusing the "ruts" they get in by the old story of self-sacrifice for the children.

As a result we smile superciliously at their defeat yet we ourselves have not the determination to rebel. Our parents mistakenly did not make us share life and see what life really is, so we become "rebellious against life itself," Mrs. Buck says, yet spiritless with the knowledge of defeat.

Only until institutions and individuals challenge youth to rebellion, she concludes, will we catch that healthy zest for fighting and living toward a "determined individual and achievement."

CONFESSIONS OF A CLERGYMAN
Anonymous
American Mercury, Sept., 1935

Purely personal revelations of a clergyman who goes through none of the conventionalities performed by most preachers and clergymen are set forth in this short article.

This clergyman was ordained 30 years ago and for 30 years he has stayed at his first parrish which, he says, is located in one of America's largest cities. He smokes, drinks a cocktail now and then, and never preaches sermons on temperance, Mother's day, Fire Prevention week, or Anti-tuberculosis day.

Furthermore, he never attends meetings of church federations or women's social organizations, never shakes hands with his congregation after his service (they are anxious to be off on that Sunday afternoon trip, he says) nor does he visit the sick and utter extemporaneous prayers.

Although neither Roman Catholic nor Episcopalian he hates to be called Protestant because Protestant, he says, means a person who protests, who is dissatisfied with life. He is perfectly satisfied with life.

In striving to make ourselves acceptable we merely become artificial, he declares, and concludes there is a field for his type of religion, religion which tries to maintain the traditional form of Christianity yet avoids artificiality and sentimentalism.

SOAKING THE POOR
By Dayton D. McKean
New Republic, September 11, 1935

With newspapers screaming headlines about the recent Soak-the-Rich Congress, McKean comes forward to show with the increasing sales taxes levied by states and cities the wage earner himself may soon be carrying the bent of relief.

Since 1921 when a sales tax was introduced here, 24 states have levied these taxes and 11 states have adopted taxes resembling the sales tax.

In every instance the sales tax falls heaviest on the unemployed and the wage earner since they are forced to buy in small amounts or since they receive an income out of proportion to the wealthy. For example, a sales tax of one per cent takes $2.74 from the $1,000 laborer and 8 cents per thousand dollars of income from the multimillionnaire, according to McKean's figures.

Grocers say the average sale in grocery stores amounts to 23 cents. A one-cent tax on the average sale amounts to 4.3 per cent, according to McKean, so the sales tax falls on the poor many times the legal rate.

The rich buy in large quantities which makes their tax practically negligible or buy outside of their state, McKean says, thus avoiding the sales tax completely.

State chambers of commerce and bankers' associations who continue to urge sales tax instead of income tax, McKean declares, "instead of basing taxes on ability to pay, base them upon inability to resist."

Great Britain has never adopted the sales tax and European countries only as a last resort, McKean concludes, adding that if the states continue to adopt the sales tax our poor will be carrying the entire burden of relief by 1939.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

BY GRACE MARY WEBSTER

The Italian-Ethiopian situation grows blacker day by day. While Emperor Haile Selassie, hoping for peace through the League of Nations, holds out against the some 2000 Ethiopians clamoring for arms at Addis Ababa, Italy sends 14,000 more black-shirts to East Africa. At Geneva the League of Nations, working on a program of international assistance for Ethiopia, granted the Ethiopian delegate permission to present to the council his side of the question. The Italian delegate, Baron Aloisi, left the council building very much chagrinned.

Mussolini, commenting on the actions of the League, said, "You may talk and threaten; I go straight ahead. The League's moral sanctions would sound well, but they would end in sound."

Meanwhile Herr Hitler has something to say about the League too. In an address to the Reichstag this week he declared that the League of Nations legalised the theft of Memel, a district which formerly belonged to East Prussia and that action at once was necessary. It has been a League protectorate since the World war. Although he spoke in a manner belying his words, Hitler declared to the Reichstag, "There can be only one principle guiding our behavior, namely our unshakable love of peace."

Huey Long's book, entitled My First Days in the White House, and only partially finished by Senator Long before his death is being printed in some of the daily papers throughout the country already. The book reveals Mr. Long's plans for administration as president had he succeeded in his object. Perhaps of greatest interest are the names of the men he would have appointed. For secretary of state, he named William E. Borah of Idaho; for secretary of treasury, James Couzens of Michigan; for secretary of war, Smedley D. Butler of Pennsylvania; for secretary of navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt; for secretary of interior, Major-General Lytle Brown, Tennessee; for secretary of commerce, Herbert Hoover; for attorney-general, Frank Murphy of Colorado; and for secretary of labor, Frank Keating of oColorado. His selection of a man for secretary of agriculture would have ben made from recommendations senti n from farm organizations. Likewise, his postmaster general would have been taken from a list of postal employees throughout the United States. For the director of the budget, Mr. Long wriest that he would have appointed Alfred E. Smith.

Things were made hot for a colony of nudists camped near Ontario, California, this last week. A forest fire raging through the Sierra Madre mountains "burned them out" and forced them to flee to the nearest telephone to call for aid. The clothes they had saved for returning to civilization had been lost.

Will Florida's famous overseas railroad between Miami and Key West be abandoned or repaired? Hurricane damages are estimated at $2,500,000. The road was operated by the Florida East Coast Railway, which is in the hands of receivers; hence the fate of the railway rests entirely in the hands of the court. Only by court order can the damage be repaired.

This week Roosevelt ordered the abrogation of all tariff concessions which have been previously extended to Germany. This order is in retaliation for German discrimination against American goods and will go into effect October 15th.

We have always heard that war is hell. A current writer observing the fact that Ethiopians must take their wives with them when they go to war, comments the Ethiopians should know more about that.

The German Reichstag this week passed laws which practically relegate the Jew back to the Middle Ages. They included a law prohibiting Jews from becoming German citizens; a law forbidding them to intermarry with Aryans; a law providing for punishment of Jews having intimate relations with gentiles; and a law prohibiting Jews from hiring Aryan servant girls under 45.

The cat-killing business in Tallahassee has been temporarily halted. Previous to this week the city of Tallahassee offered twenty-five cents to any person bringing in a dead cat. Operations have been stopped in order that fond masters and mistresses may obtain little bells to put around the necks of their pet cats. These bells will sound a warning to would-be killers.

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

GOVERNMENT SERVICE AND HIGHER EDUCATION . . .

According to a recent issue of the Indiana Daily Student, the University of Indiana will in the future train students in direct preparation for entering government service. As some of the faculty members prominent in the move have stated: "The rapid extension of governmental activities during the past few years calling for many new types of service gives not only a new opportunity but also a new responsibility to our colleges and universities . . . To some extent the success or failure of the government in the performance of these new tasks depends upon the quality of the personnel which can be trained and recruited from our institutions of higher education. "

"For nearly half a century England, Germany, and certain other foreign countries have had a definite policy of recruiting persons for government service from their universities. In the United States, however, government officials have not turned to colleges and universities in filling positions in the public service. As a result, the educational institutions in this country have had little incentive to prepare persons for government positions. With the spread of the merit system whereby persons are selected for government positions and promoted on the basis of their ability, co-operation between government officials and universities become more important."

This move, if kept strictly on a technical and non-partisan basis, has everything in its favor, and its progress at the University of Indiana may well be noted by those following advanced educational ideals.—Ypsilanti (Mich.) Normal College News.

HAIRBRUSH HAUNTS

At times this world is a strange mixture of the old and the new. Parents, for instance, are old-fashioned in thinking that they know better ways to raise their children than their own parents knew. Their ideas, however, are new; they hold that they must do nothing that might break the wills of their children and give them an inferiority complex. To summarize, the hairbrush and the peach tree switch have been abandoned as methods of discipline.

Hence, with spartan fortitude, Mother and Father have endured the strain of encouraging Mary and Johnny all summer. It is with a sigh of relief that they turn the task of putting educational theories into practice over to the teacher, for at least half the time. Father can read his paper in peace without having Johnny tell him what he thinks of his "old man," and Mother smiles over her old-fashioned darning whenever she thinks of Mary's ideas of how a sweet self-willed youngster should enjoy developing naturally.

The world moves on and Mary and Johnny will grow up without the slightest trace of an inferiority complex. Quite to the contrary, they will be accustomed to doing the first thing that comes into their head. Their slightest word carried weight at home; why should they restrain their impulses when they have married and have children of their own to raise

And so, little Mary and Johnny, Jr., will be subject to their parents' whims as were the parents' parents to the children's great-grandparents. The hairbrush will be dusted off and put into action when needed while national sisues are reopened on its use. "To spank or not to spank" will be the question of the day; columnists will give lessons on the most advantageous and effective way to use a hairbrush and manufacturers will donate free gloves to be worn while administering a spanking to avoid bites, etc., from the victim It's a grand and glorious prospect forthe future of disciplinary methods if Johnny and Mary carried out their theories with as much determination as their parents do today!—Columbia Missourian.

IS SORORITY RUSHING TOO HASTY?

Sorority rushing days, which are always hectic and confusing to new students, were even more bewildering to the freshmen this year, due to the shortening of the rushing period. This year rushing season began in the busy part of freshman week, and continued for four days only.

After date cards were issued there was barely enough time between dates for girls to walk from one sorority house to another.

At the end of several days' parties, most of the girls were still in an agony of indecision as to which group they preferred.

In the freshman dormitories one might hear remarks such as: "What are you going to do?" "Oh, I haven't any idea." "But they're all so sweet." "I wish I'd never gotten myself into this mess." "I dont know what in the world to do"

This leads us to question the present system of rushing and to ask if something can't be done about it.

Demonstration School Starts New Cafeteria For Use of Students

Part of the top floor of the Demonstration school building is being used for a cafeteria which last year was located in the home economics room of the school. This is the second year that the demonstration school has had a cafeteria, according to Mrs. T. J. Brooks, manager.

The number who used the cafeteria last year averaged about thirty demonstration school students, said Mrs. Brooks. Although only fifteen have as yet used the cafeteria this year it is hoped that due to the larger and more convenient location it will be used more extensively.

Mrs. Brooks brings the food to the school already cooked. The menu lists sandwiches, drinks and hot dishes. Served in cafeteria style the dishes are usually priced at five cents and checked off on dollar tickets already purchased by the student.

Although some of the students who are using the cafeteria live near by, the majority live some distance from the school.

Collegiate Come-Backs

This is the time of year when the strains of "Home, Sweet Home" bring tears to the eyes of all Freshmen; when there's a demand on the infirmary for mercurochrome and adhesive tape for sore feet and blistered heels; when our svelte summer silhouette is already getting that stuffy look in the back below the waist from climbing Tallahassee hills; when we want to annihilate the next person who asks, "What are you taking this year?"

The new hand-book has us panting. Can it be true that we can at last pick up rides with men, even under the printed stipulations? If this rule is not, as we fear, a misprint, may we suggest that all the boys in town paint their names on both sids of their cars in prominent red letters, just in case our memory proves poor? By the way, we have a sneaking suspicion that a great many of us will notice a large increase in male relatives with rideable vehicles in the next couple of weeks.

Leagues Honor New Students

Religious Groups Present Officers to Freshmen With Ceremony

League parties honoring and welcoming the Freshmen are on schedule for the night of September 27 under the auspices of the various churches.

All students are cordially invited to attend the regular services on Sunday. Before League, at 5:30, supper will be served to the Methodist students in their student house; to the Presbyterians, at 6:00, in their church annex; and to the Baptists at their B.Y.P.U. house.

With impressive services last Sunday morning all new league officers were presented to the freshmen, each leader stating her aims for the year. The officers of the various student organizations are as follows:

Methodist Stodent League: president, Jo Beth Forman; vice-president, Margaret Delaney; secretary, Marjorie Raulerson; treasurer, Ruth Howard; financial secretary Mary Ola Reynolds; personnel director, Martha Blake music chairman, Sarah Martin; dramatic chairman, Sara Hosea; publicity chairman, Ruth Murray; house chairman, Charlotte Carlton; recreation chairman, Lulu Walker; social service, Virginia Turner, off-campus chairman, Anna Marie Mitchell; sorority chairman, Carl Brigman; league program Virginia Clayton; league social, Dimples Turner.

Presbyterian Student League, president, Mary Wylie Klueppelberg, vice-president, Marjorie Paia, secretaries, Barbara and Jane Hubbard; treasurer, Agnes Campbell; secretary of spiritual life, Virginia Taylor; secretary of missions, Frank Wildman; secretary of social service, Rebecca Keith; social chairman, Nettie Taylor; freshman sponsor, Jean Craigo; dietian Anna Leigh Rollins; music chairman, Sara Hethcox; dramatic chairman, Jane Tombaugh; Junior-Senior class president, Katherine Kyle; Sophomore class president, Mary Ann Moore; Freshmen visitors, Alice McGlone, Edythe Taylor.

Two hikes, one at sunrise and one at sunset, will be held tomorrow for some of the Presbyterian freshmen. Other hikes are being planned for the near future.

Newman club: president, Graca Mary Webeter; vice-president, Mauvis Lussier; treasurer, Clotilde O'Rourke; recording secretary, Jane Quinn; corresponding secretary, Vivian Testa; parliamentarian, Catherine McGarry.

Future plans for activities including hikes and camp retreats, will be announced.

YWCA Furthers Projcet Schemes

paper publicity will advertise the project.

Serving on the committee from the Exchange club are Mr. Douglas Burnett, scout executive; Mr. George White, Mr. Randolph Proctor, and Mr. F. J. Dickson. A luncheon will be given on Friday for the discussion of further plans.

Forty-five volunteers who signed up at a student meeting last spring to assist at the center are, Joyce Reed, Anita Jones, Helen Cate Elizabeth Kirby-Smith, Martha Wolliston, Margery Helvenstein, Jane Hubbard, Barbara Hubbard, Edna Stanfill, Dot Ozburn, Laura Mathis, Marguerite Nooner, Evelyn Chauncey, and Louise Lingo.

The playground faculty who will assist in directing musical activities, art, handicraft, games, story-telling, and dramatics, are Jean Clark, Nell St. John, Margaret Stout, Sara Graham, Margaret Maxwell, Mary Kirkpatrick, Ruth Barker, Margaret Jean Duncan, Beverly Brown, Valerie Stubbs, Mildred Seekins, Mary Ellen Tharpe, Louise Doyle, Betty Anne McKenzie, Willa Greer, M. Peacock, Louise Bryan, Kathryn Todd, Virginia White, Janet Pierce, Martha Battey, Astrid Peterson, Marion McKinney, Betty Clark, and Marguerite Grover.

Program planning is to be in charge of Sue Whitaker.

PREMIER PLAY NITE

Play Nite honoring the Freshmen will be held in the big gym tonight from 8:00-10:00. Rose Panowski, president of the Athletic association, is in charge of the entertainment, which will include games, swimming, and dancing. Everyone is invited.

COWS SHOVED FOR GOLF

Work on a nine hole golf course, covering an area of approximately ninety acres, for the students of Florida State College, will start within the next two or three weeks according to H. O. Mendenhall college architect. The course will be built on the site of the old dairy pasture, the cows having been moved to the college farm.

It is hoped that WPA relief workers will provide labor for the project. Landscaping, consisting mainly of trees and shrubs, will be done during the month of January and February. Mr. Mendenhall stated the work will progress at the rate of a hole a month, if no delay is caused by insufficient funds.

The course will be available to all connected with the college at a nominal fee.

Freshmen Week Opens College

Program Includes Rushing, Registration And Orientation

Marked by registration, numerous social functions and the rushing of students by eighteen national sororities, freshman week which began Monday, September 9, saw the introduction of a large group of new students to the campus of Florida State College for Women.

Freshmen met the faculty through a series of addresses given by President Conradi, Dean Olivia Dorman, Dr. E. G. Andrews, Dean W. G. Dodd, Dr. Katharine T. Abbey, Dean Nathaniel Salley, and Dean Margaret Sandels. Through the medium of these talks the faculty attempted to bring the prospective students an idea of the many phases of college life and the necessity for the establishment of harmonious relations between student and faculty.

The various social activities which kept freshmen busy during the week were climaxed by the President's reception held Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in Bryan Hall. An entertainment given in the auditorium Friday night, an hilarious freshman fall frolic given by the physical education department Saturday afternoon, and the annual colege sisters' party of Saturday night, completed the round of social affairs.

An important phase of the freshman's introduction to the college was enrollment which was conducted this year under a new system of scheduling. Various languages, English, and psychological tests accompanied freshman enrollment.

Following a regular orientation program upperclassmen counselors instructed small groups of freshmen throughout the week in the rules of College Government association in preparation for the orientation test which was given last Tuesday night.

Posture exams, photographing freshmen for the college files, and library tours were also features of the week, which ended Sunday, September 17.

The active members of the Alha Omicron Pi sorority will enrtain their new pdeges tomorw night at 7:30 with a formal anquet at the Floridan hotel.

The sorority colors, red and hite, will be used in decorating th roses being the main feature the floral arrangements. Placa ards and menus will be used.

At this time the sorority will se honor its new chaperon, Mrs ary T. Whittington, and the facty adviser, Miss Florence Bethea

A toast to the new pledges will e proposed by Nina Hughes and ne of the pledges will respond th e toast to the active mamers. Following the toasts sorors songs will be sung by all the members.

Apropriate favors will be given o each of the pledges.

Sigma Sigma Sigma

Pledges to the Sigma Sigma gma sorority will be entertained a formal banquet given at the utch Kitchen tomorrow night.

The sorority colors, purple and hite, will be used to decorate, th floral arrangements, place ards, menus, and programs, carying out this color plan.

Rosebud corsages will be preented to the pledges as favors.

Sigma Kappa

The active members of the gma Kappa sorority will enterin the new pledges tonight with banquet in the Floridan hotel 8:00

The decorations will carry out circus motif. Brightly colored alloons will float over the banuet hall and streamers in red, ellow, blue, and green, will rther add to the circus atmoshere. On the tables popcorn, eanuts, and boxes of cracker jack ll be scattered around.

During the evening appropriate usic and entertainment will be ven.

Phi Mu

A novelty "Slum" party will be e entertainment with which the hi Mu sorority will welcome its ew pledges tonight at the shaper house at 6:30.

The house will be appropriately ecorated to represent the slums f a small town with broken botes, candles used for lighting, and ed-checked table cloths used on he supper tables.

During the evening an appropriate program of old-fashioned and sorority songs, novelty speeches, and skits, will be given. Hamburgers, coca-colas, fruit, and doughnuts will be served.

Following the slum party there will be a slumber party at the house.

Suitable favors will be given to each of the new pledges.

Kappa Delta

Pledges of the Kappa Delta sorority will be entertained tomorrow night at 8:00 with a banquet in the Woman's club

The sorority colors of green and white will be carried out in the decorations of fern and roses. Menus and place cards will match this color plan

Alumnae from Madison, Monticello, and Tallahassee are planning to attend and an appropriate program has been planned.

Pi Beta Phi

The Woman's club room will be the scene of the banquet with which the Pi Beta Phi sorority will entertain its pledges tonight at 8 30.

Wine and silver blue, the fraternity colors, will be used to decorete the banquet hall and this color plan will be carried out in the flower arrangements, place cards, and menus.

The program for the evening will consist of a welcome address, a response by one of the pledges, a talk by the faculty adviser, Miss Griffin, and by the singing of Pi Beta Phi songs

Delta Delta Delta

The members of the Delta Delta Delta sorority will entertain the new pledges of that fraternity with a banquet at the Floridan hotel tomorrow night.

The flowers place cards, and menus will be in a color plan of silver, gold, and blue, the fraternity colors.

Attending this affair with the active members and pledges will be Dean Margaret R. Sandels, the faculty adviser, and Miss Katherine Montgomery.

Theta Upsilon

A breakfast at the Three Torches Tea Room will be given by the members of the Theta Upsilon sorority Sunday morning in honor of the new pledges to the fraternity.

The sorority colors, the hues of the rainbow, will be used in the decorations which will consist of floral arrangements, place cards, and menus. Each pledge will be presented with an appropriate favor as a memento of the occasion.

The program for the morning will consist of fraternity songs, toasts to the old and new pledges, and talks.

Alpha Gamma Delta

The Alpha Gamma Delta dream castle was the motif of the banquet with which that fraternity entertanied its pledges Tuesday night at the Floridan hotel.

The motif was effectively carried out in the large silver castle with balloons, floating from the turrets, representing dream clouds which centered the banquet table. Place cards and menus also carried out this idea. Red candles were placed around the table with the fraternity flower, the rose, at the base of each candle.

The program for the evening consisted of a toast to the new pledges, several selections which were sung and played by Sarah Pepper, and the harmonizing of Alpha Gamma Delta songs.

As a memento of this affair each of the honor guests was presented with a small gold Alpha Gamma Delta recognition pin.

Chi Omega

Bottles of Coty's perfume were the favors at the banquet which the Chi Omega sorority gave Wednesday night at the Dutch Kitchen honoring their new pledges.

The banquet tables at this affair were arranged to form a large X, and were decorated with flowers in the colors of the fraternity, cardinal and straw. During the evening a toast was proposed to the new pledges, Miss Rowena Longmire gave a talk, Helen Meade sang a selection, and several Chi Omega songs were given by a trio composed of Virginia Peyton, Dot Watson, and Frances Passmore.

Alumnae attending this banquet were Miss Longmire, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. J. W. Keene, Mrs. W. J. Ovum, Mrs. Harold Richards, Marguerite Gaillard, and Mrs. O. S. Lanier.

Zeta Tau Alpha

The pledges of the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority were entertained with a banquet in the Floridan hotel last night.

The decorations were in the sorority colors, turquoise blue and steel gray, and were effectively carried out in the flowers, place cards, and menus .

The theme of the banquet was "the beckoning trail" and was effectively carried out by the inscriptions on the programs, and by the toasts which dealt with the Tallahassee Trail versus the Zeta trail. Toasts were given by Virginia Marshall, Evelyn Stump, Elizabeth Simpson, Miss Henrietta Sivyer, and Frances Lingle. Following the toasts was a song, "There a Zeta Trail Awindin'", sung by all the members.

As favors of this occasion each pledge was presented with a blue felt pennant engraved with the letters ZTA and the fraternity coat of arms.

Delta Zeta

Rose bud corsages were the favors which the members of the Delta Zeta sorority presented to their pledges at a banquet given in the Floridan hotel Wednesday night.

The fraternity colors of rose and green were carried out in the floral decorations menus and place cards.

The toast mistress for this occasion and Adelaide Ireland, and an appropriate program of songs and toasts was given.

Alpha Delta Pi

Iota chapter of Alpha Delta Pi entertained Wednesday night with a banquet at the Woman's club honoring the new pledges of the sorority.

The banquet tables were arranged in the shape of a diamond, symbolizing the freternity pin. The color scheme was blue and white, the sorority colors, and were effectively carried out in the floral decoretions, and place cards, which were blue and shaped in the form of a diamond with the sorority symbols written in white on each one.

As a memento of the occasion each pledge was presented with a blue diamond-shaped pillow inscribed with the letters, A.D.Pi.

During the evening toasts were proposed by Elizabeth Whidden, Mary Brandon, Peggy Whitten, Audrey Smith, Florence Mayfield, and Jeanne Harned.

Kappa Alpha Theta

The theme of the Kappa Alpha Theta given Wednesday night at the Floridan hotel was "from coast to coast" and was carried out in the idea that a musical band was traveling from one coast to another

The color scheme was gold and black, the sorority colors. Place cards were black pansies, the fraternity flower, and were attached by a gold cord to a kite-shaped menu which was decorated to resemble a musical score with the letters K A T forming the notes. Yellow candles and roses were also used to decorate.

Talks were made by Dr. Jennie Tilt, Edna Mae McIntosh, Evelyn Ballard, Claire Williams, and Mary Frances Campbell. The toastmistress was Antoinette Sullivan.

Favors for this affair were boxes of stationery with the letters KAT monogrammed on it.

Alpha Chi Omega

The pledges of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority were entertained Tuesday morning at a breakfast in the Three Torches tea room.

The sorority colors, scarlet and olive green, were used in the floral arrangements with which the breakfast table was decorated. Menus and place cards matched the other decorations.

The toastmistress for this occasion was Juanita Buchanan.

As favors the pledges were presented with novelty ash trays.

Plans Not Complete

Other sororities who will entertain in the near future for their new pledges, but whose plans have not as yet been completed are Alpha Xi Delta Delta Phi Epsilon, and Beta Phi Alpha.

Edith Manford Employed as Guide In Nation's Oldest Fortification

Visitors from Philippines, Hawaii, Argentina And Japan Among Tourists in St. Augustine Viewing Ancient Ruins

Palm Counts, sight-seeing tourists, sugar refiners from Hawaii, newly married couples, bus loads of school teachers, and even an occasional alligator were all in the day's work for one F S. C. W. student this summer. Edith Manford, a junior, describes her experiences as a guide in Ft. Marion in St. Augustine as "the most interesting that she has ever had

Edith was employed as a guide by the U. S. National Park Service of the Department of Interior which has recently taken over the supervision of this the oldest fort in the United States. She was prepared for the position by an extensive one week history course which she took just before beginning the job. Through this training she was able to prepare the material that she used for her talks as a guide.

Each day brought its bus loads of tourists from Jacksonville as well as scores of individual sightseers from every state in the union, the Philippines, Hawaii Argentina and even Japan. Edith averaged ten twenty minute talks a day. As she worked for ten weeks she proudly estimates that she made 700 talks. Some might consider saying the same thing over 700 times to be a little monotonous but Edith hastens to say that the questions and comments made by the sight-seers entirely made up for any repetition. Notable among the questioners was the man who, when she conducted him into the dungeon, asked how dark it was at night if it was this dark in the daytime Children also provided amusement. One little boy gazing soberly and a little suspiciously at a portrait of George Washington said to his mother, "Mama, was he a German?" Another, visibly impressed by the huge cannon balls placed along the walls, gasped, "Oh Daddy, look at the machine gun bullets!"

Edith thinks that the event that caused the most commotion during her career as a guide was the calm entrance of an alligator who had climbed up from the moat into the fort Pandemonium in the form of terrific yells from the negro janitor and the horrified movements of the tourist parties was the result.

"The sheepest I ever felt" said Edith laughingly, "was the time I carefully explained the construction of all the arches and other architectural wonders of the fort to a man only to find out later that he was himself an architect."

Another interesting visitor was an individual who confessed to being the writer of "frothy little love stories" and who described minutely to our fair young giude how he wrote one from the tower of the fort.

Besides the interesting and humorous aspects of the job, Edith feels that she has achieved much in her summer's work. For the first time she found that history could be fascinating and that new fields of activity in it can be open to students.

Newman Group Greets Catholic Freshmen At Informal Tea

Honoring the Catholic freshmen the Newman club entertained with an informal tea in Broward lounge last Sunday afternoon from 4:30 to 6:00 o'clock.

The lounge was decorated with late summer flowers in shades of red and yellow, the club colors. University Adopts New Two-Year General College Plan

Beginning Monday, the University of Florida, brother institution to the Florida State College for Women, will start its program of general education, according to reports from the University. The University is perhaps the first state institution to adopt the two-year General college plan.

According to the new plan, specialized work will be begun in the junior year at college rather than in the freshman year as heretofore has been the practice, and the first two years will be devoted to developing the physical and mental efficiency of all new students.

Because statistics show that 50 per cent of all students drop out of college by the end of the second year, the University hopes to give this 50 per cent the benefit of two years spent in getting a liberal education. The other 50 per cent which remains in college will have the benefit of a wider background than is ordinarily found in the junior and senior classes.

Courses for the first year, according to the University catalogue, include man and the physical world; man and the social world; man and his thinking (one semester); mathematics (one semester); and speaking, writing, and reading. Personal hygiene and military science will supplement this first year course.

In the second year the student will be required to take two courses, the humanities and man and the biological world. The student may elect in the second year some specialized work or work enough to complete his General college course.

Clock hours, class grades and credits will be done away with in the General college, according to the University. A student must pass, however, eight or more course examinations to graduate from the General college and receive the Associate of Arts certificate. These examinations will measure achievement in appreciation, understanding, ability and skill.

The General college is now under the guidance of a faculty committee headed by Dean Walter J. Matherly of the College of Business Administration.

College Faces Room Shortage

Off-Campus Houses Must Care for Overflow

The problem of housing shortage has become a difficult one at Florida State College for Women this year. The dormitories are filled to capacity, Jennie Murphree having 308 students, Reynolds hall, 213, Bryan and Broward halls, 296, and Gilchrist hall, 290. This is a total of 1107.

About 132 students are living in 21 off-campus houses, most of which are private homes. Campuside contains more students than any other home with twenty-five girls housed there. Sorority houses, too, are filled almost to capacity.

Approximately 1700 students dine in the dining hall each day, this being the largest number of students having eaten there in the history of the school.

New Student Handbook Shows Changed Rulings

The new student handbook, sponsored by the College Government association for the purpose of acquainting new students with the college government and rules, introduces several important changes in regulations.

Concerning new riding privileges, a junior may now ride in the day time (during the specified riding hours), and to and from town at night. Two or more juniors may ride at night, while a senior may ride at any time.

A new ruling on week-end absences states that freshmen students shall have one week-end at the close of each quarter, Easter vacation to count as one of these. In addition, one week-end is allowed during each quarter except the first, making a total of six such absences.

A new residence regulation permits a student to play a radio at any time provided it may not be heard outside the room.

Ao orientation test for freshmen, covering the major rules was held in the history building Tuesday evening at nine o'clock. A similar test will be given for transfer students within the next two weeks.

Club Announces New Regulations

International Society Allows Visitors

At the first meeting this year of the International club a definite time and place for meetings were named last night.

Meetings will be held every two weeks in room 207 history building, beginning two weeks from this Monday night at 7:30 o'clock. Anna Marie Mitchell will lead a discussion on Ethiopia at that time

Discussion last night centered on the purpose of the club, which is to arouse interest in topics of international concern. The club will receive a fortnightly summary of international news published by the Carnegie institute, which will furnish information for the discussions together with books sent to the club by the Institute.

Qualifications for membership in the club are based on interest and willingness of students to keep up with international affairs. Visitors are allowed at the meetings and open forums led by faculty members are held from time to time during the academic year.

The project undertaken by the International club this year is to launch a student drive for funds which will be added to a scholarship to pay the living expenses of a foreign student here next year.

Miss Marion Irish is faculty sponsor of the club.

Florence Jennings Is Awarded Scholarship

Florence Jennings, a graduate of Florida State College in last year's class, has just received notification that a scholarship was awarded her by John Hopkins university for work in child psychology. She will leave next week for the University to start work on her doctor's degree.

Florence was a major in the Florida State College psychology department, being particularly interested in the department's nursery school. She was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Kappa Phi, and was, in addition, one of five honor students to graduate with highest honors last spring. She had just completed enrollment in the graduate school here.

Enrollment Has Increase of 90

More Transfer Students Are in Residence

Between 1700 and 1750 students will be enrolled at the Florida State College for Women during the term of 1935-36, according to Mr. S. R. Doyle, registrar.

On Thursday, September 18, 1935, the enrollment had already reached a total of 1650, showing an increase of 90 over the enrollment of September 16, 1934. According to the record of past years over 50 new students can be expected to enter the college at mid-term.

In 1930-1931 and in 1932-1933 the college received its largest enrollments, a total of 1792 students for each of the terms. In order to show the relative numbers of freshmen, sophomores, juniors, seniors, and other students, figures for October, 1934, may be compared. There were 671 freshmen, 362 sophomores, 256 juniors, 242 seniors, 12 graduates, and 26 special students, making a total of 1571 students. At mid-term of that year the number was increased to 1627.

Although the exact number of transfer students is not yet available, it is believed that there are a great many more than there were last year.

New Violin Professor Will Supply for Sharp During Current Year

Miss Augusta Murphy, violinist, who played at the opening convocation of the year held on Tuesday morning, is supplying for Miss Anna Mae Sharp, associate professor of violin during her absence for the purpose of further study.

Miss Murphy is a violin pupil of Arthur Hartman in New York City. In Theory and Harmony she studied with Franklin Robinson For the past four years Miss Murphy has played in the National Orchestral Symphony, Leon Barzin, conductor. She played also in the New York Women's Symphony of New York City organized last season with Antonia Brico, conductor.

Miss Murphy has been soloist at the Society of Women's Geographers in New York; Women's Club of Bronxville; Society "Francaise Americaine." In the season of 1933 Miss Murphy was a member of a string quartet playing for prominent Women's clubs and at Percy Grainger's lectures at the New York University. She played with the string quartet at the annual concert of the French Society of New York.

Foreign Girl To Attend FSC

International Club Will Hold Funds Intact Until Next Year

A foreign student for the Florida State College for Women is being secured through the student bureau of the Institute of International Education and it is hoped that she will be in residence here during the 1936-1937 term, according to Clarissa Knight, president of the International Relations club, which inaugurated the drive for a student last spring.

Because of the late date at which the foreign student project was begun last year Clarissa said it was impossible for the Institute to secure a student who could satisfy the requirements, the failure to get a student not being due to any inability to raise the $225 scholarship fund promised by the Internationa. Relations club.

Many members of the college faculty as well as local college and Tallahassee organizations made contributions to the scholarship fund through Martha Whitaker, chairman of the foreign student committee during the summer. The fund thus secured will be kept intact until next fall, according to the club president, when it will be turned over to the expense account of a foreign student.

First of Artist Series Planned

Minneapolis Symphony, Vienna Choir Appear

Two outstanding programs to be included in the Artist Series for this season are the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, which will appear in the latter part of January, and the Vienna Choir Boys, who will appear in the latter part of February, according to an announcement made by Dean Ella Scoble Opperman today.

The Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, has made extensive tours all over the states, and has appeared at F S. C. W twice previously, both in 1929 and 1930, at which times they were entertained by the then newly-organized musical ensemble, the flutists of the ensemble entertaining the flutists of the orchestra, and other members being entertained accordingly.

The Vienna Choir Boys have been to the United States for several seasons, and this tour is to be their third and last. They have presented a total of 150 recitals, in nearly as many cities. Their repertoire includes small operas, national and church songs, and Christmas carols.

Town Girls Will Aid YW Project

Fain Will Head Students From Tallahassee

Approximately sixty-five members of the Day Students' organization were present at the first meeting of that group for this year yesterday morning in the Administration building.

Miss Ruth Schornherst and Dr. Raymond Bellamy, sponsors of the group, made short speeches of welcome to the freshmen present.

Members heard a plea from the college Y.W.C.A group, requesting the cooperation of town students in setting up a recreational park on the northeastern side of Tallahassee.

Business included fixing the year's dues, deciding on an orientation program for freshman day students, and making plans to strengthen the relations between town and campus students.

Present officers of the organization are Marjorie Fain, president; Geneva Lamb, vice-president; Winifred Hansen, senate representative; Mattie Lou Love, social chairman; Louise Gehan, athletics, Dorothy Bellamy, program; Margaret Maxwell, parliamentarian; and Daisy Parker, publicity.

Richards to Speak At First Astronomy Club Meeting on Wednesday

The astronomy club will hold its first meeting of the year Wednesday night at 9 o'clock in the physics lecture room, with Dr. Harold F. Richards, head of the physics department, as speaker on man and his relation to the universe, after which plans for the coming year will be discussed.

All college students interested in astronomy are cordially invited to join the club at its first meeting, according to Marjorie Harris, president. Four meetings will be held each month, two of which will be spent in telescopic observation of the sky. The physics department owns one of the best movable telescopes ever manufactured and frequently lends it to the astronomy club, according to Dr. Richards.

At least one night each semester will be spent at Camp Flastacowo, where members of the club may study the sky the entire night, and watch the movements of their favorite stars and planets.

College to Get New Buildings

Dormitory to Be Located Beyond Gilchrist

According to Mr. H. D. Mendenhall, college engineer, an extensive building program in conjunction with the Public Works Administration is being considered for the college.

In the event that applications are accepted Mr. Mendenhall said that construction will begin December 15 on a new dormitory housing 371 students to be located beyond Gilchrist hall. Tentative plans are also being made for an extension beyond the kitchen, which will provide a dining hall with a capacity of 2400 and an enlargement of the infirmary to house 88 beds. The projects will be paid for out of student fees.

Application has been made for money available from the million dollar appropriation passed in the last session of the legislature which will be used for reconditioning the administration building.

Mr. Mendenhall expects the buildings to be ready for use at the beginning of the fall term next year, if work is started at the appointed date.

Senate Probes Traditional and Social Customs

Freshmen to Pay Homage To Whole School If Fealty Remains

HOP, MINSTRELS WILL BE FEBRUARY

Will Take Action Toward Improving Manners In Dining Room

Changes in the traditional and social events of the college were discussed in a meeting of the senate Thursday morning, and a new amendment of the By-Laws of Article One in the constitution of the College Government association was passed.

It was decided by the senate that the president's council should investigate the traditional and social events of the college and to determine whether these events were to be continued.

Treaty Discussed

The ceremony of fealty was also discussed. The junior class, in a meeting Wednesday night, agreed to discontinue taking part in this affair as the true meaning of fealty no longer exists. The freshman class will pledge allegiance to the entire school instead of only to the junior class if this ceremony is continued.

The Mid-Winter Festival is to be slightly altered and included in F S. C. W. Week if this is agreeable to the faculty or student affairs and to the college council. The Sophohomore hop will be an event of February 1 while the Junior Minstrels will be given February 29. The Sophomore-Senior affair, which has heretofore been a breakfast, is to be left up to Miss Anna Mae Tracy and the sophomore class.

Dining Room Conduct

Dining room manners and conduct were brought up in this meeting. According to the chairman of the social committee, students seem to forget their manners upon entering the dining hall by serving food and sitting down to the tables before the ten minute wait is ended. President Conradi is very anxious that such a thing be stopped immediately, and the Four H club and the home economics department may sponsor some kind of activity to improve these existing conditions.

Sections To Be Amended

The By-Laws of Article One in the constitution were amended, and the eight sections of this amendment included the standing committes of the campus which are: the campus social committee, the usher committee, the student activity committee, the budget committee, the auditing committee, the hand book committee, the president's council, and the N S. F. A. forum committee. This amendment will be presented to the faculty committee on student affairs and to the college

Mrs. Florence Cooke Is New Head of Nurses In The College Infirmary

One of the assets to Florida State College is the well-equipped infirmary which is at the disposal of college students.

The new head nurse, Mrs. Florence Cook from Jacksonville, received her training at Fall River, Mass. Miss Beverly Horn from Daytona Beach is one of the new assistant nurses. Miss Horn spent two years at Florida State College before entering training at the Riverside Hospital in Jacksonville. There is also another assistant nurse, Miss Lorena Simms from the Riverside Hospital in Jacksonville. Miss Marie Wesley and Miss Bernice Allen, student assistant nurses, are with the infirmary again this year.

Besides these nurses, Dr. F. Clinton Moor, Dr. Otis G. Kendrick and Dr. B Arthur are prepared to render medical service.

In case of emergency, the infirmary is open to students any time during the day or night, but otherwise, the regular infirmary hours are to be observed which are from eight to nine o'clock every morning and from nine to ten o'clock at night at which time the nurses are in charge. If medical advice is desired, Dr Moor is in his office in the afternoon between the hours of one and two.

The infirmary accommodates [illegible]. A new sterilizer has been [illegible] in the laboratory.

Penmanship Classes Begin This Tuesday

Classes in penmanship will begin next Tuesday, October 1. There will be two sections, one at 4:30 and one at 5:30. All students who are to take penmanship this year are to report for the meeting of one of these sections on Tuesday in room 112 of the demonstration school building.

Reddick Again Head Violinist

Orchestra Rehearses For First Concert, to Be Early December

Martha Reddick, of Jacksonville, has been chosen as concert master of the orchestra for the coming year, according to Walter Ruel Cowles, professor of theory and director of the orchestra. Miss Reddick, a senior in the school of music, also served in this capacity during the past year.

The orchestre has begun rehearsal for the first concert of the year, which will be presented early in December. The orchestra members are working on the Haydn Symphony and on dances by Beethoven.

Although the plans for the appearances and concerts of the orchestra for the year are incompiete at present, they probably will include quite a number of presentations to be given before the students of the college.

The personnel of the orchestra for the year 1935-36 will include the following students: violins, Miss Reddick, Marjorie Tillis, Betty Miller, Yvette Breaux, Anna Belle Larsen, Marian Herbert, Marion Ferrell, Eleanor Crenshaw, Betty Hatch, Veola Evans, Rachell Griffin, Ruth Lind, Ruth Brooks, Retta Jones, Gertrude Tomkies, Margaret Jury, and Betty Parker; viola, Kathrine Bacon; cellos, Ruth Meyers and Sarah Herndon; basses, Martha Wilkerson and Sarah Tyler; flutes, Joan Crago, Marjorie Cox, and Louise Doyle; clarinets, Aleyne Clayton and Eleanor Daniel; horn, Margaret Tyler; trumpets, Mildred Hurst Betty Brooks, and Hildred Sampson; trombone, Hazel Bowman; and tenor saxophone, Betty White.

Richards Author Of Physics Book

Book Aims to Encourage Modern Thought

Dr. Harold F Richards, head of the Physics department of Florida State College for Women, has recently published the first unit of a new physics text book to be entitled An Introduction To Our Physical Environment. This unit is now being used as a textbook in the beginning physics classes of the college, and the second unit will be published in a short time. The book will consist of several units, all of which Dr. Richards will complete during this school term.

The first unit of the book contains a great deal of the physics of the heavens. Although it is not compulsory, students may, while studying this unit, satisfy a small portion of the laboretory requirements with supervised telescopic observations. A display of scientific terms will not be a feature of Dr. Richards' book. To quote from the foreword of the first unit, "The aquisition of a technical vocabulary is not stressed. The student is asked to remember that a familiarity with strange and formidable words is no substitute for thinking, though it may sometime conceal from the uncritical a certain poverty of thought."

The second unit will deal principally with the nature of physical reality, including the nature of matter and energy. Many practical applications of the various types of energy, namely heat energy, electric energy, and the energy of motion, will be considered, but the prime emphasis in the second unit may be considered philosophical, in the sense that Dr. Richards there explains what physical nature actually is like at the very bottom, and what right man has to talk about atoms, molecules, electrons, protons, neutrons, and positrons.

"One of the objectives" said Dr. Richards, "in my mind, while writing this text of general physics was to present a broad, phi-

Senior Class Votes Changes In Activities

Investiture of Seniors Is Scheduled to Be October 22

JUNIORS WOULD ABOLISH FEALTY

Marjorie Harris Elected Chairman of Even Demonstration

The senior class in its first meeting of the year Wednesday night voted for several important changes in class activities for 1935-1936. The junior class, in meeting at the same time, voted for the abolishing of the annual ceremony of Fealty.

Caroline Oliver, as president of the senior class, appointed several committees to make arrangements for Investiture which will take place on October 22. These committees are headed by the following chairmen: program, Elaine Kepper, organ music, Dorothy Leach, invitations to the faculty, Mary Litschgi, and decorations, Caroline Oliver.

Harris Heads Demonstration

At the same time Marjorie Harris was elected to taka the place of Emily Johnson, resigned, as chairman of Even demonstration.

Changes proposed by the seniors include a new program for class day, the replacing of the sophomore-senior breakfast with any other entertainment which the sophomore class shall deem proper, and the moving of senior coronation from the time of the Mid-Winter festival to the time of the junior-senior prom.

Daisy Chain Voted Out

Carolins appointed a committee of five to investigate class day programs as carried out elsewhere and to submit a plan for the approval of the class. The seniors voted to not have the daisy chain in their program because of the confusion caused by the difficulty involved in handling it.

It was voted that the sophomore-senior breakfast be discontinued because of the break it necessarily makes in the dining room schedule.

The juniors at their meeting voted to abolish the ceremony of Fealty which they feel has failed in the past several years to fill the traditional place allotted it. The president's council has recommended, however, that the ceremony be continued with this difference, that the ceremony signify the pledge of loyalty from the freshman class to the whole school rather than to the junior class. The senate in turn recommended thet the program for the ceremony be turned over to the freshman class rather than the junior class as has been the custom in past years.

Williams and Harrison Receive M. A. Degrees

The master of arts degree was conferred upon two instructors of the Florida State College for Women this summer.

Miss Sally Williams, instructor of industrial arts, received her master's degree in fine arts at Teacher's College, Columbia University, in New York.

Mr. Oval M. Harrison, instructor in general shop in the demonstration school, received the master of arts degree in industrial education at the University of Missouri, Columbia, Missouri.

All Vacancies Filled In Residence Halls

All the students who applied for rooms in the dormitories after they arrived at Florida State College this fall have been permanently placed in the dormitories, according to Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls.

Although each year a few are forced to wait some time for a room, this year all the extra students were housed in the dormitories by September 19. Miss Flowers said that among the group of students who were recently moved on campus almost every one holds an FERA scholarship. Miss Flowers stated that these placements had filled all vacancies in the dormitories.

University of Wisconsin Transfer Gives Early Impression of FSCW

In Clothes, Pastimes, and General Atmosphere Finds a More Liberal and Friendlier Attitude Predominating

"The most striking thing about your campus and its students is their naturalness," said Florence Wagner, a transfer from the University of Wisconsin, as she compared the huge co-educational institution which she attended last year and its student body of 8000 students with Florida State. In clothes, language, pastimes and in the general atmosphere of the college the new-comer finds a more liberal and friendlier attitude predominating.

"One vital difference is in the clothes," she notes. "The cottons which play such an important part in the wardrobe of the students on this campus are taboo at the university, while silks and velvets of the latest models take the classroom by storm. Hats and gloves which would be openly laughed at on this campus also have their place in the Wisconsin classroom."

In the matter of rules many Florida State students would regard the University as a paradise There are only a few dormitory rules, a student may have as many dates as she wishes, and week-ends are unlimited. Another special privilege allows non-appearance at convocations. Almost half of the student body live in the off-campus houses. Many of these houses are especially equipped so that students may live upstairs and do their cooking in the basement.

Although Florence considers this college far ahead of the University in attitude she feels thet their educational system is more advanced than the one in use on this campus. It is also a great deal more rigorous. As an example of this she gave her hours for the freshman chemistry course that she took last year. In this course she took two hours of lecture two hours of quiz, and four hours of laboratory work. Since their credit hours are arranged differently she received five credit hours for this course.

Some of our chronic breakfast complainers may be interested to know that Wisconsin students have their pet peeves too. Instead of the familiar soft boiled egg aversion however in Wisconsin it is a dish peculiar to ther campus —left-over rolls fried in lard.

When the familiar question of women's colleges vs. co-educational colleges arose Florence said that she had not been here long enough to decide, but that she is sure that she will like it here and hopes to catch some of the friendly spirit that pervades the campus.

NSFA Meeting Will be Held

"Where America Stands Today" to Be Topic For Discussion

The local unit of the National Student Federation of America will sponsor an open forum Tuesday, October 1 at 7:30 in the Augusta Conradi Little Theater, to which all college students are invited, according to Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman. "Where America Stands Today in World Affairs" will be the topic for discussion, under the leadership of Marjorie Harris. In order to give a background for the general discussion to follow Lucy Gee Linn will talk briefly on the present policies of America; Sue Whitaker, on the present policies of Europe; and Betsy Anderson, on the modern tendencies abroad.

All students automatically become members of the local unit of the National Student Federation when they enroll at the college and are urged by Mary Jeanne not only to attend but to take an active part in every open forum sponsored by the organization.

The purpose of the organization is to stimulate and give expression to intelligent and constructive student opinions on important national affairs. Two open forums will be conducted each month, and a bulletin board will be prepared in the lower floor of the administration building on subjects of national interest.

Florida State Has New Dairy

Farm Added to Location West of Road To Lake Bradford

Florida State College for Women has a new dairy and farm comparable to the best, according to Mr. H. D. Mendenhall, college architect.

The last of the herd of 138 cattle was transferred August 13 to the new 730 acre dairy and farm which is about one and one-half miles southwest of the campus. Quite recently 22 high grade Jerseys were purchased in Atlanta, Georgia, making a total of 160 cattle now owned by the college.

Every day 160 gallons of sweet milk are delivered to the college. When the college dietician desires cream for special occasions, it may easily be separated from the milk in an electric machine operated at the dairy. The buttermilk which is now served for lunch in the college dining-room does not come from the college dairy, but it is purchased from the Leon County Dairy of Tallahassee, according to Miss Tracy, college dietician. Miss Tracy also announced that buttermilk will continue to be served at lunch as long as there is the present demand for it among the students.

During this week new milk-cooling coils are to be installed at the dairy. Recently the cold storage machinery was put into operation. A feed-grinding mill has also been installed This mill discharges grain into bins on the

Life's Little Slips, Though Many, Are at Least Rainbow Colored

Multihued Memoranda Makes Possible a Detailed Account of School and College Doings For Future Reference

BY ELEANOR WILLIAMS

The school doctor told me the other day that my metabolism rate was too high, but that didn't surprise me any. I've known something was happening to me ever since the high school principal called ma into his office my junior year and told me in stern tones that I was lowering the school's record in the state association of secondary schools by my chronic tardies. It had never occurred to me that tardies and absences had anything to do with a school's rating, but I saw then there must have really been a purpose behind all those words about character-building and good habit forming. Not only might one by being ten seconds late to school be in danger of being ten seconds too late for the pearly gates, but one might also give one's school a bad reputation in the eyes of the state educators.

I started living under a strain from then on. My classmates were partly to blame for it, I suppose. Every morning the last seconds before the tardy bell, I would come flying down the street as fast as I could go while friends hung out the school windows, waving handkerchiefs, holding up watches, and cheering me on generally. By the time I was bounding up the steps, three at a time, the bell would ring, my heart sink, and my fellow comrades would sadly withdraw. The breath-taking moments were over—until the noon hour at least—and there was nothing left but to get the dreaded slip.

I might as well say here that to try to be admitted to class without a slip was about as irregular as asking your Sunday school teacher how she knew so much about God. That's the way our principal felt about slips. Not that it mattered whether they were white, pink, orange, or blue but just so it was a slip

Artist Series Will Feature Novaes, Jagel

South American Pianist, Metropolitan Star Are Signed

TENOR APPEAR ON NOVEMBER 16

Dramatic Program Being Arranged; Dancers Not Returning

Arranging for the appearances of Guiomar Novaes, pianist, November 16 and Frederick Jagel, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera company, April 20, Ella Scoble Opperman, dean of music, early this week completed plans for the musical part of the Artist series this season.

Symphony Orchestra to Come

In addition to the already announced, programs of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra the latter part of January and the Vienna Choir Boys the latter part of February, there will be one entertainment in the dramatic field, for which Mrs. Mary Buford, associate professor of speech, will make arrangements. There will, however, be no dance program this year, Dean Opperman said.

South American Pianist

Guiomar Novaes, a South American and a world-famous pianist, is making her return to the American concert platform this season. She is considered one of the greatest women players of today.

Metropolitan Tenor to Appear

Frederick Jagel comes to the college auditorium from a colorful musical background. For eight years ha has been leading tenor of the Metropolitan opere company and has sung also with the Chicago Opera company.

He took part in a recent series of operas given in English over the radio. Mr. Jagel was soloist with the Boston Symphony under Roussevitsky in the third act of "Siegfried" and appeared as soloist in Machler's "Das Lied von der Erde" with the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra under Bruno Walter. He has been featured in many recitals over the country.

Library Receives Current History

Gets Florida News Nearly Hundred Years Old

The library received several gifts in the historical line the latter part of this summer.

Phi Alpha Theta, national honorary society, gave to the library subscriptions to the magazines, Geneva, a monthly review of internal affairs and Geneva Special Studies, a factual analysis of current world problems. These magazines, according to Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, should be an aid to those interested in the study of world events and current world problems.

In addition, Phi Alpha Theta gave the library a book of essays written in honor of Dr. William E. Dodd of the University of Chicago and a book, The Nazi Dictatorship by Shuman.

Mrs. Priscilla Major Hubbell, Kissimmee, presented the library with a copy of an old Key West newspaper, called the South Flordan and dated 1835. This paper, framed in glass so that both sides are readable, contains many items pertaining to the life of the city nearly one hundred years ago.

Faculty Member to Have Short Story Published

Miss Lula Margaret Wyly, faculty member of the Speech department, has just received word that her short story, "A Return Check" has been accepted for publication.

The story was entered in a short story contest sponsored by the Galleon Press of New York for new writers. Several stories were chosen from the numerous entries to be combined in a book "The American Short Story" to be published in December. Miss Wyly's entry was among those chosen.

The story winning the contest will be chosen from among those accepted for publication and the decision will be made public after the "American Short Short Story' has been released.

Schedule Announced For Browsing Room

According to Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, the browsing room will be open from 4:00 to 6 00 p. m. and from 8:00 to 10:00 p. m. on Wednesday and Thursday, from 3:00 to 6 00 p. m. and from 7:30 to 10:00 p. m. on Friday; from 9:30 to 12:30 a. m. and from 2:00 to 5:00 p. m. on Saturday; and from 2:00 to 5:00 p. m. on Sunday.

Fifteen Elect Honors Work

Herman Kurz Presents Juniors and Seniors Seeking Honors

Fifteen students are listed for honors work this year, according to Dr. Herman Kurz, chairman of the honors committee. Ten seniors and five juniors complete the roll of those working for honors this year.

Mauvis C. Lussier, Alice Porter, and Wylma Terbush, seniors, are taking honors work in French with Dr. A. R. Seymour as major professor.

Rebecca Keith, Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, and Lillian Turlington, also senior honor students, are doing work in Latin with Dr. Olivia Dorman as major professor.

Other seniors taking honors work are Minna Dunn, Sara Mikell, Margaret Graham, and Rosalind Parker. Minna Dunn, whose major professor is Miss Olga Larson, is taking work in the field of mathematics. Sara Mikell, alro working in mathematics, has professor E. R. Smith as major professor.

In the department of chemistry Margaret Graham has Dr. Jennie Tilt as her major adviser. Rosalind Parker under tha direction of Dr. R. S. Cotterill is taking honors work in history.

Juniors who ars taking honors work are Virginia Early, Louise D. Johnson, Daisy Parker, Anne B. Sams and Frank Martha Wildman.

Virginia Early with Dr. W. H. Rogers as her major professor is doing honors work in English. Daisy Parker is doing honors work under Dr. R. S. Cotterill in history. Frank Martha Wildman with professor E R. Smith as her major adviser is doing work in mathematics.

Anne B. Sams, the first student in this college to do honors work in industrial arts, has Miss Emily Wilburn as major professor. The second student to do honors work at this college in the school of home economics is Louise D. Johnson, who under the direction of Miss Henrietta Sivyer, is studying for honors in the field of textiles and clothing.

Demonstration School Students Elect Heads For Representatives

Students of the Demonstration school held a meeting yesterday to elect officers from each of their six grades to represent them on the student council. The officers were:

President, Ruth Ferrel, senior; vice-president, Harriet Kent, senior; secretary, Sue Love, sophomore; treasurer, Mary Ammes, freshman.

This year the student council plans to assume responsibility for handling a number of routine affairs connected with the general conduct of the students.

The operettas and plays which are to be presented during the coming year have not yet been definitely decided upon. The students, however, are holding weekly assembly programs of which the different classes have charge. The program last week was in charge of the eleventh grade. During this assembly the Reverend Alfriend of the Episcopal church gave an address.

Artist Series Ushers Appointed by Chairman

The ushers for the Artist series are being appointed by Peggy McMichael, chairman of the committee this year.

The list of ushers for this year includes Frances Morrow, Virginia Peyton, Frances Thomas, Jean Clark, Alma Butler, Vinnette Herron, Mary Elizabeth Simpson, Virginia Rogers, Elizabeth Malone, and Mary Litschigi.

Five additional girls will be selected in the near future, according to Peggy.

YW Will Pledge More Than Two Hundred Girls

Services for Recognizing New Students to Be Sunday Night

LINN TO PRESIDE OVER CEREMONIES

New Feature to Have Big Sisters Sponsoring Little Sisters

The annual recognition service of the Young Women's Christian Association will officially welcome into this organization more than two hundred and fifty girls on Sunday night at 7:30 in the college auditorium.

This service, which is one of the most beautiful and impressive of the collega ceremonies, is being held a month earlier this year for the purpose of helping the new girls to become a part of this organization from the very beginning of the year.

The new members are requested to wear white for the ceremony and to line up in the administration building on the second floor.

Evening Program

Singing "Father of Lights" the choir and executive cabinet will lead the procession into the auditorium and will take their places on the stage. They will be followed by the new members who will move down the aislas to their seats in the center section. The audience will occupy the seats on the side section.

The devotional will be lead by the vice-president, Anna Norris. Following this Lucy Gee Linn, president of the Young Woman's Christian Association, will read the purpose of the association and Litany of Commitment. To each charge the new members will respond with a repetition of their pledge "I wish to understand Jesus and to follow Him." The charge will then be given to the old members of the organization who will renew the same pledge they mada when they were recognized.

New Members Receive Tapers

As the new members file out of the auditorium they will light their candles from the lighted tapers held by the executive cabinet members who will have proceded them to the front of the administration building. During this recession all will sing "Follow the Gleam" While these new members are forming a circle around the fountain the freshmen cabinet with the executive cabinet will form a triangle on the steps of the building. The members of the executive cabinet are: Lucy Gee Linn, president; Anne Norris, vice-president; Sue Whitaker, secretary; Helen Cate, treasurer; and Mercia Scott Barbara and Jane Hubbard, Mary Irene McKay, Marie Spurlock, Mary Jeanne McKay, Gladys Oliver, Elizabeth Kirby-Smith, Anita Jones, Carol Farabee, Catherine Barrs, and Alicia Meachem.

Ceremony Impressive

With candles and tapers held high all will sing "taps." This scene around the fountain with the myriad of candles gleams reflected in the water is one of the most beautiful spectacles to be seen throughout the college year.

The ceremony will be concluded as the new members blow out their candles and the choir sings "Steal Away."

Arrangements for the details of the recognition service are in charge of freshman cabinet. Members of this group will hand

Plans Are Being Made To Draw Day Students Into Campus Activity

A representative to Y. W C. A., two delegates to the Senate, an appropriation of twenty-five dollars from the college treasury, and inclusion in all social activities of the year, are a few of the plans to draw the 148 day students more closely into campus life, according to Marjorie Fain, president of the day students organization.

Since the day student is on the campus only for classes, does not attend convocation and seldom hears any announcements, she is not in touch with the actual campus activities Marjorie said. It is for this reason that these plans are being made to promote a closer relationship.

second floor of the barn from which it is drawn through specially arranged shoots onto the mixing platform on the first floor of the building.

At present all hay and corn and a large percentage of the velvet beans needed are raised at the college farm. Only cotton seed meals and other concentrates, and a few velvet beans have to be bought. During the past summer the two silos at the farm, each of which has a capacity of 90 tons, have been filled with ensilage.

The college dairy maintains the very highest sanitary conditions, according to Mr Mendenhall. All of the cattle have been tested for and found free of any diseases. On the way to the milking barns each cow passes through long wading pools and then under a strong seventy-two degree shower. Once inside the barn she is given a chlorine bath before she finally arrives at the electric milking-machines.

An excellent herd of from 75 to 100 hogs is maintained at the farm, being fed entirely upon waste food materials from the college dining room. Although a few of these hogs are butchered for use in the dining room, practically all of them are sold to large packing houses Thus they become a source of income to the college.

Ten men are employed at the college dairy. Mr. J. P. Love is superintendent of the entire dairy and farm. Mr A. V. Davis is superintendent of the dairy, and Mr. H. M. Foldes is assistant superintendent. The other employees are colored laburers. College girls are invited to inspect the dairy at any time. It is located on a hil iof Leon county one-half mile west of the Lake Bradford road.

New Feature

A new feature of the recognition service will be inaugurated this year with the attendance of college "big sisters." All "big sisters" are requested to call for their "little sisters" and take them to this ceremony to see them recognized.

Local church organizations are abandoning their services on Sunday evening in order to allow members to attend the recognition service.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

BY-LAWS, ARTICLE I

Standing Committees shall be changed to read:

Sect. 1. The campus Social Committee shall consist of a chairman who shall be a senior, together with 14 other members appointed by the chairman and the president of the association. This committee shall direct the social activities of the campus.

Sect. 2. The Usher Committee (as in the present student hand book).

Sect. 3. The Student Activity Committee shall consist of a chairman, who shall be a senior, together with four members appointed by the chairman and the president of the association. This committee shall have as its purpose the correlation of the various phases of student activity on the campus: it shall administer the point system as determined by the senate, and shall keep an accurate record of the number of points held by each student.

Sect. 4. The Budget Committee shall read as in the present student hand book, except a few additional statements, which are as follows:

The two student members of this committee elected by the senate, namely the chairman of the Budget Committee and the chairman of the Auditing Committee shall be elected by the new senate at the first meeting of his body. At this time student groups receiving funds from the student activity fee shall submit their budgets for the coming year.

Sect. 5. The Auditing Committee shall consist of a chairman, who shall be a senior, together with two members appointed by the chairman and the president of the association. This committee shall be responsible for the auditing of the books of all the student organizations receiving funds from the student activity fee at the termination of each treasurer's term of office in said organization.

Sect. 6. The Hand Book Committee shall consist of a Chairman who shall be a junior, 3 active members appointed by the chairman and the president of the association, the president, the chairman of judiciary, and the freshman adviser as ex-officio members. This committee shall study the handbooks of other colleges with the view to improving the quality and effectiveness of our own handbook. It shall keep the handbook up to date and shall edit the book for the coming year.

Sect. 7. The president's council shall consist of the president of C. G. A as chairman, the dean of students, and the presidents of: Y. W. C A., W. A. A., Panhellenic Association, Day Students Organization, Mortar Board, the four classes; the chairman of the N. S. F. A. organization, and the chairman of the social committee. This organization shall plan the college calendar, coordinate various student activities to prevent overlapping, and make recommendations to these organizations on matters of campus interest.

Sect. 8. The N. S. F. A. Forum Committee shall consist of a chairman who shall be either a junior or a senior, one senior representative, one junior representative, and a secretary, who shall be a sophomore All members of this committee shall be elected by a meeting of students called for this purpose and announced at least one week in advance. This committee shall meet regularly and plan topics for discussion and N. S. F. A. procedure.

Alpha Xi Delta Members Become Sleuths On Discovering Robbery

The Alpha Xi Deltas turned detectives after their return to school and did some amateur sleuthing. It was only after hearing the reports of their servants, however, that they became really concerned.

At first the loss was attributed to misplacement, appalling misplacement, of course. People usually don't mislay the furnishings of a house and a complete winter wardrobe.

The gardner furnished the first clew. Some neighborhood children had reported to him a robbery in August. Incredible to entertain the thought of a robbery! So the Alpha Xis wrote immediately to their last year's graduates who might possibly know the whereabouts of said articles. But to no avail!

Weary with tsying to solve puzzling riddles, hunting for the lost, and chasing after every suspect, the Alpha Xis turned the matter over to the police.

Curious, clever, bold marauders were the thiefs who entered the Alpha Xi house with a pass key. Vivid imagination pictures them with black masks, flashing dark eyes and all the romantic aspects of a favorite villain in fiction.

The reader need not have her illusions shattered yet, for the thiefs are still at large baffling police. The articles stolen were rugs, china, lamps, silverware, hardware, and a winter wardrobe which were stored in two rooms of the house.

Perhaps at last a perfect crime has been committed!

Outlines of House And Social Regulations To Be Put in Each Room

Although the general attitude of the students in relation to light-flash, quiet hours, music hours, and other house regulations, is said to be good, Miss Maude Flowers director of residence halls, has prepared two outlines of regulations for the help of the students.

One outline deals only with house regulations, care of rooms, quiet and music hours, guests, and use of radios. Miss Flowers plans to have one of these outlines posted in every room.

The second paper is a condensed outline of the social regulations included in the handbook under college government regulations, concerning town visits, riding, social engagements, theater, dinner, and church engagements with men. These two outlines are intended to avoid any further confusion over the regulations they cover according to Miss Flowers.

PWA Funds Are Sought For Building Repairs

An application has been made by the college to the PWA for funds with which to remodel the north wing of the administration building. According to H. D. Mendenhall, college engineer and architect, it is believed that the loan will be granted.

Only the extreme north west corner of the building is actually condemned said Mr. Mendenhall, but if present plans are completed the entire north portion will be torn down and a new cement-floored, fire-proof wing will be constructed.

Life's Little Slips, Through Mary Are at Least Rainbow Colored

signed by him. The procedure was and probably still is as follows:

Go to the office and stand in a long stupid line for at least ten minutes until your turn comes. Then with that simple earnest look, try to tell the "powers that be just why you were late. The color of the slip they thrust at you decrees the success of your excuse. If they deem your tardiness unavoidable you get a white slip—a thin, to be loved and cherished. If you promise to bring a written excuse signed by your fond parents, you get a pink slip which means conditional. (I always got pink ones till Dad heard about my conference with the principal and destroyed all the lovely excuses I had typed—he had only to sign his name and the date to them, too.) After that I told the truth about being late, but it didn't seem to help. It was always for some reason like "I ate too much breakfast" or "Our cook had a baby last week and didn't show up this morning," and the principal and his secretary would only smirk and make me feel silly. The point is, that if you tell the truth, nine times out of ten, you get an orange slip which means forty minutes after school in detention hall

Meantime, the tardy bell has rung for your first period class so you ask for two slips instead of one. The principal tries to look menacing, but it isn't so awful. You just buoy yourself up with the thought of having only five more roll calls to listen to instead of seven.

After attaining the slips for which you've wasted twelve minutes, you hunt your home-room teacher and present her with the first slip. Then you interrupt your first period class by falling over chairs and wastepaper baskets to give that teacher the second slip With all the pleasant looks and kind words you've been greeted with by this time it's quite easy to settle down to take on anything the new day might offer—except a tardy slip.

That's exactly what happens if your history teacher decides you want to do some parallel reading in the library. She gives you a slip—a different kind, but I've forgotten the color—which says that Mary Smith is leaving the history room at thirteen minutes and four seconds after 3 o'clock, January 8, 1932 A. D. for reading in the library When you reach the library—which is right across the hall, by the way—the librarian notes the time in minutes, seconds and hours of your arrival, and the same thing follows on your return.

Of course, there's a lot more about slips, but I didn't learn the rest of the story until I came to college. Then one of those things happened that makes life real. I was given a job filing slips, at the "model" school.

I file, file, file absent slips, tardy slips, and even detention slips until from every drawer, compartment, and cabinet in the office, slips peep out at me. When this happens, which is about every other week, my supervisors tell me gently but firmly that I can take all the slips away—away to be filed in some more remote place like the cellar.

However, there's one thought that consoles me. If I'm ever famous and want to write my life story, I can go straight to the old files of my beloved high school and find out exactly where I was on the morning of the eighth school day of April, 1932, at 10 45.

Six-Year-Old Boy Frowns On Adoring College Girls

Reveals Plans to Head Palatial Gardens In Distant Future

By ALTHEA SMITH

"These college girls!" muttered aster Charlie Steinfuhrer, in a ne mingled with all the lofty orn of an idol for his public, yet ith a resigned tinge of martyr-om to its fawning obsequious- ss

And he stood looking after hem—those last two girls who ere among the many accosting m every day with cooing in-uiries as to where he got his oo'ful flowers" and his "cute-ess"

My companion and I rounded a corner just in time to hear the six-year-old speaker expressing his cynical opinion of this last outrage to his sister, who plays the dual role of guardian and yes-man to his lordship. The two of them are familiar figures on campus as they deliver from their father's garden back of the college the bouquets of flowers which brighten the administrative offices of campus buildings every morning. They had been stopped several times on their busy route this morning, for their arms were full of showy gladioli which attracted much attention from the post office idlers.

We walked along behind them for a time, listening with interest to Charlie's opinion of the American college girl, who, it seems, is an empty-headed creature with no understanding of a man's nature. He had evidently reached the limits of his patience with these simperers who just loved his "gorgeous big brown eyes," and who left him squirming under all of the most idiotic species of feminine endearment. (Our shoulders shook as we visualised the fate which awaited the next exclaimer at the hands of this irate cherub (or "ducky") in front of us)

As he grew more vehemently eloquent, Charlie addressed his remarks to the general public, and sympathetically, but with due caution we entered the conversation.

Master Steinfuhrer, lured away from the discussion of his pet antipathy, chattered interestingly. Like his father, he is an absorbed botanist, and intends someday to be head of his own gardens on a more palatial scale. He manages his present position as master of deliveries in a thoroughly workmanlike manner, and demonstrated to us with scientific precision the care of flowers en route.

Just as our chummy atmosphere was complete, my companion commented disconcertingly on the young man's footgear, which was indeed hampering his progress. He wore galoshes—the right shoe buttoned on the left foot, and the left on the right foot. Immediately on his guard for remarks of a personal nature, he squelched us with a serious stare as he announced he preferred them that way. Just as seriously, we murmured polite "Oh, I see," and, as not a single "ducky", or allusion to the beauty of his eyes was forthcoming Charlie allowed himself to be completely disarmed by our offer of a lollipop.

Then, remembering my "profession," and to convince him of my scorn for feminine sentimentality, I whipped out my reportorial notebook and asked "any statements to the press?" But we'd idled long enough, he decided, and with a nod to his sister, he dismissed us and started on his way. We stood for a moment and watched him plow through the between-class traffic with the bright flowers, as tall as himself, kept expertly away from any danger of crushing in the crowd. The young man's only comment on his first experience with "the press" floated back to us above the clamor of the 9:30 rush.

Grading of Orientation Exams to Be Completed Shortly, Say Officials

The orientation examinations which were given September eleventh have not yet been graded, but they are to be finished this week-end.

The purpose of the orientation examination this year was to test the student's information on the rules and regulations of the college, to give them some knowledge of how the school government is run, and to find out the attitude of the students on the various regulations and conducts of the College Government Association.

The executive council, judiciary, lower court, and freshman advisory council took this examination also to give and get opinions of each member down in writing so that every person could voice her opinion concerning different questions of the government and thus give basis for future policies.

SPORT NOTES

BY ELAINE KLEPPER

TURKEY DAY PRACTICE

With Thanksgiving not so far in the future the Odds and Evens begin to look to their laurels. Odd basketball players, under the direction of Mary Miller, and including about forty-seven freshmen, began practice Monday. They will practice every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 4:30, and Saturday at 9:30.

Even basketeers, directed by Mel Emmelhainz, started Tuesday. They will practice every Tuesday and Thursday at 4:30, Friday at 3:30, and Saturday at 10:30.

SPORTS SCHEDULE

The schedule for major activities includes this year: first quarter, basketball and volley ball; second quarter, soccer and hockey; third quarter, tennis and baseball; fourth quarter, swimming and dancing. The final games of the annual tennis tournament will be played off at the beginning of the fourth quarter.

NEW POINT SYSTEM

The Athletic Association presents a new point system in which there is an accumulation of twenty-six points, twenty of which can be gained through practice in activities, and six through class, Odd and Even activities. A candidate for the points must participate in a class game and an Odd-Even game in both her activities. Heretofore, individual accounts were kept in books, but a new system has ben inauaurated. Each participant now has an individual card which is checked daily by the sports leader.

DANCERS PLAN RECITAL

The Advanced Natural Dancing class is doing work in preparation for a recital to be presented sometime early in the second semester Since advanced dancing is now recognized as a major activity the same number of points will be given for participation in this recital as for participation in a class game.

LIFE-SAVERS PRACTICE

Life-Savers held their first practice in the gym Tuesday night. Senior guards and examiners held classes for freshmen who are interested in winning senior life-saving badges.

NUMERAL CLUB ORGANIZES

Charter members of the Numeral club met last night in Broward lounge to organize their group. The purpose of the club is to aid in mass participation in athletic activities.

With Rose Panowski presiding until the election of the president the following officers were elected: president, Myrvin Everett; vice-president, Marian Lessey; secretary, Sara Hethcox. Other charter members include Maxine Ward, Marie Joffree, and Evelyn Glasser.

Students who have won numerals through athletic activities are eligible for membership in the club.

HORSEBACK RIDING BEGINS

Horseback riding classes are being formed and anyone wishing to join see Marie Taylor. The classes which are in groups of seven are being conducted the same as those of last year The price of eight weeks instruction is five dollars. A student, who is a member of a class, wishing to ride at any time other than her class period may do so for sixty-five cents an hour.

Students may get horses at any time by engaging them from Mr Middlebrooks at seventy-five cents an hour.

AAUW Will Hold Regular Open Forum Discussions

The Tallahassee branch of the AAUW held its first business meeting of the year Monday night at the home of Mrs. C. P Heinlein, with Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell presiding.

An interesting program for the year has been planned, centering about the general theme of internationalism as it is manifested in art, music, and literature of the modern world. Forum discussions on international and educational problems will be open to the student body, as well as to the general public.

A project to receive particular emphasis is the Million Dollar Fellowship Fund of the National Association, in addition to the Graduate Loan Fund of the branch.

The membership committee is making a special effort to secure as members all persons in Tallahassee eligible for membership.

Many Present at First Session of Recreation Center Held This Week

One hundred and twenty-five children attended the opening session Wednesday of the recreation center which is sponsored by the Young Woman's Christian Association with the aid of the Exchange club of Tallahassee. The children responded with enthusiasm to the various activities in charge of the college girls.

Equipment for the playground furnished by the Exchange club already includes four swings, two large slides, volley balls, footballs, rubber balls, jumping ropes, and hoops. At the next meeting sand boxes, a volley ball court and also a driking fountain will be provided.

The girls who were in charge of the center are Lucy Gee Linn, Kathryn Barrs, Carol Farabee, Helen Kierce, Josephine Gordon, and Frances Lowry. On Friday afternoon five other girls will supervise the playground activities.

All girls interested in this work are urged to sign up with Gladys Oliver.

Offices Move Across Campus

New Locations Are Found For 5 Departments Of College

Offices of several departments of the college, along with offices of the Board of Control, have been moved from their former crowded quarters to the recently-completed education building

The ground floor of the new building is occupied by the industrial arts department, formerly located in the demonstration school and by the offices of the Board of Control.

Located on the main floor are the offices of N. M Salley, dean of the school of education, and the instructors in his department. Dr. Finner, head of the psychology department, also occupies an office on this floor. The remaining offices will be used as alumnae-publicity rooms and four will serve as classrooms.

The psychology laboratories and offices for the members of the psychology department occupy the third floor while on the fourth floor of the education building is a small auditorium with a seating capacity of 400 which will be used for the meetings of larger classes.

Space formerly occupied by these departments is now being used by other departments. The rooms on the ground floor of the library which served as offices for the Board of Control now serve as classrooms for the classics department.

As a result of combining the physiology department with several sections of the biology department, the physiology rooms have been moved from the demonstration school to the history building, thereby effecting a closer connection between the two formerly separate departments.

Dean Attends Conference

Through the offices of one of the philanthropic foundations there were granted graduate fellowships to representatives from colleges and universities of the Southern States to study education problems peculiar to the South during the last half of the recent summer session at Peabody College.

The representative from the Florida State College for Women was Dr Nathaniel Moss Salley, Dean of the School of Education who reports a very useful and stimulating association with members of faculties from colleges and universities located in all the Southern States.

Lucy Lee Linn Spends Summer Instructing In Bible School

Aids Father Traveling In Backward Parts Of State

"Not so many miles from us in the backwoods communities of our own state there are people living in such deplorable conditions that they could not be imagined unless they were seen in their actuality," said Lucy Gee Linn, president of the Y. W. C. A., as she described her experiences as a teacher in her father's Bible schools this summer.

As this was Lucy Gee's first trip with her father she said she was shocked at the conditions of the people in the more backwoods parts of the state. She described them as living in box-like, paper-thin houses, existing on fish and afflicted with all kinds of diseases. The whole panorama of the trip showed the intense need for workers in the field of education and sanitation, as well as in religious matter.

Lucy Gee's experiences were not without a humorous aspect. In one of these communities which she and her father visited she stayed at the house of one of the more prosperous citizens. The family was very proud of its bath tub. The little girls pointed it

The Parker Vacumatic—Invented by a University Professor to replace pens that suddenly run dry in Classes and Exams

Holds 12,000 words of ink—102% more than old style . . . When held to the light you can see the Ink Level—see when to refill!

THE marvelous new Parker Vacumatic is no more like the pens of yesterday than your 1935 car is like a '25 model.

It's the identical pen you've often said that someone ought to invent.

Scores of inventors tried to—fully 250 sacless pens were patented before this miracle writer was born. But none found a way to surmount the mechanical faults of squirt-gun piston pumps, valves, etc.

Then a scientist at the University of Wisconsin conceived the Vacumatic. And Geo. S. Parker, world's leading pen maker, agreed to develop it because it contained no rubber sac or lever filler like sac-type pens—no piston pump as in ordinary sacless pens.

That's why Parker can—and DOES—guarantee the Vacumatic MECHANICALLY PERFECT!

Because there is nothing else like it, the United States and foreign countries have granted Parker patents.

Responsibility Versus Red Tape

Embodied in the 1935-36 college government handbook is a vast liberalization of conditions heretofore existing on campus, a simplification of former "red tape," and an improvement in the whole tone of our government. Florida State College for Woman is growing up.

When, last spring the sub-committee of the college council presented to the council as a whole, a group of recommendations standing for the extension of the self-government principle, its members in their six months of careful labor were laying definite foundations for a new social regime at Florida State College. The changes in legislation included simplification of methods as well as increase of privileges. Date, music, and light provisions are liberalized, the matter of signing up is condensed to a minimum requirement, matters of smoking, dancing, riding and social engagements are clarified and the arrangements are made easy. Accompanying these provisions for a new freedom is the placing of stress upon personal integrity and student responsibility toward citizenship. Called upon to pledge her allegiance to the principles of good citizenship, the student is credited with a clear cut sense of honor and trusted with a larger concept of regulatory and "honor" systems.

In the acclaim that naturally greets the "liberalization — simplification" plan, we must by no means overlook what is too apt to be taken for granted: that is, the recognition of the maturity of upperclassmen. Dean Dorman designated the compiling of the new regulations as an attempt on the part of the council to allow the college to "grow up," that its students may meet their individual and group responsibilities in government from the mature viewpoint in existence generally throughout other American institutions of higher learning.

In the emphasis placed by the council on upperclass maturity it is not hard to look into the future and prophesy a gradual elimination of petty rules and regulations as the experimental freedom gains the confidence of the experimenters until at last an approach to the ultimate in self-government has been reached. Under such a regime, the creation of senior dormitories would play a major part. Seniors who elect to live in these halls could be given the maximum amount of freedom when, through three underclass years they have proven their worthiness in carrying well the responsibility which has just been given to the present student body in the new handbooks. This latitude offered to seniors would disturb none of the other classes, nor the campus routine, since they are separated from the rest of the student body in living quarters and thus able to come and go as they choose.

While looking forward to a pleasant visit is an enticing occupation, students are expected to discriminate wisely between liberty and license, to merit the confidence of the administration in a proper response to new privileges, and so to develop the mature judgment normally expected of a college upperclassman. The administration has taken this first experimental step, a significant one, toward a vastly improved student attitude. The proof that we, as a student body, can accept and carry on the responsibility in the spirit in which it was offered, lies with each individual student of the college. The "honor system" is at last being given a chance to become a reality.

Lifting of restrictions is an opportunity, not for abuse, but for intelligent cooperative effort to live and to think as mature persons, in a world paralleling normal life, where one does not "sign up," but where, nevertheless, one abides by a personal code more rigid than any ruling ever removed from the F. S. C. W. handbook. As a basis for college rulings, personal integrity has come into its own.

Excelsior!

With its installation of the two-year general college plan, our brother institution has taken a step forward in the educational scheme of things.

In 1921 a committte on education from the California legislature prophesied that the only way to draw into teaching that superior class of women then in the universities, "lies in the expansion upward and outward of the normal school work so as to offer a four-year course for elementary teaching, leading to a professional degree, and parallel to it at least a two-year Junior College course of general training that will be equally open to those who intend and who do not intend to teach. The ultimate development probably will be a full four-year college, with a number of parallel lines of work but with preparation for teaching as the central idea."

Just as that prophecy has been fulfilled over and over again throughout the country, today a new theory, developed and advanced by educators, is coming into reality. The theory is based on statistics showing that over sixty percent of any college student-body is in the first two years of work, the last two being left incomplete by many of that same percentage. In order to meet the demands of the majority who can spare only two years from breadwinning in which to educate themselves, to give them a fairer chance at a "liberal education," the two-year general plan was formulated and its adoption prophesied. Many institutions are using it in varying forms today. This year the University of Florida puts the new plan to the test.

According to the plan, specialized work will be begun in the junior year at college instead of the freshman year as heretofore has been the practice, and the first two years will be devoted to developing the physical and mental efficiency of all new students. Courses for the first year are classed under the divisions: man and the physical world; man and the social world; man and the thinking world.

Abolishment of clock hours, class grades, and credits, will dispose of needless limitations. A student must, however, pass eight or more course examinations to graduate from the general college and receive the Associate of Arts certificate. These examinations will measure achievement in appreciation, understanding, ability, and skill.

A wider background than is ordinarily available will benefit those students who continue through the last two years of the prescribed four-year course, while the two-year students will have a more liberal one than before.

Gradually we advance toward a two-year college course of liberal education, set apart from the universities of the country, which will turn imperceptibly, it is thought, into laboratories for high specialization in many fields after college—laboratories for the discovery of the leaders of the future.

The boorish behaviour of Florida State's femina perfecta in the college dining room has long been the recipient of strong condemnation from visitors, faculty and more proper students. Admonitions from the social committee have had no noticeable effect on such delicate practices as slurping soup, snatching up of all available relishes before grace, balancing the table with the two forefingers, sitting down before the bell rings, and engaging in the infantile game known as "pig" while impatiently awaiting dessert. Ingenious minds have suggested that revolving tables with unbreakable china fastened securely into grooves be installed in order to prevent the starvation of less aggressive students. Is this what higher education is doing for us?

CHICAGO AND GENERAL EDUCATION
By Norman Foerster
American Review, Sept. 1935

Those who have been led to believe the University of Chicago plan was a beacon shining through the fog now encompassing higher education may well read Norman Foerster's criticisms of the recently-published book, "Chicago College Plan" by Dean Boucher of that university.

The Plan's three objectives, stated positively by Foerster, seek to introduce freedom of student to proceed at his own pace, a common core of educational experience, and specialization as early as possible.

The most widely discussed feature of the plan, freedom of the student, Foerster declares, resembles on the contrary the machinery found at most American universities. For instance, although attendance at classes is voluntary, students find they must attend classes in order to gain sufficient knowledge to pass the comprehensive examinations at the end of the year.

Because of the "unpreparation for college high schools give" Foerster says in further analysis, early specialization, which problem by the way, Dean Boucher thought was "admirably solved," can only mean premature specialization.

Also Foerster finds fault, as do some of Chicago students, with the humanities course. This course, which along with a physical and biological sciences course, is supposed to answer the second objective in one year's time trys to cover all human history—political, social, and economical—from 4000 B. C. to 1935 A. D. together with literature, fine arts, religion, and philosophy.

But the ne is better than the old, Foerster declares commending Chicago's Plan and other schools' plans which are seeking to rationalize the thinking of students by emphasizing principles rather than facts. Furthermore, schools will shelve the "much-mooted individual differences" into the background to give way to a concept of community, Foerster concludes, "unless humanity somehow loses its instinct of self-preservation."

THERE IS ONE WAY OUT
By Lewis W. Douglas
Atlantic Monthly, Sept., 1935.

"Saving — Not Spending — Will Bring Re-employment" is the sub-title of this article and Mr. Douglas, who was director of the budget during a part of the Roosevelt administration, attempts to explain his thesis with the following economic reasoning.

During the depression consumption of goods purchased by the individual, (who, the writer adds, was considered unpatriotic if he did not spend all his earnings) remained relatively constant. The consumption of capital-goods, that is, machinery, building materials for industries and so on, declined almost 65 per cent with a corresponding decline in employment in industries providing capital goods. However, employment in industries making goods for individual consumer fell off only sixteen per cent.

So, since the wheels of industries for capital-goods are generated only by investments and loans which are the savings of millions of people Douglas advises saving a dollar instead of spending it.

The more savings that are turned into investments the more we can aid progress, he says, for industries can rebuild antiquated plants, replace obsolete machinery and, at the same time, provide the bulk of unemployed with jobs.

THE ABORTION RACKET
By B B. Tolnai
Forum, September, 1935

Not exactly a dinner table topic, yet the purpose of Tolnai in writing this article justifies a review.

Criminal abortion is listed among the leading causes of the present high rate of maternal mortality in New York, as well as throughout the country, he declares. Since death certificates must allege anything but abortion as a cause of death in order to protect the abortionist, adequate statistics are lacking. The Children's bureau of the United States Department of Labor, however, found 1,824 of 7,380 maternal deaths had followed some form of abortion.

In describing the abortion racket, the writer says a physician who has been hard-hit by the depression or has not yet made a name for himself may start performing abortions. Although he must pay for police protection as well as split fees with other doctors who send him patients, he still finds he has a thriving trade. Invalidity or death often results for the patient who is often hurried in secrecy to the bloody operating table and twenty minutes later set outside the door.

Tolnai pleads that some measures be adopted "to give medical care to all who need it and provide physicians with a means of livelihood without betraying or infracting the law."

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

BY GRACE MARY WEBSTER

What with the Italian-Ethiopian struggle and the Baer-Louis fight, newspapers this week have pictured life as just one long conflict between black and white. It has been said that Louis' victory over Baer proved the geneticists' theory that black always dominates white. However, there is little indication that the same will prove true in the African situation.

Sunday at midnight a coal strike involving 400,000 miners in twenty-seven states went into full effect. Having spent almost the entire time since then in conference (with time off for the big fight) operators and miners of the Appalachian area are still 1.5 cents (per ton) apart in their stands on the question. At the time the strike began the difference amounted to between 3 and 4 cents. The president has made it plain that he will not intervene.

The African rainy season is almost over; the Mediterranean sea is all clogged up with naval bases; and Haile Selassie prayerfully holds out for peace. The League of Nations' peace proposal was answered this week by both Ethiopia and Italy. Emperor Haile Selassie spent 1300 words saying "yes" to the plan (the proverbial man of few words—and a "yes" man). Italy's answer came in the form of another proposal, which was taken by the League of Nations as a format rejection.

Ethiopia now asks that the League of Nations send "impartial observers" to Ethiopia "to investigate present and future allegations of aggression and provocative acts and to fix responsibility in such cases." At the same time, over in Italy the Italian government announced officially that Italy would never be the first to "tarnsfar the conflict to Europe."

STUDENT ACTIVITIES

Are student activities worth while? This is a question which faces all undergraduates and especially the freshmen. But it is not one which may be settled by mere observation. It is a problem which is settled best by experience.

Although we do not say that campus activities are all-important and should be placed above the academic standing, we do maintain that the student who "buries himself in his books" and avoids any form of campus activity is passing up a worthwhile opportunity which will never again present itself. Student activities naturally lead to a wider association with one's fellow students and with others connected with campus life. Since in after life the college graduate will necessarily be thrown into contact with all sorts and types of people and his success will probably be determined by his ability to contact and mingle with his fellow men, such a trait and ability to contact and associate is much to be desired.

The motives which lead students into campus activities are interesting and multitudinous. Among them we find: the desire for honor, a liking for some particular work, the hope of attaining popularity, the love of notoriety, and the will to create, to master, to accomplish something worthwhile.

Of these we could commend the latter motive. There is no greater joy in life than the satisfaction of work well done and the joy of the creator is the most self-satisfying of all. A student who enters upon an activity and discharges all its various duties and obligations is doubly benefited. He not only has served his fellow students in carrying out the work entrusted to him, but he has satisfied his own ego, his own inner soul in the thought of work well done, of obstacles overcome, and the realization of ideals.—The Kentucky Kernel.

True Aim of College

"The drudge may fret the tinker
Or labor with lusty blows.
But back of him stands the thinker,
The clear-eyed man who knows."

The men who guide the destiny of this nation, those who forge into unknown territory for the purpose of exploration, and those behind the wheels of industry are the real thinkers of the world; and chances are that most of them began to do their serious thinking while in college. In college they learned facts: but more important still, they learned to apply their knowledge of these facts toward some constructive end.

One should not go to college for the sole purpose of learning so many cut and dried facts from countless textbooks. Facts alone are worthless. One must learn how to use them in order to forge ahead in a continual search for the truth. A pedant may as well have not learned anything, for what good will all his knowledge do if he cannot apply it?

Too many cases are on record of men and women holding college degrees who do not appear to do any better in life than those with no degrees at all. If those people had only mixed in with their learning a little thought toward practical application, how much better equipped they would be. The saying that knowledge is power is all right within certain limits. Rather it should be —ability to use knowledge is power.

It is true that college cannot make a man think unless he has the ability to think at the beginning, but nevertheless it is a great help to those who want to learn what the past has given in order that they might give to the future.—Auburn Plainsman.

SHOULD CONVOCATION BE COMPULSORY?

The question of compulsory convocation has long been a bone of contention at the Florida State College for Women. Many of the students and faculty hold that convocation is in itself an important factor in the life of the college girl. And in order to make her see this it should be compulsory so that she will have to attend, and by attending will derive the benefits therefrom.

There are others, however who hold that the very fact that convocation is compulsory makes the student wary of it and in fact eager to accept the slightest excuse for not attending the meeting.

As a college girl I believe the latter statement. I have attended convocation under compulsion for the last two years, and must confess that I have gotten very little from it except from the attention I have given to the student announcements.

In the first place, almost half of the student body attending convocation, do not know afterwards just what has been discussed. This is because they have been writing letters, eating candy, or studying history or English for their next class. Such girls distract those who wish to hear what is being said from the platform. Many a time I have been trying to catch an announcement only to be disturbed at the psychological moment by the crackling of a candy wrapper, or the folding of a piece of stationery on which the writer has been scribbling a note to mother.

A point that can show how the students react to the compulsory convocation is the attendance of seniors at chapel. Since chapel is not compulsory for seniors about twenty members of that class are regular attendants at convocation. The other two-hundred-odd feel that they have been released from some horrible penalty which was placed upon them in their underclassman days. However, when an important function is to be taken up in convocation the senior class seems to be fairly well represented.

Another thing that grows out of the fact that seniors do not, as a rule, attend chapel is the fact that compulsory convocation with the penalty of twenty-five cents for not being present, certainly does not give a student the proper outlook on convocation. I have often thought that students, especially freshmen, get the idea that they make chapel compulsory because they know that students will not attend unless forced. Therefore, it must be very stimulating or very worthwhile if compulsion is the only way of getting attendance. The girls who think in this fashion are the ones who knit, write, study, eat, and read in chapel, and they are not in the minority.

I firmly believe that convocation would have more value for those that are really interested if it were not compulsory. Then those who are not interested would not attend. This would do away with the crackling paper, inattention, and often, rudeness, which now is apparent at convocation.

Some people will say, however, that if compulsion were abolished there would be no need for chapel at all, because there would be so few people attending. My reply to that would be to make the chapel program so interesting that girls would feel that they were missing something by not going. It can be done, I think. There are good lecturers to be had, and some very interesting musical programs have been held here during the year at which the attention was at its maximum. This could be conjectured by the attendance at the lecture series, and at the glee club concerts, and orchestra performances which have been held throughout the year. Those of us who have attended such functions have enjoyed them to the fullest and have noticed no letter writing or book reading during the program. The people who did not attend had other things to do from which they probably derived more benefit.

Such, I believe, would be the case with convocation. Those who would get any thing out of it anyway would attend. The others would stay home and do something far more beneficial to themselves. There would be no disinterested students to distract the interested ones, and all in all, convocation would carry more weight with the freshmen when they see upper-classmen attending it of their own accord, getting something out of it and liking it

With the first faint breezes of fall the freshmen have turned out en masse in what the well-dressed woman will wear, if not carefully watched, in the line of autumn attire. Trying to feel superior, despite our spring millinery, we enviously watched them stroll to church Sunday morning clad in fashion's finest, fanning themselves with hats, hankies, and handbags. Strange how the religious urge strikes when the old ward-robe has just been replenished! Nevertheless, it is comforting to know they can be depended upon to keep up appearances for our dear Alma Mater if not intellectuality.

Does anybody want to buy an iron cheap? If so, apply at Florida State, where there are several hundred for sale in the various dormitories. After the official announcement, made last spring, which led to the majority of us purchasing this implement, we nearly burst a blood vessel when we learned of the complete change in the state of affairs. O foul thought, can it be that our beloved institute is taking us for a Dutch ride in the autos of iron manufacturers?

With the present state of financial affairs we had been worrying ourselves sick about being unable to get a reservation in the poor house, but we're not worried any more. There's always something to be thankful for if we'll only look for it.

This is a story to end all stories about freshmen. Recently one of these lambs went to her orientation adviser with a problem. Her boy-friend had given her, as an ornament, an exquisitely-cut bottle of what we once had prohibition for. Although she had no intention of consuming said beverage, she did wish to give the lovely bottle a place of honor in her room. Would it be all right to explain all this to her matron? Even ignorance has to come up to a certain level to be blissful.

After Dinner Coffee Honors Delta Zeta District Officer

In honor of Mrs. Mildred Keizel, of Gainesville, the province director of the Delta Zeta sorority, the members of the local chapter entertained Wednesday night in the sorority house on West College Ave., with an informal after-dinner coffee.

The informal motif was carried out in the decorations of mixed autumn flowers which were used in vases and bowls throughout the house.

Mrs. T. R. Cravatte, the sorority chaperon, poured coffee during the evening. Other refreshments were served by the members.

Alpha Xi Delta Will Entertain Pledges With Breakfast

Concluding their rush week festivities the members of the Alpha Xi Delta sorority will entertain at a breakfast in the Three Torches Tea room Sunday morning honoring the new pledges to that sorority.

The sorority colors, double blue and gold, will be carried out in the floral decorations which will consist of vases of marigolds and fern. These colors will also be used on the place cards, programs, and favors which the sorority will present to the pledges.

During the breakfast an appropriate informal program of toasts, talks, and sorority songs will be given.

Elusive Sun Gives Rise to Rain Chill and Complaining Students

Fall Brings Unexpected Weather, Moderate Temperatures

The weather, always a favorite source of comment when other topics of conversation are exhausted, has recently been of so anomalous a variety as to afford the students of Florida State College ample food for discourse for some time to come. Members of the student body who make the fall trek to Tallahassee with the confident expectation, rarely unfulfilled, of sweltering throughout the month of September, have been greeted instead with surprisingly moderate temperatures and a superfluity of rain.

Though the continued and unusual coolness of the atmosphere might at first appear to be a cause for thanksgiving, it is the nature of mankind to grumble in chronic dissatisfaction, and there have been rumors current to the effect that the unexpected drop in the mercury is not an unmixed blessing. Many fair aspirants to knowledge, shivering in the damp chill of early morning or late evening, have been observed to protest bitterly against the unseasonable coolness; not a few have been heard to lament volubly their failure to bring along their woolens.

Their dislike for the rain they manifest emphatically and unreservedly. There is, they aver, nothing dependable about it except that it will certainly come when they least desire it. Showers have come, in truth, with both frequency and suddenness. The sun seems effectively routed, emerging furtively at brief intervals from behind the clouds, and then, regretting his rashness, retiring hastily into seclusion. The end of many a class period finds groups of students huddled together, damp and disconsolate, upon the steps of our various halls of learning. Some of them hopefully wait for the rain to abate so that they may proceed to their next class in comparative safety from drowning: others, too pessimistic even to consider so desirable a contingency, merely summon courage for a bold plunge into the swift-rushing torrents.

Yet, complain as they will, the students have evolved no remedy for their plight. Sharing the common lot of humanity for ages past, they must accept with what grace they may the weather which the gods send. Like many another before her, the student of today trudges along the sodden campus paths, gazing resentfully at the overcast heavens—and the rain continues.

Dormitories Improved

New beds and shower stools do much toward making the dormitories more comfortable this year Broward Hall boasts thirty new beds, while Reynolds, housing freshmen, has sixty-five.

White shower stools have arrived in Bryan office and will soon be put in the showers. Sixty new mattresses will be distributed generally through the various halls.

Conradi Makes Address In Convocation Tuesday

"What College Means to Young People" was the topic of an address given by President Edward Conradi in convocation Tuesday morning.

Stating that the finest things in life are to be found in college, that the friends and associations made will never be forgotten, and that a higher life is to be found there, he concluded by saying that if one gives to the world the best he has, the best will come back to him.

Dr. Richards Talks to Club

Astronomy Group Holds Meeting Wednesday In Ad Building

One hundred and sixteen members joined the astronomy club Wednesday night at its first meeting in 203 Administration building. Of these, twenty-three are taking the new first year physics course, which, during the first quarter stresses the physics of the heavens. Thirty-two old members were also present.

Dr. Richards, physics professor, gave a brief talk on man and his relation to the universe. He illustrated by comparing the sizes of the most minute known thing, the electron and the largest known thing in the universe, the star Antares, how small man really is. He concluded, however, that man is as large as the scope of his knowledge.

Those who have joined the club are: Isabel Jleason, Margaret Wilkinson, Adelaide Lounds, Mary Ola Reynolds, Elizabeth Lounds, Mary Dickenson, Madeline Duncan, Frances Baldwin, Marie Anderson, Elsie Barrett, Edwinola Jordan, Rosemary McGleachy, Frances Hartley, Jewel Turner, Billy Hotard.

Collegian Loses Family

Student Notes With Regret the Alienation of The College Girl From Home Interests Too Late for Change

The phenomenon of the college girl who becomes alienated from her family is as regrettable as it is inevitable. There is a sincerely deep feeling of loss on the part of both the girl and her family; neither side knows exactly how to account for it, and both struggle desperately against such a thing as soon as it becomes evident. The tragedy of it is that by the time it does become evident it is already too late, for then both the girl and her family are making a conscious struggle and the old naturalness of their relation is lost. A conscious fight for mutual compatibility and perfect ease is one of the most pathetic sights on earth; it is doomed to failure by virtue of its very beginning.

Perhaps the greater part of the underclassmen on this campus would deny that they are growing away from their parents now. But let us take it up from the side of the college girl who has already realized this breach.

Mary has lived at home for all her eighteen years, and her love for her family is unquestionable; it has probably been the biggest motivating factor in her life. The thought that she might some day grow away from her family has never entered her mind; her family makes up the one steady, dependable element in life for her. The time comes for her to go away to college, and the nostalgia she experiences when she leaves home is mutual. Perhaps it even makes her physically ill for the first few weeks.

Her first vacation at home is a thing of beauty from the moment it begins until it ends. In fact, it is far more enjoyable at home than she remembered it to be. She finds herself exempted from all the little household duties, the house is full of friends who have called to see her and find out all about college. Life is just one party; she has a glorious time, and she goes back to college hating the drudgery of school, reliving all the events of her vacation time and time again. Here begins the severance, I believe, for Mary has now an exalted idea of home life and her family; she has replaced all the little commonplaces and petty worries of home life as she knew it before for a lovely dream. Perhaps all her vacations for the first year are similar experiences.

When she comes home for the first summer vacation she finds that she has not kept up with all the popular songs, the latest fads; she feels rather left out on many such scores. Numbers of her friends have married, gone away or found new friends. All of this increases her feeling that she isn't quite "in" everything. She finds that the interests she has developed at school do not quite fit into the conversations at home, and because of this she becomes a little more quiet, she listens more than she had before. Everyone except herself seems to have something to talk about, something of mutual interest.

However, by the middle of the summer (or earlier) she has discarded the topics she had discussed at college for discussions over whether to go to the beach for the week end, and whether Jane, her sister, needs a new permanent. Her first year at college has ceased to be a drawback; she is "in" again.

September comes, and Mary goes back to college, for she is really interested in her work, and vacation has begun to wear on her nerves. The campus looks good to her; she gets a thrill out of her first classes, meeting old friends and teachers. It is actually good to be back in school! She has a feeling that this life has a genuine objective; summer vacation was fun, but it was all so purposeless. Her work has increased. She writes to Mother that she thinks twice a week will be often enough to write home this year; her old four-times-a-week habit is too much; she is too busy now. Mother agrees; she also would rather not write so often. Mary does not go home for visits so often this year, her work keeps her on campus and then it is pleasant going to camp with her own crowd on week ends. Her general correspondence has decreased markedly; somehow she can't find the time. Mary is a good student; she makes what are considered good grades on the college campus, and she is rightfully proud of them. Her parents are not as enthusiastic about her grades as she thinks they should be; she knows they are comparing them with her high school grades. They have not a properly balanced sense of value on that score, but Mary decides there is nothing she can do about that.

Mary goes home at the end of the year, weary from her last-minute work and glad of a chance for a rest. This time home is quite a bit different. She is taken into the household routine, for she is now home for three whole months. Again she does not know the latest songs; she has not had time to see a show for some time; she is really quite out of practice in bridge, and she doesn't know the latest contract score system.

Somehow she can not get excited over the problem of whether the steak will get home in time for dinner, and whether to have dinner at noon or at night. If father is late in coming home for dinner she fails to see anything particularly distressing about it. Her family thinks she is rather unsympathetic. The family does worry about such inconsequential, such unimportant things! Mary is used to having worries about such things as a 5000 word sociology paper or 1600 pages of history parallel to read before Friday, things that are really hard to do. That is something to worry about when you have a hard-boiled professor, Mary thinks. And the family doesn't seem to understand the magnitude of such tasks at all!

It occurs to Mary that she is not as popular as she used to be; she has been rather absent-minded in her attentions to friends and family of late. So she determines, right then, to change; she remembers hearing college girls who were high-hat when they came home discussed before, and she recalls having said she would never be like that. And she sets out conscientiously to be interested in the baby's new tricycle, a new recipe that the neighbor brings in, and Mother's little problems. But she finds it very difficult; she cannot seem to develop the same interests they all have. She notices her Mother and Father making pitiful attempts to be interested when she tells about an experiment she made in psychology class. From that time on Mary's career is rather plain to be seen. The abyss deepens. It is not that she does not love her parents, does not appreciate all the opportunities they have made possible for her, but there is so little in common between them any more. She wonders if it is the college which is responsible. Is this what education does for you? No, Mary. As Lincoln Steffins said, "It is the apple."

Beta Pi Thetas Discuss Plans for French Play

Beta Pi Theta, French honorary, held a meeting last Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock in Broward lounge to discuss plans for the year.

Among other projects, the group planned to present a French play this year which will be of general interest to all French students.

that Mussolini's legions could subjugate the country in a very few months.

"There are two navigable rivers and plenty of other water sources. Sixty percent of the primitive tribes would be quite indifferent to the invasion, just as they are now indifferent to the rule of Amharas, the tribe to which Haile Selassie belongs. The ostensible rulers of the land do not dare to travel in the remote parts of Ethiopia without a strong guard."

Mr. Kuhne declared that bullets in Ethiopia are as good as cash now. He added that perhaps 75,000 natives have rifles, but many are so antiquated as to be practically useless.

out to the visitor while one of them said encouragingly, "You go ahead and take your bath Miss Lucy—Nobody's bathed in it but Rosie and me." From this Miss Lucy" gathered to her horror that the tub was filled every day or so with water carried in pails and that all twelve members of the family washed in the same water before it was emptied. Although "Miss Lucy" must have considered herself fortunate to have the chance to bathe after only "Rosie and me," she decided she was far too tired to take a bath!

Her summer was not without its "problem child." Willie Koo, a small Seminole Indian boy on a reservation that the Linns visited, filled this role admirably. When all the other little boys and girls of the settlement were quietly and earnestly employed in the study or handicraft work that "teacher" had assigned to them, Willie Koo could be counted upon to disrupt the peace of the place by some hoydenish action.

One morning Lucy Gee taught a group of her pupils various texts from the Bible. Willie Koo, docile for once, listened intently as she repeated the text, "Be ye kind one to another." That afternoon the class met again, but this time Willie Koo, possessed by several devils, climbed a tree above the class and refused to join it. T

ajority Favor Neutrality Rather Than State Of Armed Peace

UHN AND BLOOD SPEAK AT FORUM

rganization to Provide Medium of Expression For Campus Opinion

A forward step was taken by e students at the first NSFA pen forum held Tuesday ght in the Little theater, when ey expressed a definite opinn concerning America's stand the Italo-Ethiopian question. This open forum was the first tivity sponsored by the NSFA n this campus.

Shall America maintain a osition of strict neutrality in e affair between Italy and thiopia, or shall she take a efinite stand for peace along h France and England?" as the most important queson discussed.

Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman the local NSFA forum, stated calling the organization to or for the first time that "we l the need for an organized de of student expression here a campus which singularly ough is very unopinionated." In ther explaining what NSFA is ry Jeanne said that it is an anization which attempts "to press the typical philosophy of dergraduate America and to ponsor intelligent interest in affairs of national, international, campus scope."

Debating Movement Planned

NSFA has planned three things cording to Mary Jeanne, which thinks will aid in the job of ucing students to become pub-spirited. A bulletin board has en placed in the administration ilding where matters of current erest will receive notice. A box s been provided on this bulletin ard for suggestions as to the ics to be discussed during the of the year. All Seniors Must Attend Assembly

"Seniors must attend convocations," were the words of Dr. Edward Conradi at convocation Tuesday morning. He mentioned thet the college rule book requires all members of the student body to attend this asembly once a week, seniors not excused.

Although the programs for the year have not been worked out completely they are expected to be of interest to all students. The purpose of these convocations, according to Dr. Conradi, is to have the group meet once a week for an enlightening program.

Radio Program Honors School

Gainesville Broadcasts In Honor of Florida State

The University of Florida honored Florida State College for Women in their "Collegiana" radio broadcast from station WRUF, Wednesday afternoon from 5 to 5 o'clock. The broadcast was arranged as if it were a short play given in a sorority house on our own campus and was built around numerous musical selections. The University of Florida Clubmen and Frances Caldwell, vocalist, opened the program with the song-hit, "Double-Trouble." A high-spot of the program followed with Bill Bryan singing a popular song, "Girl from Tallahassee."

In the course of the program a short history of Florida State College was given. The history began with the provisions made for two colleges in the session of Legislature in 1851. In February, 1857, the Seminary west of the Suwannee River, which later became the Florida State College, was opened and continued until 1905. By an act of the Legislature, known as the Buckman bill, in June, 1905, six state institutions including the University of Florida at Lake City, the Florida State College at Tallahassee, the Normal School at DeFuniak Springs, the East Florida Seminary at Gainesville, the South Florida Military College at Bartow, and the Agricultural Institute in Osceola county, were all discontinued, and a university for the education of men and a college for the education of women were established. A Board of Control, consisting of five members, located the University of Florida at Gainesville and the College for Women at Tallahassee. Both schools were opened in the fall of 1905.

Also included in the history were descriptions of the Administration, Education, Science and History buildings, the Demonstration school, and the library. The residence halls were named and the source of the various names given. Bryan hall was named for Senator William Jennings Bryan; Broward for Governor N. B. Broward; Gilchrist for Governor A. W. Gilchrist; Reynolds for Mrs. William Ryeoolds, Director of Residence Halls from 1905 to 1909; and Jennie Murphree for Mrs. A. A. Murphree, wife of the first president of the college. The University complimented its sister institution both on its excellent situation in the cultural and political center of the State, and on the rapidity with which Florida State College has gained rec-

FERA Work Done By 184 Students

Employment Falls Into Two Main Heads

One hundred and eighty-four students are employed in FERA projects this year, according to Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel. Of this number, 92 are freshmen or new students, and 92 are upperelassmen.

The work done by F. E. R. A students falls into two main divisions: community projects and intramural or campus projects. The former, which gives employment to 31 students, includes Y. W. C. A. recreation and playground activities, projects in Leon High and in Florida High Boy Scout office, Girl Scout office and the nursery school Campus projects, in which 153 students are engaged, are apportioned among various academic departments and impose such duties as research, clerical and office work, and assisting in the library, gymnasium, or residence halls.

Although the F. E. R. A. program for this year is practically the same as that in operation during the second semester of last year, four new community projects have been added: F. E. R. A local office, Leon County Welfare office, city playground, and Y. W C. A. playground.

Receipt of funds for one graduate student project is expected soon, according to Dr. Andrews. Selection of a recipient for this project has already been made.

Martyrs to Monday Parallel Make Elbow-Pushing History

Novices Soon Learn That The Waiting Game Is A Treacherous One

By EVELYN FISHER

Bargain counters of huge department stores witness no greater mob scenes, battles, and elbow pushings than the regular Saturday noon shove for reserved books at the library.

Aspirants bolt Saturday lunch with a catch-the-train rapidity and gallop for the mellow and peaceful atmosphere of the college library. There, extending from the door of the reserved room the length of the basement and out on the sidewalk, a line of individuals hope for the best but expect the worst—the worst being that all the books will have been carried off before they get there.

"Line-standers" from the dining room who cannot understand why a line always greets them whether they eat their dessert or pass it on with a sigh to someone who "isn't taking history this year," will, after due psychological, criminological, and other "logical" research, discover that there are a few heroic souls upon the campus who will do without their daily bread in order that they may be the first to place caressing hands upon the only copy of So-and So on which a report is due Tuesday in a class of 40! Who says the flesh is stronger than the spirit?

The vast majority of this mob is composed of freshmen clutching their red syallabuses as they watch with dismay mixed with a little righteous indignation the technique of the upperclassman who leisurely steps into the place that a friend has "saved."

At precisely 1:15 o'clock the doors of the reserve room open noiselessly. This is a signal for a general tightening up along the line. Immediately there begins a definite forward movement accompanied by a murmur of "don't push"—from the front of course. The librarian looks over the angry mob with a semi-martyred, semi-accustomed glance, and her assistants brace themselves for the death-dealing glances directed at them when they are forced to tell someone that her book is out. Many of the book demanders are quite positive that the library and its entire staff are all members of a gigantic conspiracy in which they hide, burn, or tear to pieces tha books in order to snatch them from the hands of the tortured students whose parallel is due Monday.

Late comers should be one of the campus' greatest objects of pity. Wearily they stand for almost an hour at times. They advance inch by inch to the desk The world's most tragic statement awaits them there—"The books are all out." Can we blame them if in their utter dejection they plot dire deeds against the gloating individuals who pass by with the objects of their long wait?

The true philosopher among this last group, however, does not let this seeming failure daunt her. There are many and subtle ways of achieving the end. One of the best known of these may be practiced by suavely approaching the lucky person who carreid off the spoils of the battle, hypocritically praising her new permanent, and then after thus insiduously inserting one's self in her good graces to

Plans Made For Torch Ceremony

Marian Conn Will Preside As Diety Alma Mater At Torch Night

Carrying out one of the traditions of Florida State College, the sophomore class will present the annual Torch Night ceremony in the Open Air theater, October 15, 7:30 o'clock.

No juniors or seniors are to participate in any way this year; the complete cast is being chosen from tha freshman and sophomore classes.

Sara Graham is chairman and Ermine Lawrence is assistant chairman. The various committees named are: Properties, Ann Mizell; dances, Sarah Knight; costumes, Eleanor Ruff; staging, Beverly Brown; torches, Cora Cheney; programs, Katherine Rogers; rehearsals, Frances Thill; music, Mickey Conn.

The theme of Torch Night is taken from the old Greek custom called "Lampadedromia." From Prometheas' bright altar, swift runners took a lighted torch and handed it on undimmed, and thus it passed from the first runner to the last. Therefore, the sophomores are handing down to the freshmen the torch to guard, symbolizing the three torches of the college emblem, Mores, Vires, Artes. It is for the freshmen to keep the flames burning bright while they run their race so they in turn may pass it on to succeeding classes in the years to come.

This impressive classical pageant with Greek settings, scenes, and characters, will be simplified this year going back to the original idea.

Marian Conn as president of the sophomore class, will preside over the ceremony a. the deity, Alma Mater. Her attendants will be Phil Asher as Pallas Athene, Edith Merrill Ramsaur as Aphrodite, and Janet Cook as Apollo. About a hundred representative freshmen have been chosen to receive the torches.

Residence Halls Undergo Autumn Reopholstering

The furniture in Bryan, Gilchrist, Reynolds, and Jeanie Murphree, parlors has recently been refinished and reupholstered.

Chairs from Bryan hall were returned this week after receiving repairs, while more chairs from Reynolds and Jennie Murphree were reupholstered. In Gilchrist new drapes have been hung and the chairs have been newly re-upholstered. This hall is expected to be in order by Friday night for the President's reception.

Student Experiences First Feeling Of Superiority on Reaching College

City's Chosen One Finds Campus Life Full Of Disillusion

By MARTHA BAKER

I mounted the steps of the bus, elated, completely overcome. I was going to college. I was going to college to get an education, to learn to live my own life, and to gain a poise and culture that only college could give me. I was now experiencing my first feeling of superiority. I rolled the phrase "college set" over my tongue in glee. I had mysteriously but unquestionably become one of the city's chosen. I never had been popular at dances; I hadn't even sponsored one football game so perhaps I could be forgiven for having strutted a bit before the drug store loafers at the places we stopped on the way np, since I was a college woman now and therefore deserving notice and respect.

On arriving at college, very decidedly a freshman, my stock fell like a swollen river after a hurricane. After two weeks of classes I began to be very sure that I wasn't even yet, of the cream of the crop, in spite of the fact that I was one of my city's chosen. Christmas vacation arrived, as Chirstmas vacations do, and I once more donned my raiment of sophisticated superiority and allowed my humble subjects to gaze upon me. I even went to church those two Sundays; Mother makes such a fuss among the ladies of her acquaintance about her daughter "who goes to college, my dear!"

The next summer when I was politely asked how I liked college I replied that it was, of course, a wonderful opportunity for which I was extremely grateful but (looking wan and haggard) such a strain on one in every way.

I came back early my sophomore year—to help the freshmen get adjusted; the sudden change was so hard on them, poor dears. It was really too bad I wasn't chosen for freshman cabinet or

Editor States Policies, Aims Of Quarterly

Contents to Be Diverse With More Fiction, Art and Poetry

FEATURE SECTION TO BE UNCHANGED

Encouraged by Harpers Will Try to Maintain High Standards

"The policy of the Distaff for this year will be to present the best creative writing of students on this campus, and to publish intelligent student thought concerning contemporary problems," announced Sara Krentzman, editor of the Distaff, as she outlined the policies and aims of the college magazine.

To Maintain Standards

Encouraged by the first class honor rating that the publication received from the National Scholastic Press and the praise given it by the editors of Harpers at the end of last year, the staff, according to editor Krentzman, are endeavoring to maintain the standards set for the critical work which gained considerable comment, and to raise the standards of other departments of the magazine. Short stories, one-act plays, informal essays, and poetry will be given a more definite place in the magazine in an attempt to make it a more rounded magazine. The art work of the magazine which received favorable comment from Harpers critics will also be increased in the forthcoming issues.

Features Are Unchanged

The featured divisions of the magazine, according to the editors present plans will remain unchanged. "All Wool," a collection of satires, "And a Yard Wide," the editorial section, and "Marching Letters," a section of book reviews, comprise this division of the quarterly publication. For the first time in the history of the magazine an editor has been appointed for the "Marching Letters" section. Frances Forth has been appointed to this position. Other members of the staff include: editor, Sara Malcolm Krentzman; associate editor, Goldie Lewinsky; assistant editor, Daisy Parker; business manager, Mary aKthryn Gibson; advertising manager, Mary Jeanne McKay; circulation manager, Sarah Sealey.

The editors of the magazine stated thet they wished to emphasize the fact that the publication is open to contributions from all students on the campus. They are particularly anxious that freshmen should feel free to contribute. In accordance with a new policy established this year all work will be given a written criticism whether it is accepted for the magazine or not. All material should be placed in the Distaff

To Commemorate Birthday of Bible

First English Edition Out Four Centuries Ago

Four hundred years ago, October 4 the first English Bible was printed. In commemoration of this event the library, throughout the month of October, will exhibit books displaying different styles and translations of the Bible and religious books pertaining to the life of Christ and the Apostles. Posters of frontispieces and old title pages will be displayed.

A complete translation of the Holy Bible was first published in English in October, 1535. This anniversary is being observed in every English-speaking country this month. As the printing of the Bible was not yet permitted in England, the volume was first published on the Continent. William Tyndale wrote the New Testament, and was thrown into prison for his enterprise. However, Miles Coverdale completed this work and put the huge volume through the press

There followed many revised and more polished translations. After Elizabeth's death, when English writing was at great height, James the First assigned to several scholars the task of making an even more perfect version. The King James or Authorized Version was issued in 1611 and has since been the accepted version.

Requirements For Classes Announced

Registrar S. R. Doyla has made the following announcement for the benefit of those transfers and summer school students who are uncertain as to their classifications.

Class qualifications are to be found on page 36, section F of the student handbook under the head "Required Basis for Class Ranking." The qualifications for promotion from the freshman to the sophomore class are 30 hours and 27 quality points; sophomore to junior, 60 hours and 57 quality points; and junior to senior, 90 hours and 87 quality points. Any student not having 30 hours and 27 quality points is considered either a freshman or a special student.

Freshmen Hear Briggs Speak

"To learn to study is the most important thing you can learn during the first year at college," Dr. David H. Briggs, associate professor of education, told freshmen at Florida State College Saturday morning.

The freshman orientation period which began after freshman week will continue through November 2. Dr. Briggs' talk at the second meeting of a series of freshman meetings at which some of the faculty members will speak, was a part of the freshman orientation period.

It is hoped that through the activities of Freshman week directed by Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, personnel director, and Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of students, freshmen and transfers will become rapidly adjusted to college life in all of its various phases.

Dr. Briggs told the freshmen that the greatest asset that they can bring to college is a willingness to learn to grow and develop intellectually. If they do not have that desire and it is impossible for the college to help them create it, they are a liability to the college and the state.

Advising the freshmen to learn to study in preference to merely learning facts, the education professor pointed out that the truly educated woman is an individual capable of finding the solution to problems without the aid of her teachers. "By the end of your sophomore year," he said, "we trust that the college will have furnished you with experiences that will lead to your being able to do independent study, or capable of independently finding the solution to problems encountered during your senior college year as well as in after life. Close and effective cooperation between you and your teachers will help you arrive at this stage of intellectual independence."

Dr. Harold F. Richards, professor of physics, will speak on Extra-Curricular Activities, Saturday, October 5.

Budget Committee Will Study Expenditure And Plan Redistributions

Representatives from the faculty committees on student affairs and the faculty committee at large, have been selected to serve on the college budget committee.

Dr. Venila Shores, associate professor of history, was appointed from the committee on student affairs by Dr. Olivia N. Norman, dean of students. Miss Anna May Tracy, dietitian, was appointed from the faculty committee at large by President Edward Conradi.

Evelyn Kennard, elected chairman of the budget committee in May by the student senate, announced that three members, one from the senior class and two from the junior, will be appointed before the first official meeting of the committee next week.

Miss Kennard also stated that the budget committee has requested that all organizations on campus submit plans of their anticipated expenditures for the coming year in order that the committee may study their needs with a view to a redistribution of fees.

Other members of the committee are Dean Dorman, ex-officio, Mr. J. G. Kellum, ex-officio, and Audrey Smith, chairman of the auditing committee.

North Wing Of Ad Building to Be Renovated

Federal Government And State Legislature Allocate $92,048

RECONDITIONING TO GIVE MORE SPACE

Book Store, Post Office Will Be Much Larger When Completed

The Federal government has allocated $42,046 for the restoration of the north wing of the administration building, as far as the auditorium. This is approximately 45 per cent of the estimated $92,000 cost of the project, the remaining $50,000 being appropriated by the state legislature at the last session.

New Structure

The construction of the wing is under the supervision of Robert and Co., engineers and architects of Atlanta. The building will be of reinforced concrete and brick, using the present brick, the present doors and windows, terra cotta, roofing tiles, and as much lumber as can be economically salvaged. The floors will be of concrete covered with asphalt tile, while the walls and corridors will be lined with glazed tile, similar to those in the Education building. The structure will be wholly fire-resisting with the exception of a small part of the roof.

Wing Condemned in April

The wing was condemned April 1, because of dangerous cracks in the walls. These cracks were caused by a gradual sinking of that part of the building. At the time of its condemnation the wing was eight inches lower than the rest of the building. This sinking, according to Mr Mendenhall, was due either to the uncertain fuller's earth of the foundation or to an old trench which lies under the building and is reputed to have been part of the fortification of Tallahassee during the Civil war.

One of the motives for reconditioning the building was to allow for more space. In the new wing, the attic will be made into a new floor. The book store and the post office will be enlarged considerably and the registrar's office will contain a separate fire-proof vault.

Will House Offices

The wing will house, tentatively, the business office, the registrar's office, the art department, several bacteriology classes, the enlarged book store and post office.

Mr. Mendenhall hopes that this is the beginning of the reconditioning of the whole administration building and auditorium.

Andrews Directs Character Study

Freshmen are Interviewed By Upper Classmen

Personal interviews with members of the freshman class began on Thursday of last week under the supervision of Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel.

These half-hour interviews of newcomers on the campus, conducted in the personnel office by a group of 12 students selected last spring, will provide the college with a useful fund of general information concerning the students' past history, family life, and high school record. The information thus secured is placed on file in the personnel department, and is augmented from time to time throughout the four years of college residence by additional items, including grades, pictures, infirmary record, honors, participation in student activities, disciplinary standing, test scores, personality rating, etc. As a result of this gradual assembling of pertinent facts, the college is able to acquire a complete and valuable record of the character, capabilities, and accomplishments of its individual students.

Those selected to conduct the interviews this year are: Katherine Blood, Barbara Crosland, Minna Dunn, Frances Forth, Barbara Greene, Clarissa Knight, Sarah Krentzman, Lucy Gee Linn, Betty Meyer, Annawilda Norris, Gladys Oliver, Murae Reddick, Edith Webb, and Katherine Yongue.

Happy Birthday to You Popular Chorus In College Dining Hall

Birthday Candles Often Glow in Tribute To Aging Students

"Happy birthday to you" chorus nine voices at an elaborately decorated dining-room table while the owner of the tenth voice blushes profusely and attempts to express her surprise and gratification to the satisfaction of each of the nine hostesses. This is a most familiar scene, yet one that never fails to attract glances that are envious, amused, or perhaps curious as to the number of candles on the cake

An affair of this sort usually requires hours of advanced planning, which is an adequate excuse for neglecting homework. After all, friendship is to be considered above all else. On the eventful day, the table is decorated fully an hour ahead of time, the remainder of the hour being devoted to speculations as to the look of surprise on the fact of the guest of honor. There is then a tense period of waiting for said guest to enter, then a general uproar, and the party is under way.

It seems that the majority of the students are still broadminded enough to allow the proper number of candles to burn on the cake, though if one is possessed with a mathematical curiosity, one can plainly see that some cakes bear as many as twenty candles that are practically blown over by a most determined puff. It is evident that age makes little difference in the reactions. Girls of twenty are just as silly as those of sixteen, the balloons pop just as loud, the surprise packages cause just as much comment, and the paper caps perch on top of the heads in the same absurd manner.

As for those not included in the party, the dinner is completely spoiled. Somehow the food doesn't taste up to par and the atmosphere is dull Perhaps this odd sensation is due to an immense chocolate cake candles and ice cream on the table of our merry-making fellow students But consolation comes with the condescending thought that there is a close relationship between the actions of those of the party and inmates of the day nursery, or with the fact that everyone's time is coming, for birthdays are just those things that just cannot be avoided.

Mizell, Duncan, Horton Placed on Commission

Appointments to fill the vacancies on Freshman Commission have been announced by Hilda Spradlin, chairman, Sophomore students selected were Anne Mizell, Clearwater; Jean Duncan, Everglades; and Marjorie Horton, Ft. Pierce.

The places were formerly held by Marjorie Raulerson, whose appointment as sophomore representative to Judiciary made her ineligible for commission, and Betty Chitty, who is not attending Florida State College this year.

The new commission girls were tapped Monday night and formally took their pledge before the student body Tuesday at convocation.

Student Experiences Feeling of Superiority

commission—I was just the type I wasn't even made a proctor But I forgave them for I realized as the Bible says: "They knew not what they did."

I took great joy this particular year in playing the good Samaritan and even went so far as to look up freshmen I thought needed someone to confide in or to give good advice.

I took psychology that year and with the aid of an intelligence test found the not unexpected result to be that I had the intelligence of the upper tenth of the college student body. I immediately began considering if it wouldn't be wiser for me to remove myself to some superior school where my talents and abilities would be better recognized and developed However, my parents prevailed upon me to stay out the semester, at least and, realizing that my psychology professor might spread the glad news of my capacities I decided to remain. I was a little squelched at receiving a grade of C from above professor shortly after our discovery

My third year passed as the other two except that when I was home for Christmas vacation this time I was invited to speak before the young people's organization of one of the churches on "College Life: What It Has Done For Me." This I did, glad to be of service to the church and to give less fortunate than I, an idea of what a marvelous thing this college educational system is.

My fourth year I wore my cap and gown with the regal aspect of a queen. I had overcome that ridiculous feeling that there were any better than I. I had even managed to impress my professors to that effect enough to get a B average My parents, of course, appeared to see the impressive presentation of my diploma by the president of the college.

After the ceremony I changed into my street clothes and left my beloved alma mater. I had arrived! I was now ready to conquer the world!

I had seriously considered New York as my first conquest but due to the influence of my parents and through a sense of loyalty I returned to my home town. Everyone greeted me effusively and showered me with congratulations They admired my ring and diploma as well as my fluent vocabulary.

When I mentioned a job their hands went up in horror. Why, I was one of the elect, why should I speak of a job? The boys and girls that hadn't gone were the ones who needed the jobs

As I roamed around and saw all my old friends a pang of pity swept over me There was Dick. I had always felt sorry to leave him at home. Of course, he was making $25 a week but look what he missed. There's Mary, too, I can't understand yet why she didn't go. Of course she got that chance to be society editor of the paper but look at the culture and experience she missed

It is a year later. My soles are thin. My clothes are "sorta" ragged. My hair needs care. There aren't any jobs They weren't waiting for me to graduate. They were preparing some one else. I've a desk in an office down town. I'm a public stenographer. Glad I took that journalism course in college or I couldn't even type row. Must get a job soon or I won't be able to rake up enough to send Sis to college year after next

New Committee Now Functions

Nancy Wilkinson Elected Head of Off-Campus Judicial Group

The Off-Campus committee of the Judicial department of the College Government association has begun its work for this year This new committee, voted into the Judicial department last spring, held its first meeting recently.

The organization and duties of the committee are outlined in the official F. S. C. W. handbook article VI, section 3, as follows:

"The Off-Campus committee shall be made up of six seniors living off-campus and a chairman of the Off-Campus committee who shall also be a senior and live off-campus. All members are to be elected to their positions by the student body, and not more than one member of the committee shall come from a given house Off-Campus committee members shall not act as house chairmen in their own houses.

"The chairman of the Off-Campus committee shall call together and preside over all meetings. The committee shall meet at least once in every two weeks All other off-campus house chairmen shall be asked to meet with the committee from time to time.

"The committee shall deal with infractions of minor house rules in off-campus houses and its recommendations shall be approved by the Chairman of Judiciary.

"The committee shall cooperate with the Dean of Students and the Director of Off-Campus Housing in handling governmental problems which arise off-campus."

In the first meeting of the committee Nancy Wilkinson, of the Delta Delta Delta sorority, was elected chairman. The six other seniors elected to the committee are: Sarah Hosea, Sigma Kappa; Elizabeth Kirby-Smith, Chi Omega; Edith Perkins, Kappa Delta; Harriet Lawrence, Alpha Chi Omega; Carlota Cubillas, Alpha Xi Delta, and Mercia Scott, Alpha Gamma Delta. In the meeting Nancy divided all the off-campus houses into six groups consisting of three sorority houses and four off-campus houses each. Every member of the committee will have direct charge of one of the groups. The members had an examination on all off-campus regulations Wednesday night, and they will, as a result, be able to advise in any minor infractions of house-rules.

Nancy plans to have a meeting every week after Judiciary meets in order to become better organized and to work out any suggestions that the Judiciary may offer. The next regular meeting is planned for Tuesday night. A meeting of all chaperones and house chairmen is also planned for the immediate future.

ognition as the largest women's college in the United States. This part of the program was concluded with "Garnet and Gold," sung by the entire cast as a salute to Florida State College.

The musical portion of the broadcast was resumed with the Clubmen playing a modern concert arrangement of "When a Gypsy Makes His Violin Cry" Other current favorites the Clubmen featured were: "You're All I Need," "The Night Is Young," "I Couldn't Believe My Eyes," "Swamp-fire," "My Sorority Sweetheart," "Moonglow," and "Rhumba-man." "Silhouette of Love," written by Billy Van Brunt from Tallahassee, was given a prominent place on the program by the Clubmen and Frances Caldwell. All vocal selections were sung by Bill Bryan, Frances Caldwell, Roy Tew, Jimmy Butsch, Bud Brown, the Rufians, and the Collegiate Choir.

A brand-new version of Bill Bryan's song "Girl from Tallahassee," was sung by the writer himself, assisted by the Clubmen, the Rufians, and "Girls from Tallahassee." The climax program was reached when Bill sang his newest song, "When a G-Man Goes to Tally."

The program was brought to a close with the Collegiate choir singing "Hail, Florida, Hail," and the University of Florida wishing Florida State—

"The garnet and gold—
May she never wane!"

F Goats to Make Debut

Neophytes Must Be Able to Fly Off the Handle, To Scramble Like an Egg, to Imitate Dawn, and to Warble

"Maybe they're going to kick 'em around!" "I bet they have to get the size of everybody's shoes on campus" "Oh, I know, they have to find out how many shoes there are in the student body." "Of course not, stupid they only have to wear that many pairs in one day," were a few of the speculations in front of the "F" club bulletin board the other day, causing the little girl in the poster to look more bewildered than ever. However, after following a harassed looking upperclassman with a bottle of shoe polish in one hand and an old rag in the other, the speculators decided for themselves that the poster was a satire on the shoe cleaning habit of the goats.

So another goating season is upon us. At the present moment the "F" club goats with their "Fs" turned upside down are at the beck and call of "F" club members. The only definite work assigned to a goat is the tradition of shoe polishing. She begins her life of a goat by shining shoes black shoes, brown shoes, white shoes, tan shoes—she does them all. Imagine Goat Parabee's predicament if caught in the act of polishing and cleaning, by her best boy friend. Fancy Goat Peterson's shattered dignity on being caught by a freshman pledge interpreting spring Sympathy goes to Goat Baker, who lives with an "F" member.

A goat, at any time, when called on by an "F" club member must be ready to sing, dance, fly off the handle, scramble like an egg, or anything that the exalted one might request for her entertainment. The goats are also very good at running errands.

This summer the goats painted to their families and friends, pitiful pictures of their lowly state and jests and jeers they were forced to endure. Especially was their dignity at the lowest when appearing on campus and in classes as Dawn, Ben Hur, or an angel. Imagine their delight and sighs of relief when on their return this fall, they were told that they didn't hava to go to classes dressed in such outfits.

However, there are many other things that add to their suffering and until their formal initiation takes place at Camp Flastacowo sometime before the end of the quarter, the leg-weary goats with their dirty hands and stained fingernails (black is particularly hard to get off), jump into action when an "F" club member appears.

Danner Baker Is Model For Nationwide Advertisements

Photographing Well When Smartly Dressed Was Only Duty

Have you ever seen a model for a national advertisement? In case you haven't you may have the opportunity to do so before long for we have one right here on our own campus in the person of Danner Baker who has appeared in Camel advertisements

Last year Danner, who was living in Miami at the time, modeled clothes in one of the leading department stores of that city. One day as she was modeling clothes she was 'discovered' by one of the photographers of the R J Reynolds tobacco company. He saw that she had possibilities of photographing well, and so he arranged a trial test

Thus Danner Baker became a Camel cigarette advertising model. It was the first time that she had ever done any work of this type. Her duties consisted of dressing in smart clothes and being photographed Several "shots" were made in Miami including a golfing scene at the Biltmore Country Club, and a group picture at Miami Beach These pictures were then displayed in the Camel advertisements in all the leading national magazines and newspapers.

Danner, in explaining some of the details of taking the photographs says: "Large aluminum reflectors are arranged so that the sun shines directly on them. The people being photographed must look into these reflectors. Twenty-five or thirty shots are then taken."

Danner, a freshman at Florida State College this year, comes from New Smyrna She is 16 years old and her hobby is dancing.

When asked how she felt the first time she saw herself in an advertisement she said, "I just felt surprised."

NSFA Discusses Students Stand On War Dispute

story. We must go one way or the other."

TELLS EUROPE'S TENDENCIES

The second speaker was Gertrude Kuhn who spoke on the tendencies in Europe. Her discussion centered around the Italian-Ethiopian situation, with France and England as those who will probably become involved "Great Britain has the upper hand for she owns the Suez Canal and controls the Sudan territory; France owns the railroad in Ethiopia; Italy owns land on the northeast and southeast of Ethiopia and desires to connect the two. The latest radio reports state that England and France have agreed to unite against Italy"

After thirty minutes of open discussion the two central ideas as brought out were put in the interrogative form and a vote was taken. The question was as follows: "Is it our duty to take a stand for offensive neutrality, or shall we take a stand for peace whether this latter move involve the United States in war or not?"

As a further contribution to the discussion Katherine Blood stated that the students at the NSFA convention in Boston last December were definitely against" war of any aggressive manner." The vote taken on the above questions showed a decided majority feeling for neutrality.

Outside of this ruling question the discussion touched the possibility of a league of nations in which all countries would go against an aggressive one, if need be, or an international police force which would have full charge of policing the world. Another important question discussed was the possibility of Germany joining Italy in case of war. The final question discussed was the possibility of a racial war as an outcome of the Ethiopian situation.

The meeting was brought to a close by the chairman who stated that the forum will be held twice a month, the date of the next one to be announced shortly

Dormitory Directors Visit In Many Parts of Count

Matrons Seem to Prefer Mountains to Other Environments

Social directors of the various dormitories evidently felt themselves in need of a change of scenery at the end of the last school year. Eight of them took extended trips through different parts of the United States.

Miss Rose Denham, social director of Jennie Murphree, visited three weeks at Jacksonville Beach and a month in the mountains of Montreat, Norto Carolina. Mrs. Flossie McDonald Curry, house director of Jennie Murphree, after visiting in her home town, Quincy, took a tour during the month of August which included a boat trip to New York, a sightseing trip into Canada, and a cruise through the Great Lakes Mrs. Curry's itinerary also included a trip through the Thousand Islands at Alexandria Bay, New York. On her return trip, she visited Ausable Chasm and Niagara Falls.

Having stayed through the summer school session, Miss Ida Rebecca Rowan social director of Reynolds Hall, spent her month's vacation in the Black Mountains of North Carolina. Miss Rowan remarked that while she met several girls from Florida State there, she nevertheless had a restful summer Miss Mamie Rena Andrews, house director of the same hall, spent the month of August in Hendersonville, North Carolina

Mrs. Margaret Shaw Saynor, social director of Bryan and Broward halls, enjoyed a westward trip this summer to New Orleans and Arkansas. Mrs. Saynor travelling by bus, returning by way of Columbus, Georgia, where she visited the battlefields at Lookout Mountains Mrs. Sallie Luella Wimberly, house director of the same halls, took s boa to New York, where she rema for two weeks.

Travelling with her two dau ters, Mrs. Carrie Stinson Sca dret, social director of Gilchr motored to Norto Carolina by w of Birmingham. She also vis the New England states. M Melanie Scull Turner, house d rector of Gilchrist, spent so time with her sister in Baltim Maryland. After a trip to N York, she visited several of New England states.

Transfer Says Vassar College Is More Liberal Than Florida State

Girls Smoke Anywhere On Campus; Also In Their Rooms

Fewer restrictions but more responsibility is placed on Vassar students than students at Florida State stated Vinette Herron, transfer from Vassar college, in an interview this week.

Among the privileges of Vassar students are smoking in dormitory rooms and anywhere on campus, Vinette said, and dancing and riding with men at any time without the necessity of signing-up except on week-ends.

Although their curriculum was formerly similar to that at Florida State Vinette continued, it has now been changed to require only four subjects, each counting two points Two-hour classes meet only once a week, Vinette said, thereby allowing the student longer hours to study outside of classes.

This system which is used in most courses except beginning languages tends to place more responsibility on the individual student, Vinette added. Each student has one conference a month with her instructors and is allowed three cuts a semester in every subject Any student having below a "c" average is placed on academic probation.

Vinette described the Vassar campus as smaller than that at Florida State, yet more compact with five of the eight dormitories arranged in a quadrangle. Each dormitory has a separate dining room and after-dinner coffee is served every evening in the dormitory parlors.

Teas are also held in the parlors during examination week and it is customary for a student to take a teacher to tea at least once during the year.

Daily costume on the Vassar campus differs little from that here, Vinette said, with sweaters and skirts predominating. In the winter, however, 'Vassarites" prefer wearing ski suits to classes and she added, bicycles furnish transportation the year round.

Although Vassar students mingle little with those they are not thrown in contact with, Vinette said they are very politically-minded and interested in world affairs.

"But what more would one expect," she added, "when the college is located in New York where the greatest entertainments and educational programs in the whole nation are available."

Andrews Announces Final Examination

The psychology test required of all freshmen and transfers will be given for the last time today at 3 30 p. m in Room 203 Administration building.

All students who have not taken this test are required to take it to receive credit in college work and are requested by Dr. Elizabeth Andrews, director of personnel to report promptly.

College Council Suggests Change

Students May Now Attend Night Ball Games

The College council, at a meeting yesterday morning, decided to submit a recommendation for informal dancing in off-campus houses to the student senate for approval, and decided that students may attend ball games at night under special arrangements.

Freshmen and Sophomores may attend the games in groups, the minimum being four, one of which must be a junior or senior. If a game is attended during a week night it is coslderied as one of the regular three nights allowed freshmen a quarter.

The recommendation for off-campus dancing which is to be submitted to the senate is:

Informal dancing may be permitted at off-campus houses where as many as ten students are living provided the householder makes such a request. This dancing will be allowed on Saturday afternoons and evenings and under the same arrangements as the dances on campus.

Students Join Church Groups

Denominations Observe Relationship Day Next Sunday

The event of the week for campus religious groups is church relationship day, which is to be observed Sunday in all city churches. The purpose of the service is to give students an opportunity to affiliate with their churches.

As a part of the service in the Methodist church, officers of the student council will be installed, and the pastor will give an address for the college students. All denominations are planning similar programs to recognize and welcome the students.

Other activities scheduled for next week include the Baptists' Y. W. A. meeting Thursday night in the student room, and a banquet on October 11 for all Episcopal students. The Episcopalians are conducting morning watch services daily at 6.10. The Baptists hold vespers each evening at 7.30.

Retreats for three denominations are being planned for later in the month. The Methodist retreat on October 12 and 13 is to have as its leaders Dr. Harvey Brown, student worker from Nashville, Tennessee. Dr. Ira Barnett, executive secretary of the Florida board of Christian education, and Miss Eulalie Ginn, director of Methodist young people's work in Florida.

The Baptists will go to DeLand on October 18 for the State B. S. U. convention. Students from the University of Florida, Stetson University, Southern College, Tampa University, St Petersburg Junior College, and other schools in Florida will meet with the representatives from Florida State College.

The Presbyterian retreat is planned for the last week end in October.

Finnegan to Represent Panhellenic on Campus Association's Council

Election of new officers by the city Panhellenic association took place last Saturday at Ruge Hall.

Those chosen for major offices were: Miss Katherine Montgomery, president; Miss Louise Conradi, vice-president; Mrs. Clyde Atkinson, secretary; and Mrs. Kenneth Williams treasurer.

The Panhellenic elected Miss Mildred Finnegan as the representative from the organization to the college Panhellnic.

Plans were discussed for a benefit bridge party Saturday afternoon for the scholarship fund, and an award of $25 was given to the Alpha Xi Delta sorority for attaining the highest scholarship average.

The Delta Zeta and Theta Upsilon sororities acted as hostesses for the afternoon, serving sandwiches and tea to the members.

Newly-elected committee chairmen of the city Panhellenic are: Miss Florence Tryon, membership; Miss Louise Conradi, social; Mrs. Eaton Burr, scholarship; Mrs. Kenneth Williams, finance; Mrs. Clyde Atkinson, publicity; Mrs. Scott Reynolds, constitution and by-laws; and Mrs. Virgil Hancock, courtesy and transportation.

OUTING CLUB PLANS FUN

The board members of the Outing club are meeting Tuesday to discuss a program for the year The board consists of Beth Daane, vice-president of the Athletic Association; Hazel Viertel, junior class athletic manager; Betty Akin, senior class athletic manager; and Miss Dorothy White, faculty advisor.

Officers of the Outing club are planning hay-rides, moonlight hikes, and trips to camp. Miss White plans to arrange for a truck to leave for camp weekly or monthly on Saturday afternoons from 2:00-5:00. Since all students enrolled in the college are automatically members of the Outing club Miss White and the board urge cooperation so that all may take advantage of the privileges of the club.

"I'm Lazy," Says FSCW Girl in Answer To Questionnaire Concerning Studying

Interviewer Hears Student Opinion on Cramming, Study Schedules, Profs, Courses, In Frankly Discussed Problems

By ALTHEA SMITH

Although the Florida State college girl is a creature of many whims and variances, in her studying she is pretty consistently a "type."

In a recent endeavor to discover her study habits, a representative as possible questionnaire was presented to each of twenty-four students chosen at random though with a fairly equal proportioning as to academic standing, class, and temperament "type." The questions covered a general range of how much, how regularly, how thoroughly, how willingly, with what difficulties, and why the average student on this campus studies. As a result, here is a composite student attitude: She studies, in her own opinion, quite extensively, spending an average of three and one-half hours a day at her lessons, and usually allotting about an hour and a quarter to each assignment. She follows a fairly regular routine of study, and she emphatically does not consider her courses impartially, but is affected in the time she spends on them chiefly by her likes and dislikes She finds week-ends slightly more propitious to concentration than week-days, and nights better than days. She prefers to study alone, and in the proper surroundings, rather than at odd moments anywhere. As a rule, she is against "cramming," and studies consistently throughout the school year, taking notes rather than depending on her texts alone. She gets her assignments in on time, although she admits that she is something of a procrastinator, and regrets her (southern) laziness. As for the all-important question of why she studies, her honest answer is, in the main: "because my family expects me to make good grades" and then "because certain courses interest me, and will be of service to me in the business world."

Differences between the classes is an essential outcome of the study. The senior and the freshman are noticeably alike in several respects. Both study extensively, the average freshman spending a mean of four and one-tenth hours daily on her work, with an hour and a half to the average assignment, and the senior studying for almost five hours daily, with one and six-tenths hours per assignment. The sophomore, in contrast, has dropped to three and one-tenth hours a day, and one and two-tenths per assignment, and the junior rarely exceeds two and a half hours, and on an average of one per assignment. Both seniors and freshmen study consistently as opposed to "cramming," and both classes are especially insistent on studying alone rather than with someone else

Freshmen, juniors and seniors lead an admitted life of putting things off till the last minute, while sophomores almost unanimously agree that they get things in on time regularly. Freshmen alone express a need for help in studying, but invariably add that "no one has time to help a freshman!" The twenty-four representatives of the four classes unite in declaring without a single dissenting vote that they are dissatisfied with their grades because their scholastic goal is always a little higher. All four classes agree also that their courses are "hard." No student complains of too much work, or too hard a course, however. Six described their work as easy.

Freshmen, contrary to their training at the opening of school, make themselves heard unitedly and firmly on the question of the "study schedule," and refuse to have anything to do with a plan thus "cut and dried." In regard to the study schedule, also, this survey shows that all twenty-four take a definite stand on the question. The majority, including every freshman interviewed, denounce it. Of the others who approve, one girl puts her approval into practice. The rest believe but do not practice the theory.

Eighteen out of the twenty-four "subjects" find reading aloud effective in studying language, literature, and the like. Seventeen study mostly at night. All the subjects questioned feel that they could make better grades; the majority say "if I weren't so lazy," or "if I had more time and fewer courses." Two girls of the twenty-

YWCA to Hold Annual Meet

Program Includes Sings, Sunset Devotional, And Addresses

The annual retreat of the Young Women's Christian association will be held at Camp Flastacowo on Friday and Saturday of this week-end. Attending this retreat will be the members of executive and freshman cabinets and the faculty advisory board

A definite program has been arranged. On Friday night a devotional will be led by Anne Norris, vice-president of the Y. W C. A. Saturday morning at eight o'clock there will be a devotional on the lake in the form of a "sing." Members will be grouped in canoes with the bows headed together. Helen Cate will be the leader of this gathering

After breakfast Dr. Kathryn Trimmer Abbey, professor of history, will give a talk on "Having a Purpose in Life." Following this there will be a general discussion by the entire group of "Policies of the Young Women's Christian Association on Campus."

After lunch the various committees of the organization will meet separately and plan their work for the coming year. As the sun is sinking Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell, professor of philosophy, will lead a "sunset devotional." After supper Lucy Gee Linn, president of the Y. W. C. A. will give a closing talk. The retreat will end with a "sing" and members will return to campus at 9:30 p. m.

The purpose of the Young Women's Christian association this year to make every member feel that she is a part of this organization and that she has a definite place in it. The leaders of the organization are making an effort to give every member a duty in order to bring her into closer association with this group.

Three new members of executive cabinet have recently taken office. They are Edith Taylor, Beth Clarke, and Virginia Northcutt.

The Young Women's Christian association is now holding old-fashioned "sings" to which everyone is invited each Wednesday afternoon at 6.15 in the open air theatre.

Nine Instead of Seven Sets of Twins Enrolled

According to Jessie McNeill, secretary to the president, additions have been made to the list of twin enrollment, appearing in last week's Flambeau.

Those twins not mentioned last week are Lola and Lula Hopkins, day students from Tallahassee, and Clara Belle and Eugenia E. Trimble, Lake Jem, Florida. All four of these girls are enrolled in the freshman class.

Even Upperclassmen Answer Summons To House Meetings

Kimonas, Curlers, And Cold Cream Invade Gilchrist

"What's it about?" "Probably we'll get scolded for being so noisy." "I bet it's to tell us a lotta stuff we already know."

These and various other comments greeted the announcement of a Gilchrist house meeting Wednesday night. Stealthy remarks from certain girls that they were going to bed instead of attending an old house meeting zig-zagged their way to the upper regions from whence came the caution, "You'd better not. They're going to check roll."

Consequently, second light flash found almost every inch of parlor floor covered with giggling, chattering feminae perfectae. Bathrobes and hair curlers, conspicuous for their non-conformity to parlor regulations, caused much amusement, which was only heightened by the unusual appearance of shining, cold-creamed faces. Mules and felt slippers clattered and shuffled their way up the steps until the house chairman introduced Miss Flowers, director of residence halls. Breathing was suspended for fully five seconds; then relaxation set in, accompanied by smiles. This wasn't so bad.

"Of course, we should keep our smoking rooms in better condition. They're not half so pleasant all cluttered up with ashes and cups and paper. Hm! Must look after that." Mental notes were being taken. "And that idea of boys' not honking at our windows—fine: Maybe we'll get some sleep now, and won't run to the window every little while to see who honked. Good speech, Miss Flowers."

The house chairman's explanation about the new engagement cards no doubt cleared up a little uncertainty about introducing the date and what-not. Titter, titter. That was a good remark about femina perfecta's not yelling around the way some so-called whatsi's have been doing.

Most of the Gilchristite's looked a bit shamefaced when the social directors were introduced. "Should have gone to see them long before and become acquainted. That won't matter now, though. They said they would help at any time if problems arose. Could that include math. problems?"

A few more announcements, such as the one about the elevator's not being intended for passengers (guess that punctured a few tires), a few more laughs, and then bedlam as the meeting was adjourned.

Clomp, clomp! Shuffle, shuffle! Slam, slam! And Gilchrist was as quiet as could be expected after an unconventional house meeting.

A COLLEGE PROFESSOR DISCOVERED
That Often It Isn't a Student's Brain but his Pen that Runs Dry—causes Failure—in Classes and Exams!

So he invented this sacless Vacumatic, and Parker engineered it to perfection—gave it 102% more Ink Capacity—made its Ink Level VISIBLE, so it suddenly can't go empty!

YES, a scientist on the faculty of the University of Wisconsin was amazed to find how pens that run out of ink slow down classes, demoralize thinking, and bring marks that no student wants to write home about.

His observations led to the birth of the revolutionary Parker Vacumatic. This miracle pen writes 12,000 words from a single filling—shows when it's running low—tells when to refill!

Any good store selling pens will show you how the Parker Vacumatic eliminates 14 old-time parts, including the lever filler and rubber ink sac found in sac-type pens. And due to this, it has double room for ink, without increase in size.

But don't think that sacless pens containing squirt-gun pumps are like Parker's patented Vacumatic. This new creation contains none of these. That's why it's GUARANTEED MECHANICALLY PERFECT!

Go and try writing two different ways with its Reversible Point—solid Gold combined with precious Platinum—skilfully fashioned to write on both sides—slightly turned up at the tip so it cannot scratch or drag, even under pressure!

Do this and you won't let an old pen impede your learning another day. The Parker Pen Company, Janesville, Wisconsin.

Why Do We Come to College?

Doubtless all of us wonder sometimes, and probably, if we stop to think, reach the same two conclusions—some of us come with a definite aim of benefiting ourselves in view, the rest of us as a matter of course. In either case, we are apt to answer vaguely that college is preparation for life.

To what extent this preparation exists and may be carried out depends not upon the school, but upon those to be prepared. In academic activities we are helped along considerably by our instructors in the process of preparing ourselves for the "battles," proverbial or real that we are later to encounter outside the college gates. But in order to keep Jill from becoming a dull girl (if she places emphasis upon the scholastic ideal of college attendance), there are other activities which form a valuable practical supplement to the knowledge gained in the classroom and laboratory. Actually at our fingertips here are the keys to such qualities as leadership, eloquence, physical prowess, ability to organize; here on our own campus we are given ample opportunity to become expert at everything from archery to arguments—from camp cookery to convention-trotting—from singing to star-gazing. And when we run out of already-established extra-curricular activities to describe, there are countless others waiting for enough devotees to gain a foothold. Witness the new International club, the interest in fencing, in ball-room dancing, in the public playground project fostered by Y. W. C. A. and interested persons, and in the rapidly increasing membership of the Astronomy club, all of which have sprung up during recent school terms.

Actual business conditions are encountered in work on publications, voluntary, or in the status of officials; college government positions; committee membership; athletic enterprises; program planning; and innumerable other concerns. From such relationships, we learn more of business procedure than we could find in any courses covering that field. In many cases, men and women who now hold positions of responsibility and large recompense were not the most outstanding academically, during their college careers. They were, rather, those who were able to handle themselves and others, to manage affairs, and to command as well as to give cooperation, evident from their collegiate records in sports and in sportsmanship.

The personality developed by such associations is an asset whose worth cannot be overestimated. To make the most of college, we look further than the course of study, for what is termed a well-rounded mental development. Extra-curricular activities fill the bill.

A successful balance between the two sorts of activity is needed, of course, but of equal importance is a balance among students engaged in the various fields open [illegible]. Far too often it is the case that the same students make up the personnel engaged in every project just as it is the same group of students engages in every sport. Responsibility is centered rather than distributed enjoyment is limited to the same participants in every case. But those who enjoy and who lead are not "chosen" few only in the sense that the choice lies with each individual student. Choose yourself a responsibility and shoulder it. Have a part in running things. Choose yourself some fun and have a part in playing, too.

Does the Working Student Care?

With the creation of the National Youth Administration, a project which aims to extend part-time employment to needy college and high school students, many young people who otherwise would have been denied access to the "portals" of higher learning are now enrolled in various colleges and universities throughout the United States. On our own campus 184 students, or 12 per cent of the total enrollment receive such aid, while the college itself employs 182 in dining room service, department assistantships, office work, and miscellaneous activities.

Whereas in the remote past the only students who attended a university were those whose parents could afford to pay all of their expenses, there are now many of us who feel the necessity of more money to fulfill our collegiate needs than can be spared from the family pocketbook. Commenting upon the status of the working students of several years hence the Reveille, student publication of the Louisiana State university, says they were something of a rarity—"poor creatures who, though possibly not looked down upon by their luckier classmates, were certainly left out of all university life except the routine of classes. Their work, in most cases, had no connection with the university, and was of no value to the student except for the financial assistance it offered.

"In the last decade, however, a change has been steadily revolutionizing the university life of the working student. Instead of the scattered few who formerly earned their expenses in college, there are now thousands who hold university jobs. And in many cases the jobs themselves have changed, now being made as much as possible an aid to the curriculum itself, by placing the student in a type of work which fits in with his professional course. It is toward this end that the NYA is working—to give the student maximum financial aid without interfering with his real purpose in coming to the university."

Such an attitude is not new, but comes as the result of a long evolution. It naturally affects the attitude of the student herself toward her work, bringing about relationships and adjustments which are more satisfying to all concerned. With this conception of work and the increasing emphasis placed on it, new fields are open to the working students of American universities.

The "weaker sex" is constantly being reminded of how much money they spend on facials, permanent waves, and other so-called beauty aids, but at the University of Minnesota statisticians and figure-hunters have recently shown that women students spend only seventy-six cents more per month in beauty shops than men do in barber shops. And they spend only a fraction of the amount that men spend on tobacco. These figures were found in the results of a survey of the buying habits of students at the University of Minnesota made by an insurance company. We wonder what a similar survey conducted at the University of Florida and Florida State College for Women would reveal.

Tiring of having certain band music described as "hot", when there was no scientific proof that the music was hot, cold, or luke-warm, scientists of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology decided to do something about it. They have invented an apparatus which, if fed the strains from a dance orchestra, will tell whether the music is high, low, or medium, measuring the temperature produced by sound waves traveling in the air, and recording the actual degree of heat reached by the melodies tested.

Now if something could just be done about measuring and utilizing the vast amounts of energy escaping daily in the disguise of professorial oratory.

The junior and senior classes are to be commended for throwing away such useless and outworn customs as Fealty and the Daisy chain. But these are not the only [illegible] traditions celebrated on our campus. Why not discard a few more and campaign for bigger and better ceremonies.

GETTING ALONG WITH WOMEN
Harper's Monthly, October, 1935

Having grown up and worked with women all his life, the writer thinks he is qualified to tell men how to get along with their women.

Blinded by masculine tradition, after marrying a woman (which the writer says, is more a matter of glands than rational choice on the part of would-be husbands) men put their wives out of mind except as mistress and minister to their well-being.

Thus when woman flies up with "You don't understand me," her man goes off in a huff, admitting it useless to try to understand idiots. Now woman, the writer declares, although emotional, is a rock-bottom realist and she knows man is simply trying to cover up his hurt pride by such actions.

Woman wants to possess and absorb her man, he adds, but is quelled by her husband's ignoring her quick instinctive knowledge which is often keener than his in a certain situation. Consequently, they both gloat, and divorce often is the outcome.

The writer advises men to appreciate women in spirit as well as body, add a sense of humor and remember "it is a case in which the man surrenders only to win."

AUCTIONEERS OF PARADISE
By Hassoldt Davis
American Mercury, October, 1935

Paradise is the South Sea Islands, and the auctioneers are missionaries.

In the name of the Christian gospel, Davis declares, these evangelists have been exploiting the natives' land, produce, even habits and gods in order to win converts and share profits with white traders.

As a result of their confused and superstition-coated beliefs in the Christian God or their beliefs in utterly nothing, Davis says, the natives are afraid of love, of hell, of sunlight.

Diseases hithertofore unknown to the natives have increased their mortality rate, as a result of the natives' wearing clothes indorsed by the missionaries. Furthermore, arrogance, drunkenness, laziness, lying and petty thievery reign, Davis declares, where cannibalism and infanticide once did.

However, natives are beginning to wake up and repeal such laws as the prohibition of native garments and, Davis says in conclusion, the brown people will live more happily again even if Europe will not profit thereby.

WILL DEMOCRACY SURVIVE?
A Debate
Forum, October, 1935

Lord William Cecil, bishop of Exeter, and of a family whose title dates back to 1571, takes the issue in this debate, "Democracy is too Unjust to Survive."

During the past two thousand years democracies have appeared as a method for producing justice, the Bishop declares, and having produced injustice, have always given way to some form of autocracy.

Since democratic candidates must appeal to the material interests of the voters in order to be elected, it is no wonder a selfish government is the result. Selfish governments like selfish people, he says, are in constant friction with others.

Furthermore, since democracy appeals to selfish motives, it encourages corruption. It gives justice to the majority and how, Lord Cecil asks, can the majority be a guide to the side on which justice lies?

In conclusion he says general prosperity cannot exist without justice nor justice without a form of government that appeals to the higher nature of man and aims at producing brotherhood among all men and all nations.

Henry Adams Bellows, refuting the Bishop's argument with the issue, "Democracy is Inevitable," asks the Bishop if democracy has not endured, have autocracy, oligarchy, theocracy, communism done any better in this respect?

As for brotherhood, democracy would answer as well as any present form of government it would seem, he adds, judging from the motives revealed by interests of Mussolini, Hitler, Japan, and Russia.

Besides, we do not know whether democracy like the Christian religion has ever been fairly tested, he says, adding that the methods of democracy should be expected to change.

The inevitability of democracy lies in its source of political power, which, he concludes, is the people—the whole people. No man, no family, no ruling class has ever endured and democracy will endure until a political power mightier than the people is discovered.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

BY GRACE MARY WEBSTER

While unofficial reports from a Paris correspondent say that fighting has already begun between Italian and Ethiopian troops, official reports show only that 250,000 African warriors are responding to the call of the war drum in a march toward the Italian colonial frontier, and the Italian government denies aggressive movements in Ethiopia.

From Geneva comes an unintentionally humorous report that these developments have "set members anxiously asking each other if the Italo-Ethiopian crisis has already gone out of their hands."

Meanwhile President Roosevelt in the presence of the U. S. fleet out on the west coast declares to the world that the United States "must remain unentangled and free."

Mussolini in a speech to 20,000,000 mobilized Fascists this week announced boldly that Italy will wage colonial war on Ethiopia. He declared that he "finds it simply monstrous" that Britain, "which dominates the world," should deny to Italy "a poor strip of land in Africa."

Unofficial observers in Italy predict that the Italian defensive will begin between October 5 and 10.

Jimmy Donahue, another Woolworth millionaire, cannot understand why a group of young fascists under his hotel window in Venice became enraged and asked him out of Italy when he stepped onto the balcony and shouted, "Viva, Ethiopia." Two "polite and nice" detectives ushered Jimmy to the border-line, and now Jimmy is stranded in a Parisian hotel calling for the family lawyer to straighten things out.

It was disclosed this week that France is having trouble getting Italy and Ethiopia to agree to making the Djiboute-Addis Ababa railroad neutral. Ethiopia claims that "the concession governing the railroad gives Ethiopia the right to use it in time of war." Similarly the Suez canal company contends that the League of Nations cannot make the canal neutral because the treaty of 1888 says it must remain open in time of war.

Recent reports of Roosevelt's increasing unpopularity in the United States would seem unfounded when his welcome in Hoover's home state is taken into consideration. The crowd which jammed the streets of Los Angeles for his welcome this week is reckoned at 70,000. His speech urging "liberals to unite on common ground" was interrupted time and again with applause. This reception was only one of those he has received all through the middle west and far west, where his recovery policies are beginning to show definitely favorable results.

"I have but one thought of regret today," the president said. "This great gathering brings to my mind the splendid pageant in this coliseum which I saw in 1932. On that occasion I was introduced by a very old friend of mine, a friend of every man, woman and child in the United States, a kindly philosopher—one who would be with us today but for his untimely death in Alaska."

"Will Rogers' kindly humor saw facts and laughed at them in fantasy."

The seventh national Eucharistic congress, held in Cleveland last week, was dedicated entirely to the cause of world peace. The archbishop of Cincinnati, speaking to 50,000 people, assailed "proud leaders insane in their own conceits" who are plunging the world into "suicidal war."

"May the congress prove a mighty prayer that the menacing clouds of war may be dissipated by the radiant splendor of the Prince of Peace," he said.

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

N. Y. A. IS INADEQUATE

Willard E Givens, executive secretary of the National Education Association, is accredited with saying that the National Youth Administration is a gross example of New Deal inefficiency. Mr. Givens contends that the work could be done more economically through the United States department of education and the various state departments of education.

The National Education Association, according to the Christian Science Monitor, maintains that financial assistance should be given to already established schools without federal control. Mr. Givens contends that the N. Y. A. is being used as an instrument for political log-rolling.

These are, perhaps, valid accusations. Certainly the Roosevelt administration has been guilty in the past of playing politics and there is little reason to believe that the N. Y. A. is not one more attempt to make the youth of the nation, Roosevelt-minded. But let us for the moment assume that none of these things is true. Let us declare, for the sake of argument, that the Administration is absolutely sincere in attempting to alleviate the burdens of young men and women.

Is the N. Y. A. accomplishing this purpose? Some authorities estimate the number of American students who need financial assistance at approximately 3,000,000. Since the N. Y. A. has only approximately $50,000,000 for the purpose of "putting youth upon its feet" this means slightly over $16.66 per needy student during the existence of this governmental set-up. Obviously this is inadequate, and thus, we find that it has become necessary to limit the number of persons eligible for N. Y. A. money.

Now let us forget about those thousands who are arbitrarily ruled ineligible for the Administration money. How about those who are getting it? Here again we find an inadequacy since the unskilled get but 30c per hour and the skilled get 40c. Prices of food have gone up (a dinner runs over 40c) and the wages of student labor have been lowered. It costs more to get a meal in the Commons this year than it did last, but the student who must buy the food have taken cuts.

Nor is it possible to understand the reason for the differentiation in wages. Certainly those students who get paid 30c per hour do not pay any less for their food their clothing or their other necessities than those who get 40c. Nor does the N. Y. A. solve the problem of those thousand or more on this campus who have applied for jobs and were turned down. They, too need the necessities.

Therefore, returning again to our original theme we must find Mr. Givens' reason for opposing the N. Y. A. too parsimonious, and while we are inclined to agree that the Administration intended N. Y. A. to convert American youth to the New Deal, we feel that the contradictions inherent in this 'reform' administration will tend to tho disillusion a large part o America. The N Y A failure from its very beginning

Pro and Con

Opinions expressed in this column are not necessarily expressions of the editorial policy of the paper. It is a column of personal comment and is open to all who wish to submit sincere and constructive criticisms. Letters should be signed marked "Flambeau" and mailed in the postoffice.

TO THE STUDENTS

The social committee on our campus is interested in promoting the friendship implied in the word social. For success in life one must be able to meet and associate with people in a natural and pleasing manner. We are not primarily interested in the technicalities of etiquette, but we are interested in furnishing a basis for real companionship and happy associations. We are interested in promoting understandings between the faculty and students and in fostering those friendships which may some day be the richest experiences of our college life.

Of course, we shall remember the niceties of social conduct not only because they reflect our inward traits but also because in group life they are most necessary for the general welfare. Bad habits formed are hard to break and are liable to appear at the most inopportune times. Consequently, we ask that for your own good you observe the accepted standards of good social conduct and courtesy.

In carrying out our year's program we welcome any suggestions which you may have to offer or any constructive criticism of our work which you may give at any time.

If any students have questions regarding social matters, the committee is asking that they write them and drop them in the college post office, addressed to the social committee, 208 Broward. They will then be referred to an authority on the subject. When the questions and answers are thought to be of general interest to the student body they will be published in the Flambeau. Such questions do not have to be signed.

It is the committee's earnest desire to serve you this year and to meet your social needs. We do not limit our activities to any one group, but will be glad to help anyone wishing our assistance.

We are not authorities on social matters, but we wish to meet the needs of social life on our campus. On matters involving technicalities we will ask the support of authorities. Therefore, please send us your queries. Help us to make this phase of college life what you wish it by offering us your suggestions.

Signed

Mary Etta Thistlethwaite
Chairman, Campus Social Committee

UPPERCLASSMAN FAVORS NEW ORIENTATION PROGRAM

Among other things that upperclassmen noticed upon their return to the campus was the apparent smoothness with which the freshman orientation program was running, particularly that part of the program related to freshman week. To those of us who have witnessed three or more freshman weeks the thing was even more noticeable.

The new students, on the whole seemed to know what they were expected to do where they were supposed to go, and how the next move was to be carried out. To upperclassmen the shortness of "lines" in the various offices was appalling. When I was a freshman we stood two by two in lines that many times stretched the length of the halls of the Administration building.

The credit for this great change goes to the persons who had charge of revising the freshman week program, I believe. Group programs were already mapped out and not left to the individual as in previous years. Upperclassmen were actually provided to look after the different groups and this year the whole load of orienting was not piled on the counselors. They were able to devote all of their time to the giving of needed directions while the freshman advisers were free devote themselves to the teaching of campus regulations.

Though there are probably many ways in which freshman orientation can be improved nevertheless we cannot afford to overlook the great forward step which has been made this year.

Signed

Hazel Bowman.

Reporter Learns That One Hundred and Six Sets On the Campus Are Not Lacking in Regard To Variety and Individuality

By PEARLE SHEPARD

There are people who call for your clothes, pick up your shoes and even mend your stockings, so I felt quite in the swim when I poked my head in the doors of many students to inquire, "Have you a little radio in your home?" I got so I could even surmount that "Yes, I have a radio· so what?" expression and walk right in.

Having discovered that there were 106 radios in the dormitories I started out Saturday morning with my lunch under my arm to make a tour of the halls, feeling much like the Fuller brush man or the census taker. If there were radios in "them thar halls" I wanted to see what they were like; whether their owners enjoyed them and lots of other things.

I found a tiny radio that had only two tubes and which could have been placed easily under one's pillow, while in contrast there was one magnificent box that held eight tubes. Another had a large oval dial case that lighted up like a headlight and when turned on it disclosed an elaborate set of dial pointers, in addition to many knobs to be turned.

Several times I played amateur technician, advising an aerial here or a ground there or sometimes I just sympathised with those whose radios were out of commission. And then I found there was somebody who should be added to the rolls of the "meanest person in the world"; the aerial thief. Somebody climbed up in a pecan tree and took one, so one radio does not operate

We talked about programs, stations, receptivity, but the most important question, I believe, was "Can you study while the radio is playing?" Surprisingly enough the majority said that they not only could study while the radio was turned on, but that they thought they could concentrate even better to the soothing strains of music To one person radio music seemed to suggest studying. It reminded another of home to have the radio going, while another said she could concentrate much better on her drawing if she worked by music.

The question of programs brought up the subject of non-interruption radio playing in the rooms now. Great was the rejoicing evidenced in all the dormitories because now radios could be played any time. Except, of course the freshmen, who had little to say about this regulation.

As for program preferences, some had none. Wherever the dial took them was satisfactory. Others had distinct likes for dance orchestras — Ray Noble leading this group, with Jean Garbo, Guy Lombardo and Louis Prima also sharing honors.

One girl just wouldn't miss "One Man's Family" and another told of awaiting with anticipation each week for 'House of Glass." Major Bowes was widely acclaimed.

A residence director smilingly told me that a radio was much better than a husband—because you can turn a radio off. This same director was thrilled because she had just installed a radio in her room.

Probably the most pathetic statement made during my long and weary trek was given by the girl, in answer to my question concerning her favorite program, who said "I don't know. It's my roommate's radio and I listen to what she likes."

The committee also offered resolutions opposing Nazism, Communism and Fascism. The anti-Soviet resolution was the result of a charge that the Soviet government is guilty of "inimical and subversive agitation." The president has in his hands the power of recognition.

Delta Delta Deltas To Entertain With Teas Every Week

Beginning Sunday afternoon at 4 30 the members and pledges of the Delta Delta Delta sorority will begin a series of informal teas which will be held regularly on every Sunday afternoon throughout the year.

These teas are given for the friends of the sorority and for members of the faculty.

Authority On Math Speaks To Students

Dr. Carver, of Michigan University Visits In Tallahassee

"There is no life work that does not require mathematics," says Dr. H. C. Carver, professor of mathematics at the University of Michigan, who is now on sabbatical leave and is residing in Tallahassee.

"The average person has never had this pointed out to him," he said. Students should not be so hasty in avoiding mathematics in high school and college for sooner or later, no matter what profession you specialize in there will be need of mathematics."

Accounting, economics, mathematics of finance and statistics are the corner stones of business, Dr. Carver said, and in education, psychology, biology, medicine, journalism and other fields, mathematics takes an important role not always considered.

To cite an example Dr. Carver told of Paul De Kruif, writer of the book Microbe Hunters who while going to school at the same time as Dr. Carver, said that mathematics was one thing he would surely never waste his time on. Yet some years after Paul De Kruif had graduated he had to come back to take mathematics for he found that he had gone as far in the field of bacteriology as he could go without the aid of mathematics.

Dr. Carver is now working on a book of the mathematical principles of statistics. His book will be a comprehensive course in mathematical statistics, rather than like the usual books on this subject which tend to specialize in one field or another. Designed for second and third year college students, this will be the first book of its kind to be published, and will be used at the University of Michigan where Dr. Carver is head of the statistics department, a subdivision of the mathematics department.

Dr. Carver gave a talk to a small group of the faculty and students Tuesday night in which he endeavored to prove that the correlation coefficient when applied to psychology and education should be used with care, that the limitations of this theory are but one aspect of the correlation analysis.

Miss Olga Larson, instructor in the mathematics department here, was a student under Dr. Carver.

Central Bryan Switch Will Flash All Lights Together in the Future

For the first time lights have been flashed simultaneously in all the dormitories. A central light-switch, which is connected with the electric wiring in each residence hall and which allows all lights to be flashed at the same time, was installed in Bryan hall on Monday. The switch is intended to do away with the past irregularity of light-flash in the dormitories.

In addition to the three regular light-flashes at 10:15, 10·30, and 10:35 p. m. on week-nights, another flash has been added to the duties of the new device. An extra flash at 11.30 p. m. is to remind the upperclassmen and "light-cutters" that even the studious must sleep.

The new switch was used for the first times last Tuesday night by Melba Hutchinson, house chairman in Bryan, and Mrs. L. R. Rivers, night matron.

MEMBERS OF KAPPA ALPHA THETA WILL BE HOME TO FRIENDS AT TEA SUNDAY

The members and pledges of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority will entertain their friends and members of the faculty with an informal tea in the sorority house from 4.30 to 8.00 Sunday afternoon.

Fall flowers in deep shades will be used to decorate the rooms of the home where the guests will assemble for an informal social hour. During the afternoon tea, a variety of sandwiches, and small cakes will be served by members of the sorority who will act as hostesses.

ALPHA GAMMA DELTA WILL ENTERTAIN INFORMALLY FOR GUESTS ON SUNDAY

The pledges of the Alpha Gamma Delta's sorority will entertain the active members and rushees with an informal tea in the sorority house Sunday night.

Plans for decorations include arrangements of fall flowers throughout the lower floor of the house. The hostesses will serve tea cookies throughout the evening.

During the tea the pledges will present a novel skit. The chairman of the arrangements for this affair is Flo Battari.

Hostesses at this time will be: Mary Helen Barnhart, Margaret Boteler, Flo Bottari, Carolyn Bond, Martha Failes, Julia Harrison, Mary Ann Hart, Julia Hodgson, Virginia Jepson, Elsie Kersey, Helen Lane, Mary Melton, Midella Moore, Margaret Gilver, Kathryn Petterson, Isabelle Satterfield, Clara Stewart, Barbara Swannstrom, and Nancy Williamson.

Members and Pledges Of Sorority Give Series of Teas

The second of a series of six teas which the members of the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority are giving was held yesterday afternoon from 4·00 to 8:00.

These affairs are informal and are given for the members, rushees, and friends of the sorority.

The house was decorated with vases of red roses, zinnias, and fern. During the afternoon punch and cookies were served to the guests. In charge of the arrangements for this affair were Alice Porter, Dot Finner, Agnes Goss, and Virginia Welden.

Speech Group To Give Plays

Dramatic Department To Present Two Plays Each Semester

Miss Kemper Moore, assistant professor of speech, has announced the plans of the dramatic department for the year will include four full length plays, two to be presented, each semester.

The first full length play that the department will produce is "Moor Born" by Dan Totheroh. "Moor Born" is a psychological study, rather than a play dealing in situations. It was recently run on Broadway.

Tentative plans have been made for the other full-length plays. There is a possibility that the second production of the department will be "House of Connelly" by Paul Green. Miss Moore feels that this play would be especially interesting to the students of the Florida State College for Women, because it has in it a portrayal of Southern ideas and characterization. The department also hopes to be able to present "Lady Precious Stream." However, it is undecided at present because Broadway producers are considering the production of it. "Lady Precious Stream" is a naive play adapted from an ancient Chinese work by Hisung, who has translated it into English without altering the Chinese theme.

One of the four plays will be a classic. An interesting experiment will be carried out by the department in the selection of this play. Miss Moore expressed the desire that all students on campus, whether they are taking speech or not, would show even more interest than they have in the past in the plays the department produces. In order to help create this interest, the classic to be presented will be chosen by the student body. Miss Moore complimented the student audience, saying she believed it capable of truly good criticism and appreciation.

Advanced student directing of plays will be carried on as before. Throughout the year, one-act plays will be produced from time to time. Three evenings of one-act plays will be presented by advanced students while an evening of one-act plays will be given for the AAUW Modern Arts program.

Miss Thrush is the new scenic artist for the department.

"I'm Lazy," Says F. S. W. C. Student

Difference in scholastic standing seems, from this cross-section view of campus attitude, to have little to do with the average point of view, held in common by the majority of the four classes, for the three classes of academic average, C, C to B and B or better, are sprinkled generally over the data compiled in figures. C students, however, seem to fall into two nearly equal divisions: those who study a great deal and fear they "just don't know how," and those who haphazardly skip through assignments and cannot cram efficiently enough to allow this. B or better students also seem to be divided into these identical groups. Fifty per cent confess to being lazy and to cramming. The other fifty per cent industriously plod, but with better results than the C class. One junior, a B or better student, has a definite study schedule which she follows closely she says.

C to B students, the intermediate group, seem most temperamental, often contradicting themselves. One girl in this category studies from six to eight hours each day, feels that she doesn't know how to study, finds herself and her grades cramped by her lack of time, and yet considers her course an extremely easy one. Another C to B student studies very little, and haphazardly as to regularity, finds herself overloaded with work on week-ends, yet believes in the effectiveness of a "cut and dried study schedule," and describes her study methods as "painstaking."

The exceptions to generalities of the study are worthy of notice. One B or better junior believes in a routine, but has none, avowedly studies with the double and paradoxical purpose of "merely to keep from flunking" and "because I'm interested in learning for learning's sake," she says. She spends all her extra time on subjects outside her courses, because they're her favorites, gives one-fourth hour as her length of daily study, confesses frankly to laziness and to her reliance on "previously acquired information to get by on." She hits the high points, she says, of her courses, which she describes as easy, but gets up before dawn on occasion, to write a term paper or review an exam.

Two students give reasons for feeling that they could make better grades outside those suggested by the questionnaire. A sophomore B or better student says she needs more time in examination periods, and a C-average freshman laments that her profs do not always make clear what is expected of her. Another B or better sophomore studies, she finds rejoicing, because she's "got the habit" and "doesn't mind at all."

Two upperclassmen, both in the "good student" category, express themselves in favor of consistent study as a best means to good grades, believing personally, however, that grades as sends in themselves are "an insignificant part of an ideal college career." Ten students all in the B or better class, express themselves interested in learning "for learning's sake."

On the whole, it can be believed from the results of the study of a fairly typical cross-section of campus life that the student of Florida State College for Women is not as she is often painted. Her willingness to study, her ambition of high scholarship, almost entire absence of the complaints she is forever being credited with of "too heavy work," "too hard a course," "too unreasonable or unfair a professor" and the like, and her frankness in discussing her problems, failings and motives in regard to studying as a base of her college curriculum, portray a new Florida State College girl to her critics. She is, it can be said, being ably-equipped for life, if, as evidenced by her own answers her school has instilled in her in the main the rudiments of a knowledge of herself.

College to Grant High School Students Music Credit on Application

Credit for applied music taken under members of the faculty of the school of music of Florida State College will be granted students of the high school, Dean Ella Scoble Opperman has announced.

High school students making application for such credit, Dean Opperman said, must meet certain standards in the applied subject and either have a theoretical background of specified requirements or carry theoretical work in parallel. Those wishing to receive this credit must apply for permission from Principal Rhey Boyd Parsons. One-half unit a year will be given with a maximum of two units for the entire high school work

Several students of Miss Mary Reeder's piano class are applying for permission to acquire this credit. Miss Reeder has charge of piano normal department for the school of music and will give instruction in piano, harp and theoretical work, which includes fundamentals of music hearing, writing and playing, al the harmonic intervals, and improvising accompaniments to folk songs in all major keys.

Students studying violin, 'cello or voice will receive their theoretical work in Miss Reeder's class.

Production of Mushrooms Is New Profession

Upperclassman's Room Is Convenient Site Of Plantation

A mushroom plantation, with the mushrooms growing along the wall in her own room, is a new trade introduced by one industrious upperclassman at Florida State College. The wall, she explains, is the most convenient place to raise them, because they do not take op any floor space.

The mushrooms tend to add a queer sort of beauty to the room, some of them being shaped like little table lamps. If they continue to grow and flourish, the farmerette believes she will be getting a good business from the dining-room.

Any girl planning to give up her typing, manicuring, fingerwaving, and sewing business, to stake claims in the up and coming mushroom producing industry should see the young lady who raises them, for some very helpful hints.

Librarian is Installed At Florida High School

For the first time in its history the Demonstration school will have a full time librarian. Miss Dorothy Alexander who has been selected for the position is a trained librarian with experience in the work. She graduated with an A.B. from Wesleyan college, and an A.B. in library science from Emory University Library school.

The library is going to be made as attractive and interesting as possible for the students. Teachers are invited to send or bring groups or entire classes there in connection with class activity.

Water Color Paintings Of Native Flowers Are Hung in Botony Rooms

Fifteen water colors of native flowers painted by Olivia Embrey, a senior of last year, under an FERA art project have recently been framed and hung in the rooms of the botany department.

Among the more well known flowers represented in this group of paintings are the dogwood, gentian, columbine, trillium, southern red lily, mountain laurel, and yellow azalea.

Dr. Herman Kurz says that they are to be appreciated not only for their artistic value but also for the scientific accuracy displayed in them. Now the property of the botany department, these pictures can be seen there by anyone interested in them.

International Club To Discuss Imminent War

International club will hold its second meeting for the year Monday night at 7:30 in the old education conference room, history building. Discussion and reports for the evening will center around the Italian and Ethiopian situation.

Anna Marie Mitchell, who has charge of the program, will introduce the speakers. Those making reports and their subjects are: Goldie Lewinsky, "Italo-Ethiopian Situation Previous to 1935;" Clarissa Knight, "The Situation Today"; Mary Kathryn Gibson, "Why Italy Wants Ethiopia"; Mercedes Garriga, "Haile Selassie"; Rebecca Keith, "Mussolini"; and Hazel Bowman, "Possible Outcomes of the Conflict."

After these reports an open discussion will be held.

Gingham Dogs and Calico Cats Flourish as Campus "Collects"

The poet who wrote, "I never saw a purple cow, I never hope to see one!" would see many animals stranger than purple cows if he should happen to glance into the rooms of many Florida State students. Pink kangaroos, blue polka-dot elephants, scarlet dogs and emerald green horses are only a few of the fantastic creatures that inhabit the book shelves, desks, and beds of many rooms.

Two types of acquisition among these owners have been noted. The first group "gathers" them; that is, they acquire them unconsciously and gradually, being quite surprised to discover one day such a number of queer-looking playthings around them. The second group "collects." Theirs is the hectic searching of every store collection, the frantic buying and the after-regretting. They have even been known to "lift" objects that took their eye from the rooms of their friends!

Some collect a specific type of animal—a few even demanding a pedigree. One student has a collection of fifty elephants from the tiny ivory ones found in Japanese stores to the more cumbersome type won at carnivals. Another collects Scotty dogs of all descriptions, shapes, sizes and textures. One girl has a passion for penguins, while still another selects all kinds of cats from the furry kind to the kind that is made of shiny metal. One unique assembly features a whole orchestra of pigs.

Some prefer to make a general collection, selecting anything that strikes their fancy. Many have an enormous collection of the varied glass animals that frequent the 5 and 10. Fish, strange birds, and the Alice-in-Wonderland versions of other animals feature these. Others prefer the wooden type, many of them painted in brilliant hues and having jointed appendages. The old-fashioned stuffed animals have their place too in the hearts of college girls—bunny rabbits, teddy bears, roly-poly elephants and plump dogs.

However sophisticated the college girl has become the fact remains that one thing of her not-so-distant childhood remains with her—her love of "animools"!

Sivyer Tells Freshmen About Proper Apparel

Comfortable clothes, easy to wear and to care for, were stressed as the appropriate dress for the college girl, by Miss Henrietta Sivyer, associate professor of textiles and clothing when she talked to freshmen Wednesday evening at an after-dinner coffee in Reynolds hall.

Miss Sivyer's subject was "Appropriate Dress for College Functions." She pointed out that common sense was the best guide to good taste in the selection of costumes and accessories for every occasion.

Wednesday evening, September 25, Miss Sivyer talked on this same topic at an after-dinner coffee in Jennie Murphree hall. All freshmen were invited.

Cotillion Members Elect Officers for This Year

At the first meeting this year of the Cotillion club held last Thursday afternoon in the Chi Omega house, officers were elected for the year. They are Eva Fowler, president, and Charlotte Stevens, secretary-treasurer.

Plans were made for a series of parties besides plans to attend recreation hall to scout for prospective members.

Doyle Announces Handbook Errors

Mistakes Due to Revision Of Probation Rules

Two sections of the 1935 Handbook contain errors, according to Registrar S. R. Doyle.

Page 74, section C, article 7 of the handbook reads: "If, after using her allowed number of cuts, a student should cut so that her average falls below 'C', she shall be placed on academic probation." This statement should be eliminated entirely. The correct information on this point may be found on page 35 of the handbook, section D, article 1. It reads: "Any student will be placed on academic probation when her record falls below a C average by six quality points, either on account of cuts or grades, (one hour of F to count as two hours of D in the determination of her status.)

The second correction is on page 36, Section D, article 3. Corrected, it reads: "Academic probation will not be lifted for any social event in or out of town.

Mr. Doyle said that these mistakes were due to the fact that the section of the handbook on academic probation was revised this summer, while the section on the cut system was not changed.

TALY NAMED AS THE AGGRESSOR

tudent Body Turns Out En Masse to Listen To Lecture

The entire student body was resent Tuesday morning in onvocation to hear Dr. Venila Shores, history professor, speak n the Italio-Ethiopian situa- on. Dr. Shores spoke under he auspices of the new convo- ation committee which has een organized with the pur- ose of creating more interest- ng and inspiring convocation rograms. The committee is omposed of students and fac- lty members working coopera- vely.

Attendance Increases

Increase in attendance was also ributed to the fact that regular ats had been assigned to the ajority of students by this eek.

In her discussion Dr. Shores tlined the problems resulting om the Italio-Ethiopian sit- ation. Among the most im- rtant was the present crisis of e League of Nations. This is e first time in the history of e league that Europe has been gaged in such a serious strug- e, and for the first time sanc- ons have been asked for by ner countries. It will be at ast six weeks before these sanc- ons will be applied, during hich time Italy, the aggressor, ould win the war.

Future War Alignment

Another point brought out by . Shores was that the align- ent in a future war would be tirely different from the align- ent in the World War. Italy d England are not on as friend- terms as they appear to be. ussolini, it is thought, may be- me master of the Mediterra- ean and threaten England's en- e colonial empire. England, aving weakened herself by de- easing her armament, depends on the League of Nations and ance for support. This puts ance more or less "on the nce," for Italy also looks to r for aid and support.

Germany Seeks Freedom

Germany, ever since the last ar, has wanted to regain ovement of trade and free- m. Rusia and the other untries of Eastern Europe are rried at the present time about possible agreement which may made between Germany, Po- nd and Hungary. Italy herself, . Shores stated, is not in as orable a position as some peo- are led to believe. Her budget unbalanced, incurring heavy xes and increased cost of liv- . She has aspirations for the ntrol of Abyssinia, an East Af- an country rich in the natural sources which Italy lacks.

After Dr. Shores' speech three phomores were pledged to the eshman Cabinet by Miss Lucy Lynn, president of the Y. W. A. at a special service. They re Margaret Stout, Sarah Sea- and Beth Clark.

WCA Meets Thursday To Discuss Functions, Plans of Organization

The Young Women's Christian sociation will meet Thursday, tober 17 at 11:30 in the Augus- Conradi theater for the pur- se of acquainting the new embers more specifically with e functions of the organization d presenting in detail the vari- s activities in which they may rticipate.

Further plans will be made for e finance drive which will be- n Friday, October 18. Plans are ng made early this year to get e budget balanced so that work the organization can proceed ore rapidly.

In order to simplify the pay- ent of pledges, floor chairmen ve been assigned throughout dormitories to collect the edges. There will also be an portunity at the membership eting for payment on the edges.

Underclassmen Only Attend Torch Night

Since the available space in the Open Air theater is limited, and there are consequent difficulties in seeing and hearing performances given there, juniors and seniors are requested to give preference to freshmen and sophomores for the Torch night ceremony. It is courteous to pay underclassmen this respect since Torch Night is primarily a freshman-sophomore tradition and since upperclassmen have before had the privilege of attending.

Bokahr Speaks At Joint Meet

Official Discusses Value Home Management Efficiency

Miss Mary Rokahr, home management specialist from the Department of Agriculture, in Washington, was a guest on campus Monday and Tuesday of this week. She was here primarily for conferences with state home demonstration staff and county agents from north Florida.

Miss Rokahr appeared as the speaker before a joint meeting of the Home Economics club and the 4-H club, Tuesday night. Eleanor Murrell, president of the 4-H club, presided at the meeting. A brief statement was made by Martha Williams, president of the Home Economics club, as to the purposes of that club. She urged all students majoring in home economics to become members.

Miss Flavia Gleason, state home demonstration agent, introduced Miss Rokahr to the group. Miss Rokahr discussed the value of efficient management in relation to successful family life. She stressed the need for wise management of money, time, and labor.

Another topic of discussion was the need for understanding the abilities of individual members of a family, in order that each might contribute her best to family life.

After Miss Rokahr's talk, Miss Anna Mae Sykes, acting district home demonstration agent and sponsor for the 4-H club, invited al of those attending the meeting to an informal gathering in the home demonstration offices on the first floor of the Science building, where students and members of the faculty had the opportunity to meet Miss Rokahr.

Committee Meets To Discuss Rules

Cooperative Attitude Is Stressed by Dean

A meeting of all the officers of the Off-Campus Committee, the Off-Campus house chairmen, the householders, and chaperones was held last Monday afternoon in 203 Administration building. Margaret Graham, chairman of Judiciary, opened the meeting by introducing Miss Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students. In a short talk Miss Dorman stressed cooperative attitude of each off-campus house in keeping the off-campus regulations.

Off-campus regulations were then discussed by Margaret Graham, who distinguished between the duties of the house chairmen and householders in off-campus houses, and the house chairmen and chaperones in sorority houses. Nancy Wilkinson, chairman of the Off-Campus committee, then introduced the committee members and assigned them to the districts into which she had divided all off-campus houses. The houses are divided into six districts with each district under a member of the committee. The divisions are:

District No. 1, under Harriet Lawrence, includes the Alpha Chi Omega house, Alpha Delta Pi house, Beta Phi Alpha house, Mrs. A. M. Middlebrooks' Mrs. Gordon Hart's, Mrs. N M. Salley's and Mrs. W. F. Strickland's.

District No. 2, under Mercia Scott, includes Alpha Gamma Delta house, Pi Beta Phi house, Zeta Tau Alpha house, Mrs. J. T. Diamond's, Mrs G. T. Lloyd's, Mrs. J. W. Reece's, and Mrs. R. Bellamy's.

District No 3, under Sara Hosea includes Sigma Kappa house, Alpha Omicron Pi house, Delta Zeta house, Mrs D. C. Gillis, Mrs. C. D. Gunn's Mrs. J. R. Jinks', and Mrs. J. P. Love's.

Carver Speaks On Agriculture, Business Trend

Mathematical Application To These Two Fields Are Demonstrated

SHOWS 4 GROWTH CURVE ELEMENTS

Problem to Forecast And Estimate Future, Says Mathematician

Showing the application of mathematical methods to the business world, Dr. H. C. Carver, professor of mathematics at the University of Michigan and noted statistical expert, addressed over two hundred students in economics and accounting here Wednesday.

Dr. Carver showed the application of mathematics to two fields of economics: agriculture and business. In discussing the field from an agricultural viewpoint, he began by pointing out the necessity of the forecasting of crops so that price appraisal can be given. He especially stressed the point that bias in this field must be eliminated by the government.

Crop Yields Checked

He told the group that checking of government predictions of the past showed that they had continually underestimated the crops. In line with new experiments along this line which show a definite correlation between the rainfall and temperature and the total yield of the crop, government forecasts are now made up of the mean between the estimates of their correspondents and the estimates reached by mathematical methods of correlation.

In concluding this portion of the talk he said, "It is possible for the individual by use of government statistics on rainfall and temperature and elementary mathematics to draw conclusions enabling him to predict crops accurately."

Taking up the strictly business world in relation to mathematical laws, Dr. Carver pointed out that the business man wants to know given prices for given supplies, and thet while this knowledge is based on economic theory, it also depends on mathematical laws for the actual working out of its problems. "The great problem of the business world," he stated, "is to estimate the market."

Curves of Business

Describing the elements that make up the growth curve of business, he mentioned four: (1) the long-time trend, (2) business cycles; (3) seasonal curves; (4) residual elements. He then showed how seasonal and long-time trend are eliminated in business.

In discussing business cycles he gave various theories as to their actuality. Although he discounted some of the theories advanced by business statisticians as to the importance of these cycles, he stated that one thing is certain—

Library Displays Bible Facsimiles

History Valuable Pages Show First Editions

In commemoration of the first English Bible the library has prepared an exhibit in the lobby which includes many pieces of historical value.

Tyndale's New Testament, 1525, was the first English Bible, although it was not recognized by the King of England. Coverdale completed Tyndale's work, and the Coverdale Bible was printed in 1535. A facsimile of the beautiful title page is now on display.

There followed Matthew's Bible, 1537; The Great Bible, 1539; and the Geneva Bible, 1560. The Geoeva Bible was popular with the people and it was this Bible that the Pilgrims and the Puritans brought with them to America.

The Bishop's Bible was published in 1568. The Rheims New Testament was printed in 1585, but the Douai Old Testament, written by the same man did not come out until 1609-10. The facsimiles of these Bibles show the different style of writing and the various letter forms of the day.

A facsimile of Gutenburg's Bible, of which there are only three perfect editions in the world, is also on display. The Congressional library has a copy which today is worth a million dollars.

Student Contemplates Feet As Her Temporary Life Work

Discovers College Post Office to Be Source Of Invaluable Information; Other Campus Sites Inspire "Feetures"

By PEARLE SHEPARD

"Pardon me," bump! "Excuse, please," crash! "Sorry," bang! "Clumsy of me," plop!

But I came up off the floor where I had sprawled with enough informaton to write a book about "Soul Gazing," or the study of those appendages which are connected to the leg on the other end of the ankle.

The beginning of my intense study of feet began quite casually. One day as I returned from the post office in an electric blue mood, with my eyes cast ever downward, I was suddenly overcome by the maze of feet. They moved past me, circled around me, overwhelmed me, and it was then that I decided to take up the study of feet as my temporary life's work.

Disguised as a wad of gum I invaded the post office. Disguises, I believed, would aid me to inspect without being detected.

I found an occupied box brings a brisk downward tred of the foot, which we might call the inspirational movement.

The shuffle or slow walk punctuated with a stomp might be called "no mail" movement. Then there's the ultra-inspirational movement which evolves often into a little ship. The motive for this particular movement is often found to be a little white slip, entitled "Package."

Legs spread out in a parallel position with the floor instead of the perpendicular denote either the "give up" or the "just waiting attitude. Or often this same attitude is made by dangling the feet from a table or window sill.

Losing most of my elasticity in the post office I decided to take another form of disguise for further study. On the dining room arcade perched upon the bulletin board I found I could study very well without fear of being obliterated.

'Emperor Jones' Will Play Here

Hedgerow Theatre Artists Will Be Presented In January

Dr. W. G. Dodd, dean of the college of arts and sciences, announced this week that the second in the series of artists programs for this year would be "The Emperor Jones", which will be presented January 16 by the Hedgerow Theatre players in the college auditorium.

According to Dean Dodd, attempts to get Miss Cornelia Otis Skinner, daughter of the famous actor, Otis Skinner, were unsuccessful but it is hoped that she will be able to come next year.

"The Hedgerow theatre today is the largest and most distinguished repertory theatre in America," says H. T. Murdock. It has been in existence for more than ten years and during that time has built up a list of plays that has no equal. It is an actor's theatre, built and run by actors.

In 1923 Jasper Deeter, founder and director of Hedgerow, gathered together a group of players who had become dissatisfied with the commercial Broadway theatre. He felt the "set-up" was not conducive to bringing out sincere artistry in drama. Thus he started out with nine dollars and a willing pirit, in a former mill building, a few mile from Philadelphia.

Today Hedgerow is composed of a group of twenty people who have built an organization, without aid, which provide them with a theatre of their own and a chance to present more plays in a month than would be possible in a year under ordinary commercial propositions. In 1934 Hedgerow used thirty-four plays out of its repertory of 108 and operated 51 weeks out of 52. 318 performances were presented, and eight new plays were added to its repertory. When Hedgerow came back from its first national

28 Working For B. S. In Nursing

Must Graduate Also From Accredited Hospital In Third Year

Twenty-eight students are registered in the School of Home Economics as candidates for a B.S. in nursing. This course is outlined in cooperation with the state League for Nursing Education. It requires three years of work in college, plus graduation from an accredited hospital school.

A majority of the students come to college for their freshman and sopohmore years; then they go to a hospital for training, returning to college for their senior year in order to complete requirements.

This year, there are seven graduate nurses on campus, who are registered for college work. Bernice Allen and Marie Wesley are seniors, both of whom hold scholarships in the infirmary. Lorena Sims, who is in Tallahassee for her first year, also holds an infirmary scholarship. Pearl Smith, who is here for the second year, holds an FERA assistantship in the nursery school. Catherine Levy and Juanita Robson are carrying full time college work. Miss Beverly Horn, former student, has a position as assistant head nurse in the infirmary.

The members from this nursing group, interested in finding some way of becoming better acquainted, enjoyed an informal social meeting Thursday evening in Broward lounge. At this time, the desirability and methods of forming a nurses' club was discussed.

Students who are not graduate nurses and who are registered for the B.S. in nursing degree are: Ruth Robie, Mary Elizabeth Simpson, Elise Barnett, Letitia Bond, Alucia Crowell, Katherine Ely, Irene Foster, Mary Alice

Guardians of the College Tell Of Adventures from Darkness to Dawn

Night Watchmen Are Interviewed Concerning Their Nocturnal Prowls and Revelations Of Many Pranks Are Made

How would you like to have to brave the cold and rainy Tallahassee weather every single night in the year—except for two weeks—from six-thirty p.m. until six-thirty a.m.? Well, thet's exactly what our night watchmen, Mr. S. H. Green and Mr. John McCollum, do. And they have their problems.

Mr. McCollum says that the chief difficulty on campus this year is that of an unusual amount of traffic around the dormitories after light flash The cars drive around, blowing horns, squeaking brakes, making U-turns in front of Gilchrist, and causing a lot of confusion in general. This is unpleasant for students who are trying to study, as well as for those who are trying to sleep. Of course, Mr. Green and Mr. McCollum could lock the gates, but this would be very inconvenient to those students who might be returning from a week-end out of town. If one arrived at the college between light flash and morning, she would have to carry her luggage from the gates to her dormitory It is the wish of the night watchmen to clear up this trouble without making any enemies, or without taking such drastic measures, and they would appreciate any cooperation that the girls might be able to give them in this matter, they said.

But the occupation of night watchman has its amusing side as well as its serious one. The funniest experience Mr. McCollum has had occurred as he was making his ten-fifteen round one night. He was checking on all the buildings to see that lights were out and that doors were locked. He knew that the lights were still on in

Senate Offers New Rules For Faculty's 'aye'

Discuss Informal Dancing In Off Campus Homes Of Ten Residents

FARABEE SENIOR REPRESENTATIVE

Propose Elect Freshman Advisor With Other Council Members

At a student senate meeting held Thursday morning Carol Farabee was elected to be senior representative to judiciary as Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, former representative, resigned because of too many extra-curricular activities.

The senate also voted not to send delegates to the Women's Intercollegiate association of student government, which is to be held in Philadelphia, Oct. 23-26, but instead to send more delegates to the Southern Intercollegiate association of student government. Members of senate thought the expense of the former convention too great for the benefit derived, especially since the association is composed largely of northern schools whose problems are not similar to ours.

Dancing Discussed

Among other things discussed at this meeting was the matter of dancing in off-campus houses. A rule was passed which will be sent to the faculty committee on student affairs, stating that informal dancing may be permitted in off-campus houses, not sorority houses, where as many as ten students are living, providing the householder makes such request; this dancing to be allowed on Saturday evening and under the same arrangements as campus dances.

Amendment Proposed

Another change proposed was an amendment to Articles 7 and 10 of the constitution concerning the freshman adviser. As this officer is not elected until after the other members of executive council, she does not have sufficient time after election to prepare herself for her new office, according to Minna Dunn, present freshman advisor. The amendment, which passed this group, proposes that the freshman adviser be voted on by the student body at the same time as the other members of the executive council. It will now be sent to the College council for approval.

Day Students To Try for Contact

Seek to Keep in Closer Touch With Campus Activities

"Everything possible is being done to bring the day students into closer touch with campus life," says Marjorie Fain, president of the Day Students' organization.

At the last meeting of the organization, Thursday at 11:30 a.m., several new plans were announced, to the effect that all announcements made in chapel will be posted on the day students bulletin board; a copy of the Flambeau will be given to each day student; and the president of the Day Students' organization has been made a member of the budget commission.

In the course of the meeting Pauline Poitevint was selected as chairman of athletic committee, to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Louise Gehan from that position, and Jean Gilles was elected as delegate to executive council of Y. W. C. A.

A volunteer transportation committee was inaugurated to arrange for cars when the college requests transportation incidental to college activities. At the close of the meeting, handbooks of college regulations were distributed to the members.

AAUW to Hold Meeting

The A. A. U. W. of Florida State College will hold an informal social meeting in Ruge hall, at 8:00 o'clock, on October 14.

Entertainment will be by the trio from the music department, which consists of Miss Winslow, Miss Murphy, and Mr. Sellers.

Flastacowo Editor Announces Tickets

Tickets for pictures in the annual will be on sale in the near future, according to Edith Webb, editor. The price of the tickets will be $2.50 each.

Class pictures will be informal this year and students are requested to wear Sunday dresses. Black dresses with white collars are preferred.

Hockey Methods Shown At Meet

Six Delegates Learn New Techniques of Game

Six delegates from this college attended a hockey convention at Alabama State College for Women, Montevallo, Alabama, last week-end to discuss rules of hockey and play exhibition games.

Marion Weeks, Beth Daane, and Rose Panowski were student delegates and Miss Elizabeth Autrey, Miss Mary Settle, and Miss Nellie Bond Dickinson were faculty delegates.

Seven other colleges represented at the convention were Howard, Winthrop, Agnes Scott, Georgia State, Mississippi State and Huntington.

Discussion of rules, under the guidance of Miss Alfreda Mosscrop, a former member of the United States hockey team, and who is now teaching at Alabama State, took place Friday and Saturday mornings followed by exhibition games if hockey.

The delegates spent Friday night at a camp about a mile out of town where Alabama students own a large cottage, with the added features, Beth Daane said, of varnished floors and electric stoves.

The remaining time the delegates spent in the dormitories, where they often watched Alabama students "cook in their own rooms," Beth Daane declared, whcih was "quite a novelty to us."

"All lights were ont at 11 o'clock," she said, "but it wasn't due to any efficiency on the part of the floor chairmen since the power plant stopped functioning at that hour."

The athletic association gave a farewell dance for the delegates Saturday night Bars and stripes carried out the dance motif with invitations in the form of summons, tha dance orchestra in a padded cell, and an electric chair placed conspicuously on the floor labeled "The Last Roundup."

No men were invited to the dance, Beth Daane said, as Alabama students may dance with men only at their senior prom. The delegates returned Sunday.

Italo-Ethiopian Combat Reviewed

Club Hears Four Members Speak at Meeting

The Italian-Ethiopian question was discussed at the second meeting of the International Relations club held Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock in the history building. Mary Kathryn Gibson, Clarissa Knight, Rebbeca Keith, and Mercedes Garriga made brief talks on the topic, while Anna Marie Mitchell led the group discussion.

Mary Kathryn Gibson gave a short introduction on the history of the conflict between Italy and Ethiopia, stressing the personal prestige of Mussolini, the desire for the return of power to Rome, the colonial expansion policy and the economic problem of Italy, as the outstanding features that have led up to the present disturbance.

Clarissa Knight discussed the situation as it is today, tracing the treaties of Italy as far back as 1906, and the movements of the Italians as they have happened month by month this year.

The lives of the two outstanding men in this conflict between Italy and Ethiopia were also discussed. Rebecca Keith gave a biographical sketch of Mussolini, and Mercedes Garriga described the life of Haile Selassie.

A brief business meeting followed the discussion, and Nov. 4 was set as the date of the next meeting, when Grace Mary Webster will lead a discussion on the place Germany is taking in European affairs.

Annual Torch Night To Be Held Tuesday

Graham Heads Committee Working on Plans For Ceremony

PAGEANT IS BASED ON GREEK CLASSICS

Participation in Event Limited to Freshmen And Sophomores

Torch night, the annual ceremony in which the sophomores pass on to the freshmen the torch symbolizing the three torches of the college emblem, Vires, Artes, and Mores, will be enacted in the open air theater Tuesday night, at 7:30 p. m., according to Sarah Graham, chairman. Seats will be provided for as many freshmen and sophomores as possible.

The ceremony is in the form of a Grecian pageant with the sophomore class likened to a runner which passes on to the freshman class the flames of skill, strength, and wisdom.

Palm Bearers Enter

During the playing of the processional "Pomp and Circumstance" by the orchestra the palm bearers will march in double file and divide to form an arch of palms under which the rest of the procession will pass.

The palm bearers are: Frances Bishop, Jere Crook, Grace Groff, Mary Kinser, Frances Lewis, Katherine Todd, Jean Lykes, Dorothea Marsh, Frances Hartley, Kitty Craney, Virginia Northcutt, Eileen Robinson, Mary Shackleford, Nelle St. John, Barbara Welles, Elizabeth Yockey, Ruth Lind, Isabel Dillard, and Mary Gleen Coarsey.

Following the palm bearers the singing minstrels: Annette Harris, Polly Eveleth, Sarah Sealey, Alicia Meacham, Bette Johnson, Margaret Melvin, Chauncey Nell Coleman, Edna Yacobian, Ruth Knight, Mary Frances Hales, will precede Marian Conn, sophomore president, as diety Alma Mater clad in a Grecian robe to preside over the ceremony.

Phil Asher as Pallas Athene representing wisdom, followed by the Libations, Mary Jane Gallemore, Rose Evans, Viola Brooks and Lois Heider will follow in order.

Representing Aphrodite, goddess of beauty, will be Edith Merill Ramsaur, accompanied by the three graces, Sara Knight, Ann Bayley, and Dot Hill.

Following will be the nine muses: Erma Engel, Mary K. Scott, Jenny Brown, Dorothy Osne, Madge Glenn, Jean Treadwell, Mildred Hudmon, Mary Jane Gale, and Sara Nance.

Ceremony Begins

The two bards, Betty Oslund and Jean Lykes will open the ceremony by giving an explanation of "Lampadedromia," and introducing the nine muses. The various dances symbolizing the meanings of the three torches will follow. Climaxing the pageant the two sophomore runners will carry the light to the altar where

Recording Machine Can Be Heard Twice a Week Music Dean Announces

On Tuesday evenings from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock and on Friday from 5 to 6 o'clock students of the college may listen to records played on the Capehart recording machine in room 123, Administration building, according to an announcement made by Dean Ella Scoble Opperman of the music department in convocation this week.

The recording machina with its 824 records, 251 scores and a music library made up a Carnegie gift presented to the college last spring. Students reporting to the room under the stage may select from the catalogue any selection she would like to have played.

The repetoire represents all nations, periods, styles and vocal, choral and instrumental combinations, from miscellaneous vocal numbers to opratic arias, symphony orchestrations, chamber music and many solo instrumental records.

While there have been scheduled only two periods during the week when the room will be open to the students, Dean Opperman announced that if the attendance demands arrangements will be made to open the room at other hours.

College Dining-Room Is Seen As Place of Students Entertainment

Game of "Pig" Preferred As Indoor Sport By Campus Elite

There are tricks in every trade, especially so in the trade of eating, if eating can be called a trade. No doubt it has become one, even to the extent of being a mania, with some Florida State students. In fact, a few of them become so impatient between courses that apparently they must resort to tricks and nonsense to pass the time.

"Pig," an amusingly applicable name, is an old favorite. Somehow, without sign or warning, it begins by the simple action of placing one's finger—any finger will do, but preferably the forefinger—on one's nose, approximately at the bridge. One by one, others at the table notice that some one has begun the game, other fingers arrive surreptitiously at other roses, and the atmosphere becomes tense with anxiety to see who will be "Pig," that title being conceded the last person to get her finger to her nose. Squeals and laughter hail the newly-crowned "pig." The adaptability of this little game seems to catch the fancy of even intellectual students.

Concentration, cooperative action, and profound solemnity are required to lift a dining-room table from the floor, each person using only one finger. But it can be done, and to the observing eye is done at every meal. The secret of it is that any one can do it, if she only takes three deep breaths in unison with the rest of the group and then lifts up on the table with one finger. Yet, despite this fact, each time the trick is done, it is considered an attainment unequalled, and a chorus of, "We did it. It worked," accompanied by an undeniable thud of table suddenly meeting floor meets the startled ears of not-so-fractious diners. Oh, it is a feat worth trying, but one must hope that the table does not become overbalanced and send dishes crashing to the floor.

Even such insignificant items as spoons play their part in amusing anxious students. By simply rubbing one finger rapidly across the tablecloth, and then placing said finger in the bowl of the spoon, the thumb at the end of the handle, very ingenious maids-in-waiting can lift the spoon from the table, and hold it thus suspended in air. How this is accomplished is a never-ending source of speculation, but great skill and intensive practice are required to perform the act with finesse. A slightly more difficult trick, and one requiring the aim of an archer, is that of flipping one spoon with another from the table into a glass of water. Even splashes can be avoided if care is used, but it is best for only those adept in the art of manipulating spoons to try it.

Then there are other tricks, of course, such as amusing each other with sign language, or goat language, or what-have-you; or flavoring a perfectly normal slice of bread with vinegar, salt, and pepper, and then passing it around the table for every one to g. a big whiff of the delightful odor. Doubtless still others are in current practice, but unrecorded.

Tricks are an art in the drawing room, but in the dining room—well, just what are they?

ness wears them and so does her more sophisticated sister. The tall and gangling one has on a pair of red ones, while the slightly obtuse student wears hers in stripes. Over in the corner, her legs curled about each other, is the girl who wears no stockings. Can't just figure out whether its to show off that summer brown, a matter of getting to a meal on time or just plain economy.

Laced up shoes, tied with determined knots. You just know that her room has not a speck of dust and her grades could be nothing but straight 'A's."

"Tap, tap, tap," speaks the sassy little spiked heels, worn by just as provocative a little person. "Thud, thud, thud," goes the flat-footed shoes of the girl with the boyish haircut. Over there is the little girl whose shoes are worn over, but that could be you, you, or I.

On the very front edge of her shoe stands a petite figure, trying to look over the shoulder of the girl with the rangy body who stands flatly on the balls of her feet.

Then the bell for dinner and I get a panoramic view of diffused colors, swirling legs hurrying through the doors of the dining room.

To conclude my observations I went to recreational hall where I donned the disguise of a piano. It was there that graceful motions predominated and awkward feet were stepped on.

Feet almost floated through the air as they followed the determined plodding of their panting partner. Like part of a perfectly-timed mechanism were the two pairs of shoes in one corner as they counted out the time of the music. Describing arcs in the air as they moved up and down, back and forth, were the dainty feet of another. Ecstatically four legs moved in gliding motions, making pronounced dips before they whirled down the length of the room.

A blinding flash of light brought my contemplations to an end. It was 7 45 and with an up and down foot motion I climbed my way back to the fifth floor of Gilchrist to ponder on the great mysteries of feet and perhaps to write a "feeture" story

Classes Started In Lip Reading

Demonstration Class Held To Arouse Interest

Classes in lip-reading will be held on the campus for the benefit of students who encounter difficulty because of defective hearing, according to an announcement made this week by Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel.

These classes which are being started as a phase of the rehabilitation program by Mrs. Elizabeth Chambless of Miami, under the supervision of Mr. C. M. Andrews, of the Tallahassee rehabilitation department, are intended not only for the totally deaf, but also for any who feel that they are becoming deaf or who are handicapped by faulty hearing of a greater or less degree. The instruction imparted through this medium is expected to facilitate the efforts of those threatened with progressive deafness to adjust themselves to future situations.

A demonstration class was held on Tuesday of this week for the purpose of showing how the classes will be conducted. All students interested in taking advantage of this opportunity to acquaint themselves with the art of lip-reading are requested to see Dr. Andrews for further details.

business cycles have similarity and they follow one another. He described various researches made by schools of business all over the country and the forecasts they made for business. Some of these experimenters, he said, used the mathematical method and some did not. The results, he stated, showed that the forecasts of the Standard Statistics who did not use the mathematical method were the most accurate while the predictions made by the Harvard School of Business who used the mathematical method were the least accurate of the group.

INDUSTRIES INTERRELATED

Outlining the inter-relations between industries, he drew attention to the fact that these same inter-relations may be utilized to predict business for one of the industries if statistics prove that one affects the other. He added this statement, however, "Other than these rare cases I do not believe business can be predicted."

Dr. Carver concluded his address with some interesting information concerning the new mechanical accounting as it is used in the business world today. Although he stated that machines are replacing the former tedious phases of the business, he added that the accounting theory still remains and that the demand for skilled workers in this field is as great as ever.

Dr. Carver, who is now on sabbatical leave from the university and is residing in Tallahassee, is writing a book of the mathematical principles of statistics which will present a comprehensive course for college use. He has placed in the economics offices a copy of a book of charts demonstrating some of his theories in the field of business statistics.

Andrews Addresses Club

Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel, will speak in Quincy today before the Gadsden County Federation of Women's clubs. The subject of her address will be "The Art of Living."

Browsing Room To Be Opened

Art Students Have New Room for Study

An art browsing room, located in room 307 administration building, is to be opened this week, according to Miss Collins, professor of art. The room is primarily for the use of the art students, but anyone interested is invited to use it.

A number of books on architecture, interior decoration, lettering, commercial layouts, history and appreciation, design, stagecraft, and costume will be included in the library there. Besides these there are magazines from other countries as well as our own. The Art Digest, Design, House Beautiful, Home and Garden, Art and Decoration, Gebrauchgraphic, The Arts Monthly, Advertising Art and Connoisseur are among the magazines to be included.

Every Friday afternoon there will be an exhibition of student work in this room. This week most noticeable among the pictures in the exhibit will be those of Miss Briggs' composition class.

An exhibition of the work of the freshman drawing class during the first two weeks of school will be placed in the hall cabinet on the third floor of the administration building.

the accounting room in the History building, and he realized that there were some girls still in there. He went upstairs and knocked on the door, merely with the intention of asking the girls to turn the lights out when they left the room. Well, when he opened that door, one of the girls—Mr McCollum said he could tell by the way that she acted that she was a freshman—threw up her hands, screamed, then wildly asked him what he was doing up there. He soothed her as best he could and assured her that he was perfectly harmless and that he was only performing his duty. "Don't be afraid, little freshman I won't harm you," were his words, says Mr McCollum.

One of the most amusing things to both men is this business of lights. When they are making the rounds of the dormitories after light flash, their footsteps are clearly audible. If a girl has her lights on late, she makes a rush to turn them out when the footsteps approach. As a matter of fact, it is neither the duty nor the privilege of the watchmen to report late lights Mr. Green says that many girls, after having been called up for this offense, come to him and say all manner of evil against him for reporting them. He wants all girls to note this—he can not report. And besides, both Mr. McCollum and Mr. Green have enough to do guarding three million dollars worth of property from fire and theft, to say nothing of guarding the lives of seventeen hundred girls, they said.

And lest we forget, it is among the duties of the night watchmen to guard the non-dating areas and to see that no lambs stray therein. However, surprisingly enough, little difficulty is found by the watchmen in keeping their charges within dating areas; in fact, it is the duty with which they have the least trouble. Maybe college girls aren't such little rascals as some people would have us believe

Teachers In Demand Today Have Broad Training, Dean Salley Says

"I think opportunities in the teaching profession are more numerous now than ever before," said Dean Nathaniel Moss Salley of the School of Education in a recent interview concerning the present and future of the educational positions.

To stress his point Dean Salley emphasized the fact that new fields have recently opened to the educator. Of these he pointed out the growth of nursery schools and the vast field that is offered in government rehabilitation work. Regular state school work adds to the best of positions that will be open to the future educator. Dean Salley especially emphasized the fact that the field of adult education has hardly been "scratched." He feels that Florida State College for Women offers and will continue to offer educational opportunities that give excellent training for work in these fields.

To prove the fact that interest in professional education is increasing, Dean Salley gave a number of interesting statistics.

"Although there has been, since the depression beginning in 1929, a gradual lessening in the number of students taking courses in education in the regular session the number of persons receiving bachelor degrees from the School of Education annually has remained almost constant. About 120 bachelor degrees have been awarded."

He accounts for the decrease in the number enrolled by recalling the non-payment of teachers during the worst phases of the depression. He believes, however, with the present move towards stabilization of teacher's salaries and with the additional expense being made up for by an increase in productivity, many more students will be encouraged to enter this field.

With the present enrollment of the School of Education totaling 592, Dean Salley believes there will be well over 600 students enlisted in its courses before the year is over. He also pointed out there are fully as many enrolled in educational courses in the summer session as in the regular session.

As to the type of teacher most in demand at the present day Dean Salley said, "The kind of teacher most in demand today is the teacher not too narrowly trained—the teacher who is master in tow or three fields, trained to teach in primary, elementary or high school. The basis of the good teacher is good citizenship and broad training

Dorman Speaks on Honor

Many of the freshmen did not understand the full import of the word "honor," as used in the orientation examination. There was an after-dinner coffee given for them Tuesday evening at 7:30

Reynolds parlor. Dean Olivia Dorman gave a talk on "Honor" hoping in this way to clear up any misunderstanding the freshman might have concerning the word's true meaning.

The peculiar name of the theatre was given it by Ann Harding one of its former players. Once when the sheriff was threatening to evict the troupe Miss Harding spoke as follows: "All right, if he throws us out of the building we will go and play under the hedgerows." That's how the Hedgerow theatre was born.

A BRAIN HARASSED BY A PEN THAT RUNS DRY, LOSES ITS Brilliance... Power... and Expression
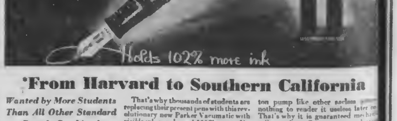
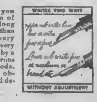
Hence Parker Created 102% More Ink Capacity and Visible Ink Supply



*From Harvard to Southern California
Wanted by More Students Than All Other Standard Brands Combined

Every time that you write, your Train of Thought flashes along rails more delicate than gossamer. And every petty annoyance—every distraction—caused by a pen that skips and runs dry in study periods, classes, or exams, obstructs the track and derails the train.



That's why thousands of students are replacing their present pens with this revolutionary new Parker Vacumatic with its visible ink supply and 102% more ink. By holding this miracle writer to the light, they can see the ink level—see days ahead if it's running low. It is laminated—built up ring upon ring of shimmering Pearl and Jet—smart, velvet-like, wholly exclusive. It contains no rubber sac found in sac-type pens—no squirt-gun piston pump like other sacless pens—nothing to render it useless later on. That's why it is guaranteed mechanically perfect. Church Plan Feast, Retreat

Banquet, Talks, Meeting Keep Churchgoers Busy This Week-end

A banquet tonight for Episcopalian freshmen and a retreat for the Methodist students are among the important activities being planned by the college religious organizations for this week-end.

Ninety-eight freshmen have been invited to the Episcopal banquet which is to be held at [illegible] 30 in Ruge Hall. Bishop Frank Juhan, bishop of the Florida diocese, will be special guest and speaker of the evening.

The Methodist retreat is to be directed by Dr Ira Barnett, secretary of the Florida board of Christian education. The theme of the meeting, Christ and College, will be the central thought throughout the retreat.

The meeting will open tomorrow night at dinner, with members and guests of the retreat sitting at special tables in the dining hall. The retreat will continue immediately after dinner in the student house The program here includes two talks—"Some Things Are True" by Milburn McLeod, student at Southern college and president of the statewide student conference, and "Educating for the New Order" by Hudson Burr, vice-president of the state conference and a student at the University of Florida.

After the talks Miss Eulalie Ginn, director of young people's work in Florida, will lead the recreation. Refreshments are to be served following the fun period.

The last session of the retreat will meet Sunday morning at the Methodist church. After a devotional led by the students, Dr. Harvey C. Brown, Nashville student worker, will talk on "Christ and College." The retreat will end with a sermon by the pastor, Rev. J H Daniel at the regular morning service

The Baptist students are making preparations for their state convention which is to be held at Stetson University in DeLand October 18-20. Outstanding preachers and student workers of the South are to lead the Florida students in their meeting

A Presbyterian retreat is scheduled for October 25 and 26.

The Episcopalian students are continuing their Bible study classes under the leadership of Dr Anna F Liddell professor of philosophy The class is held every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock and is open to all students.

As leaders of their morning watch services at 8.10, the Episcopal students this week will hear Mary Hamilton Meginnis on Monday, Betty Bow on Tuesday, Frances Lewis on Thursday, and Louise Gehan on Saturday.

Dan and His Dogs

Colored Janitor Discusses Hobby With Flambeau Reporter Who Inquires as to Training Of His Four Canine Pets

By SARAH E. DAVIS

Would you like to sell a dog? "Nevah," says Dan Mullino, colored janitor of the music annex and 4th floor of the history building.

Dan has never and will never, he declares, commercialize his hobby of raising dogs. He thinks it would be nothing less than plain, outright slavery. Human beings have no more right to sell dogs than they have to sell other human beings, according to Dan's ideas. But of course, if the recipient of the dog has "a pig, or a chicken, some eggs or milk, or some vegetables, or somethin' like that he has raised." Dan is always glad to sort of exchange. In fact, he thinks he really ought to be given something in exchange, considering all the time and money, and "human attentions" he has given each one of the dogs he has raised.

Dan became interested in dogs through his great love for hunting and game Before he came to Tallahassee in 1919 to act as janitor at Florida State College he spent a great deal of his time hunting on the east coast of Florida.

Since coming here, he has confined his interests mostly to the raising and training of dogs. At present he owns 4 dogs, namely, Rock, Big Boy, Black Boy, and Zonny.

Rock is the lively little ball of white fur we see trailing Big Dan everywhere he goes, picking up paper for him, or prancing and barking playfully before some student who happens to pay a bit of attention to him. Rock will celebrate his birthday next Saturday when he will be all of 4 months and 3 weeks old. He insists, Dan explains, that since he attended the past summer session, he is no longer a freshman at F. S. C. W. but a full-fledged upperclassman. Dan thinks Rock is getting along well in college, learning fast, meeting people of all kinds, and making social contacts that may help later on in life, and all such things as that.

Rock is probably cutest when carrying Dan's heavy ring of big keys clasped firmly betwen his teeth. He frequently picks up paper from the floor or campus grounds and carries it to Dan. He would take the paper straight to the trash basket, Dan says, but he realizes that most any practical basket is much too tall for him to even see over.

Rock is quite proud of his Chinese-German ancestry. His mother, Fanny, is a Pekingese, and his father, Prisco, is a German Spitz.

Big Boy, a tan pup, and Black Boy, a coal-black fellow, both about the size of Rock, but only a few weks old, sometimes come to college with him. Big Boy and Black Boy were members of a litter of 14 pups, and are the only two of the 14 Dan did not give away.

They both have ambitions, Dan thinks. Black Boy is quite interested in his college training, while Big Boy prefers to stay home and look after things—keep chickens out of the house and bark strangers away. "He is very 'dootiful' about anything like that," said Dan. "In fact, he thought so much 'bout his 'dooties' as guard at home he forgot to pay attention in class the fust week of school and nearly 'bout flunked out."

All of Dan's dogs are kept on a wholesome diet. Sometimes it's pretty expensive, but he thinks they're worth as much as he feeds them. Their weekly diet consists of "sterilized milk," boiled steak, and beef. When they come to college, Dan always takes them home to lunch.

At night each dog is provided with comfortable sleeping quarters. In warm weather Rock sleeps on a cushion on the floor. On cold nights he sleeps in a porch rocker, covered by an old woolen sweater.

Zonny and her two young sons, Big Boy and Black Boy, sleep in a small but comfortable house which Dan built for them under his own house.

On Sunday afternoons Dan takes the four dogs to ride in his Ford Coupe all of them perched up like millionaries in the narrow space between the seat and back window of the car. For special occasions and holidays, such as Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, and the Fourth of July, Dan keeps a supply of various colored ribbons. Since Rock, Big Boy, and Black Boy were born in 1935 and began their college careers in 1935, they are odds. Dan intends to supply them with red, white, and purple ribbons this coming Thanksgiving and let them show their colors at the odd-even games.

"At least twenty-five girls," Dan said, "have asked me for Big Boy or Black Boy. Someday I'm gonna fill my car with puppies and give 'em out to all these college girls."

"Sure 'nuf," he concluded. "If I had knowed college girls liked dawgs so much, I would have saved 'em all my family of 14 I gave away."

College Students Take Part in Local Program

When Tallahassee's new radio station, WTAL, had its opening night on Monday, October 7, two Florida State College girls, Mary Ellen Tharpe and Mildred Hurst, both of Tallahassee, were included in the program. Mary Ellen and Mildred, who play the piano and bells respectively, played Monday night at 10:30 p. m., and again Tuesday afternoon at 4 p. m. The girls are employed by the Florida Motor Lines, and they will play over WTAL every Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock for 15 minutes.

Four other town girls who are attending Florida State College will also perform over WTAL. Beginning Sunday morning at 8 o'clock Sarah Sealey, Louise Doyle, Mavis McMillan and Elsia Renfroe will be featured in a program of sacred music.

Rats Soon To Replace Cats As Home Pets

Study Shows Convenience, Beauty, Manners Of Small Creature

BY EDITH HOBSON

After a scientific experimental study on Albino rats for the past ten weeks, I have come to the conclusion that the pet-conscious American public has been fooled for the past few hundred years into thinking that a cat is an ideal household pet. If one were to stop and consider the many advantages to be derived from having a little white rat as a pet, then the household cat would become quite obsolete Of course, in making this drastic change it would have to be taken for granted that only white rats should be considered, since the rather common gray rat would be too [illegible] for most people.

If white rats really became a part of the household, it wouldn't be long before pedigreed animals would be on the market. In time, little white rats with long curly hair might be bred and be quite similar in beauty to the now famous Angora cat.

In comparing the physical characteristics of the rat and the cat, who can deny that the combination of pinkish-red beady eyes and sleek white hair is more charming then the rather nondescript combination of greyish-green eyes and a rather hit-or-miss hair color? Of course, it must be admitted that the long hairless tail of the rat is a rather bad feature, but this can be remedied by clipping the tail off at the desired length with no particular harm to the rat. In relation to the size of the two animals, one must admit that the extreme smallness of the rat would be more beneficial to the many people now living in small apartments or hotel rooms. It would be quite inconvenient for one to travel from place to place with a cat, but how easy it would be to put a pet rat in one's pocket or even, perhaps, under the collar of one's coat both of which places would be cozy and comfortable for the pet. It would be difficult to imagine a cat with its awkward shape and size occupying such a place.

The white rat, contrary to the opinion of most people is really a gentle animal, being very playful and responsive to its master or mistress but rather unfriendly to visitors. The ego of many people would be quite satisfied on knowing that their pet was fond of them only. However, in order to secure the honor of being liked by the rat it is necessary that one secure his future pet at the tender age of four weeks, a time in the life of the rat when he is exceedingly playful and frisky. As he grows older he becomes more sedate, but not as sedate as the family cat is likely to become

Concerning the manners of the two animals, suffice it to say that the rat's table manners are more polite than those of the cat. The rat, being very dainty, picks up the food with his two tiny paws and then proceeds to eat from them. The paws of the cat are entirely too large and clumsy to be able to accomplish this difficult feat. Another feature of the rat is that his claws are not as developed as those of a cat which fact prevents him from being able to tear hose or to scratch people. Regarding this, the rat would not condescend to stay on the floor but would rather be higher up in life, preferably crawling up the sleeve of its owner.

Since it has been proven in all scientific laboratories that the nutrition of the rat is very similar to that of a human being, just think how learned the American public would become in regard to nutrition. Certain foods that one is unacquainted with could be fed to the rat who is not particular about his diet, and than various symptoms which appear could be observed and analyzed. Of course if the rat developed an acute illness, another diet could be fed and in scarcely any time he would be again normal and ready for another experimental diet.

The normal age limit of the rat is three years, which isn't time enough for the owner to become tired of his pet, and therefore he will appreciate it all the more. A cat will linger on to the ripe old age of fourteen, accumulating all the diseases of old age which might be unpleasant to the household members.

A very bad feature of the modern cat which is particularly annoying to most suburb or apartment inhabitants is the midnight serenade of the alley cat This usually necessitates the accumulation of shoes at a particular point in one's back yard. Of course, it is needless to say that the vocal organs of the rat prohibit such sounds which fact would make many more people tolerant of this change of pets from cats to rats.

Since cats have become rather conceited in the knowledge that their residence is to be rather a permanent one, it would be a good idea to disrupt their present way of thinking and let them follow that procedure of living which has been characteristic of their enemy—the rat.

TRUCK TO CAMP

Arrangements for a truck to leave for Camp Flastacowo every Saturday, at 2:00 and to return at 5:00 were made after a meeting of the board of the Outing club Tuesday night. A minimum of ten girls will be required before the truck will leave, however.

Days will be set aside for certain groups to take advantage of this privilege, beginning with residents of the top floor of Jennie Murphree, and continuing through each floor in each dormitory. In this way every student will have a chance to go out with her friends. Nevertheless any other student who is not in this particular group is welcome also.

The Outing club hopes to be able to sponsor sightseeing tours to Wakulla Springs and week-end trips to Carrabelle and Newport.

The board is composed of Miss White Miss Fox, Beth Deane, and Betty Akin

PLANS SWIM CLUB

At the meeting of the Life Saving corps Tuesday night Felice West was elected secretary-treasurer to replace Kathryn Beyer who resigned. Marian Weeks was elected secretary-treasurer to replace Kathryn Beyer who resigned. Marian Weeks was appointed chairman of the committee to investigate material for future programs. The committee is composed of: Beth Deane, Marian Lessey, and Mildred Emmelhainz.

Plans are being furthered to organize a swimming club. Polly Flint will write to other colleges for information regarding requirements for membership and other material. After a comparison of this data is made the corps will formulate the requirements for a local club.

Any member, it was decided, who is absent from the weekly meetings three times a semester without an acceptable excuse will be suspended from the corps, subject to re-installation only after she again passes her life saving test Each member of the corps must renew her Senior Test every year during the first semester.

At 8:00 each Tuesday night instruction is given by the members of the Life Saving corps to those students wishing to train for the Senior Test. At the same time the members of the corps who wish to can train for their Examiners Test which will be given sometime this year.

Jewish Women Organize, Klepper Elected Head

The Jewish Women's Organization reorganized last Friday afternoon at a meeting held at the Delta Phi Epsilon house. Mrs. A. Goldsmith spoke to the girls on the purpose of the organization as a religious, cultural, and social club for all Jewish women on campus.

Officers elected were: president, Elaine Klepper; vice-president, Rose Safer; secretary-treasurer, Miriam Stein. A volunteer group was appointed to help with programs for the meetings which will be held every Friday afternoon at 5 30 at the Delta Phi Epsilon house.

Conradi Makes Speech At Teachers Meeting

Dr. Conradi, president of the Florida State College for Women left Tallahassee Thursday for Inverness, Fla., to attend the Gulf Teachers association meeting where he made the principal address. The subject of his talk was "A half a century of progress." The meeting was held to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the oragnization of the State of Florida's Teachers association.

En route to the convention Dr. Conradi stopped in Ocala to attend a meeting of the State Kiwanis club.

Accompanying him on the trip was his daughter Miss Louise Conradi.

Astronomy Club Meets Wednesday Night With Large Group Attending

"The Conditions on the Moon" was the subject discussed at the astronomy club meeting Wednesday night. About 150 members were present, according to Marjorie Harris, president of the club.

The program included a talk by Katherine Young on the mythology of the moon, a discussion by Martha Makemson on the relationship between the earth and the moon, and a description of the peculiar conditions on the moon because of lack of atmosphere, by Winona Ireland.

Mimeographed maps of the moon were given to the members.

The president announced that orders for sky maps must be taken to room 424 Gilchrist by Saturday morning, and that telescopic observation of the moon will be held next Wednesday and Thursday nights. Anne Leigh Rollins is to be chairman of the telescope team.

The club had as special guests at the meeting Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Komarek. Mrs. Komarek, formerly Betty Barker, was active in the astronomy club before her graduation last year.

Sociology Field Work Attracts Large Number Of Students This Year

Fourteen students, the largest unit of field workers that the sociology course of Florida State College has ever enrolled, are planning to do social welfare work this year under Miss Fern Boan, new associate professor at the college.

The two agencies for this field work, the Leon County Welfare association, which aids the unemployable, and the Emergency Relief association, a government relief that takes care of the employable, will help the students, giving each one work from both agencies. Each social worker will have 300 hours of supervised field work a year, which is the time required for membership in the American Association of Social Workers. The work will be organized so that most of the 300 hours will be spent on welfare cases.

"Field work is to the sociology student what internship is to the medical student," said Miss Boan. "It gives the person practical training." On being questioned concerning the increase in the enrollment of sociology students, Miss Boan said, "I believe the rising interest is due to the fact that sociology is rapidly coming to the fore, and that there is a great increase in jobs for social workers. The security funds and the plans of the government for helping the unemployed all involve sociology, adding to its importance."

Eta Sigma Phi Pledges Outstanding Students

Mary Kathryn Gibson, Mary Marshall, Valerie Stubbs, and Julia Vanderipe were pledged by Eta Sigma Phi, national classical honorary, Wednesday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock in 101 library.

Eta Sigma Phi recognizes students who are outstanding in and who are interested in the classical field. It requires that its members be of junior rank and have a B average in their classical subjects.

The four pledges will be initiated Monday afternoon in a ceremony attended by the active members of the organization.

Students at Florida State Shows Usual Interest in Various Pets

Dickey Bird is in Fair Way to Become Idol Of Campus Set

There was never a truer saying than "there is no place like home," but the students at the Florida State College for Women must be given credit for making their small domiciles home-like in every respect—even to their beloved pets. With a month of the new school year behind them, students have settled down to a somewhat normal life. That is, if hunting a diminutive turtle who has been left to wander at will in a patch of sunlight while his mistress is in class, or being awakened in the middle of the night by a singing canary bird, or caging a wild rat in a waste paper basket because one thinks he is "cute" could be called leading a normal life. Nevertheless, all of this is true.

"Dickey Bird" is in a fair way to become the idol of all the girls who visit the infirmary this winter. He is a yellow and black, mostly black with a yellow petticoat canary bird who belongs to Mrs. Josephine M. Levy, the housekeeper at the infirmary. "Dickey Bird" is five and one-half years old, comes originally from the home of his mistress, Pensacola, craves bits of apple, lettuce and plenty of company and is never happier than when splashing water hither and yon in the process of daily bathing. He is a German roller and possesses the peculiar inclination to sing in the dead of night.

Every year it holds true that freshmen have more unusual ideas on the type of pets to have in a dormitory room than upperclassmen, who, no doubt, learn from experience that it is best to have animals that are the least trouble and require the least attention. Miss Rowan, the social director in Reynolds Hall, was somewhat startled one evening last week when, just before light-flash, one of her girls came rushing to her in an excited state and announced that a rat was in her waste paper basket and couldn't get out. Upon inquiring whether she was afraid of it, Miss Rowan found the girl was anything but frightened; and when Miss Freshman heard the order for the removal of the obnoxious creature, she came rushing back to the office and begged to be allowed to keep it, because it was such a "cute little thing."

"Pooh!" some lofty sophomore will probably say upon reading this, "I can tell a better one than any of those. Last year a girl on my hall went to Gainesville one week-end and on leaving for Tallahassee her best boy friend gave her a baby alligator instead of flowers or candy or any of the conventional gifts. She kept it for several weeks, sunning it in her room, feeding it raw meat and making it a bed out of a heavy paper sack. Finally it died, poor thing." All of which is the gospel truth, but can't you, or you, or you tell still a better story about a pet?

Graduate Directs Music In Jacksonville School

Word has been received that Dorothy Tait, a graduate of Florida State college in 1933, has just been appointed director of music in Landon high school, Jacksonville.

Her sister, Lorelie Tait, who also graduated from the college in 1933, holds a similar position in Robert E. Lee high school in Jacksonville.

Miss Dorothy Tait who received a B.M. degree in public school of music and also a certificate in piano has for the past two years ben director of music in Palmetto. Miss Lorelie has filled her position at Lee high since her graduation when she received a B.M degree in the public school of music and a certificate in violin.

War Enters the Collegiate World Minus Its Brass Buttons and Gold Braid

Fifty million signatures can't be wrong. So says the editor of the Millsaps college paper as he lauds the efforts of the Women's International League to secure fifty million protests against war. So say dozens of college editors, whose papers pour into the Flambeau mailbox each week from all over the country. American youth is serious about this matter.

This week an unusual number of collegiate editors expressed themselves on the topic now on the lips of all nations. A South Carolina editor lauds Mrs. Roosevelt's appeal to women to prevent war, saying that remoteness is no surety that the United States will not some day enter the impending war between Italy and Ethiopia. Echoing this feeling that our country is entirely too apt to enter any war that comes along, the Texas State Teachers' College paper quotes a Missouri college editor and agrees with him that there is a need for constructive and dramatic demonstration against the rising war tendencies of our nation, whose leaders, the writers feel sure are "steadily increasing military expenditures and following policies which threaten to plunge us into the melee."

American youth doesn't want war, the Cincinnati Bearcat reiterates. A reporter surveyed the campus and gathered student and faculty comments, all vetoing heartily the entrance of the United States into the present European melee. An editorial writer points out the inevitability of the entrance of Germany and France and believing that danger lies in the fact that once two or three of the great world powers become involved in conflict it is likely that alliances, ententes, or other instrumentalities or international cooperation for the protection of imperial interests will draw the remainder of the world powers into the conflict also. If the United States is to remain apart from the struggle, the Cincinnati writer believes it will be by virtue of the fact that the masses refuse to let vested minority groups "vitiate democracy by misleading propaganda designed to sell their interests under popularly appealing phrases such as 'patriotism' or 'national self-defense." He calls upon college students everywhere to help rouse the now indifferent "masses" in the United States to full cognizance of the danger we are in, to stimulate discussions of the situation and make the facts known to all, lest our welfare be placed in the hands of inimical interests.

The editor of the Oberlin Review, calling attention to what he ironically terms "Mussolini's altruistic crusade against slavery and barbarism," while pointing out that Italy is in about as much danger from the [illegible] African tribes as Denver is from a bombardment by the Austrian navy, puts his finger on the dangerous imperfections of the "make the world safe for democracy" panaceas, rapidly becoming as prevalent as before the last war. Preparedness, Fascism, and arrogant nationalism combined make a more lethal weapon than monoxide gas, in the opinion of this writer who insists that peace cannot be ushered in simply by stressing the horrors of war any more than it can be attained if preparedness campaigns advance the manufacture of war materials "just in case" while shouting denunciations of conflict.

In contrast with the vehement condemnations of the Oberlin writer, the attitude of the military student is of interest. Alone among the numbers of college papers writing earnestly of war and its prevention an editorial in The Cadet, publication of the Virginia Military Institute, points out the discrepancies existant between the unwritten American policy of "preparedness" and the actual condition of its fighting equipment. Statistics in the article show lack of men, and more important, apparently, of modern materials and machines, deploring the fact that the U. S. A. is not "prepared" for emergencies, while every other evidence of collegiate opinion surveyed veers sharply from the preparedness plan as having been tried and found wanting, advocating in its stead, the far-seeing policy of backing our stand for peace with honest and courageously deliberate "unpreparedness."

Further editorialising in the Cincinnati Bearcat asks "What will the teachers do?" Now that war seems an actuality, the professors are on the spot, this writer believes, for, he wonders, what will they say to their students as the chance that America will enter the war increases. Will they continue to utter the meaningless proverbialisms that characterized the period before the last war, to maintain that the freedom of the seas must be upheld at any rate, to insist that the interests of the people are at stake if imperialistic property is attacked, or will these teachers uphold the ethics of a profession devoted to the teaching of truth, explaining the hypocrisy of imperialistic Great Britain, showing that Italy's cause for invasion is not to civilize the "backward Ethiopians" but to avoid internal troubles at home, and digging up the facts which show that American business interests are contributing to the war efforts of Italy?

It is true, teachers everywhere are "on the spot". But if not only they, but all others who give lip service to the cause of international peace do not dare to speak the truth, the calamities which face our nation are bound to be far graver than the loss of a professional job which might follow courageous pedagogy.

There is the challenge, not only to our teachers, but to us. It is to be hoped that on our own campus, a branch of the National Student Federation of America will join hundreds of others like it in a definite stand, not only against the participation of this country in war, but also against the hypocritical policy of "preparedness" backing its resolutions regarding peace with just as determined ones regarding the publicizing among Americans, not Wilsonian patriotism, but an insistence on honesty before rather than after the horrors of war have become a reality.

Now You Tell One

The world situation today presents a mass of confusion and disorder in which conflicting opinions and ideas are each crying for an equal share of attention. Each theory has its own prophets and followers, all convinced that their solution is the only true solution, or at least the most practicable.

Much of the teaching in our schools has been centered about the idea that as students it is our duty to weigh both sides of a question or theory with as little bias as possible. Little do we take into account the effects of enviornment which seem to lend an objective solution difficult to students and professors. In the case of professors, as the editor of the University of Louisville Cardinal writes, the inevitable partiality is even more complicated. "More than one professor," he writes, "has succeeded in part in throwing off the binding chains of traditional outlook, arriving at his conclusion with as much objectivity as he could muster, only to find that he could not frankly set forth his opinions in the classroom, or perforce must even change them."

From such a dilemna we are seeking a solution. And one of the world's outstanding universities seems to have found it, according to the Cardinal. "No ideas are taboo at Oxford University. Numerous axes are ground, and the probabilities are that one axe neutralizes another. And most important of all, no instructor is forced to say, as did one instructor, we know last year: "Yes, I know that's true; but I couldn't say so in class."

I WAS FIRED FROM A HICK COLLEGE—

By Wendell Brooks Phillips
Atlantic Monthly, October, 1935.

The beauty of his life's philosophy as revealed by this college professor makes us not a little ashamed of our more influential fellowmen whose minds are too narrow to recognize anything for truth except that which they want to believe is truth.

These men admitted "they couldn't take it" when they fired Phillips, (who had grown up with hick college, gone to Harvard, then returned to head its English department for twenty years), for "allowing the students to grow more quickly than the college."

The essence of Phillips' own teaching was this: men should be sincere and courageous, "gentle irony should be poured over bigotry and smug complacency, a sense of beauty should have a high place in the scheme of values, and the entire pattern of conventional American life with its petty round of bridge parties, Kiwanis banquets, mechanized churchgoing and shallow standards of success should be sharply questioned."

His religion which was thought heretic by the local college trustees was so simple and primitive he hesitated to confide it. "It is merely to watch the sun rise and set, to behold season follow season over the green earth; to seek out the meaning of forest and mountain; to warm both hands before the fire of life, and not to shudder too much when the flame sinks."

Finally he makes a challenge, which is most important to us, for youth in hick colleges everywhere to arise and demand an education, to fight for their right of academic freedom. "It is sad, indeed," he says, "to be told you are educated at a college baccalaureate address then later find you are not."

If your college refuses you an education and you are unable to attend a more enlightened institution, train yourself in work, or bum your way around the world, he pleads in closing, "for never has the world been a more instructive stimulating place to the mind awake than it is at the present moment."

THE TWILIGHT OF NATIONAL PLANNING—

By David Cushman Coyle
Harper's, October, 1935.

We looked to the New Deal with its promise of order and security under the name of engineering planning as a covenant of God, but Coyle, a construction engineer and former consultant on the National Planning Board, admits his field a failure when it comes to planning on a nationwide scale.

The factors requisite to an engineering job, "national acceptance of a simple unquestionable objective existence of adequate technical knowledge to formulate a positive program of action, and some means of regimenting all the people on the job without overpassing socially permitted methods of discipline" were lacking" Coyle says, when New Dealers attempted enigneering planning for a whole nation.

For instance, one reason the NRA failed was because too many groups wanted to be its parents. If we insisted on an engineered society, Coyle adds, we would have to suppress these groups—an act contrary to the American ideal.

However, social planning which really began with the First Congress, holds the only answer for our social destiny Coyle declares, in presenting his own plan.

He would cut the savings among larger incomes by taxing them and turn the tax money into old-age pensions and other security measures for the poor. The promise of security would then eliminate savings among the smaller incomes, he reasons, and as the poor spend all they make anyway, more wealth and employment would be created for all.

Finally out of our "peanut planning," he concludes, may arise a national ideal of our social destiny which may prove to be "the dawn of the great plans of a nation on the threshold of a great destiny."

THE WAR ON LITERATURE—

By Mary M. Colum
Forum, October, 1935.

Mary Colum resents writers belonging to the "social left" who condemn other writers' works simply because they do not agree with their opinions and philosophy.

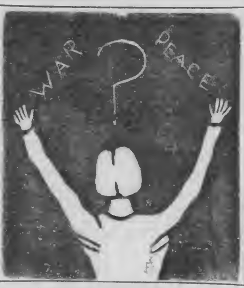
The objective of all the forces of literature from the artist's point of view is not to propagate either philosophy or opinions, she says, but to give a complete expression of man in language.

With the writers of the "social left" placing an emphasis on something secondary, as opinions which are seldom permanent, Mary Colum pleads for an organization of the "literary left" who know literature from propaganda and who will meet to discuss and advance the art of writing.

For instance the only advance in the technique of literature in the past fifty years is the resurrection of "action," she says, which means simply that instead of describing a quality we represent the effects of this quality on others.

As groups rather than individuals usually make literary inventions, she says, even a cafe-group might further the art, technique and influence of literature. Surely there is a need, she concludes, for those who will maintain the fundamental of writing, that is, "a man telling of men as he knows them to other men, not of men as he would have them be or men joined to some hard-and-fast abstraction such as, proletariat, bourgeois, or any other that may be given."

Spirit of the Week .... By Adams



HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

BY GRACE MARY WEBSTER

Something of a bomb was dropped into the League of Nations this week when Austria and Hungary, with an eye to business, refused to join about fifty League nations in a financial and economic punishment of Italy. The two nations know that Italy plans to get her raw materials from Germany (whose resignation from the League is effective this month) and her farm products from Hungary by way of Austria. After all, nobody shoots at Santa Claus.

Nevertheless League members believe they can make Mussolini "holler" for peace by a collective boycott of Italian goods and by cutting off war products, such as petroleum and nickel.

As for actual progress in battle, official and dependable reports are few. Available material shows that Italy was victorious at Aduwa and that Ethiopian attempts to regain it have been successfully resisted. The next point of attack in line is Askum, a city in northern Ethiopia. Otherwise nobody is quite sure what is going on. Reports of Ethiopian victory and heavy loss of Italian life come from Addis Ababa, while reports of Italian victory and heavy Ethiopian losses come from Rome.

French agents report 12,000 dead, sick and repatriated Italian soldiers since the beginning of the African campaign. They report that 10,000 soldiers suffering from tropical diseases have gone through the Suez canal, while some two thousand have been stricken in home camps. Authorities say that this is not such a high toll since many of the Italian troops are from northern Italy and unused to the heat. French African experts believe that the prospect of slow starvation and lack of meat in the Italian ranks down in Africa is more dangerous than Haile Selassie's warriors.

With all the talk of forgotten men the last few years it seems to us that King Victor Emanuel and Vice President Garner are the prize specimens. We could add Jimmy Walker.

This week the United States recognized a "state of war" between Italy and Ethiopia, and declared an embargo on American shipment of "arms, munitions and implements of war." This is to go into effect immediately and will be enforced by the American coast guard and customs service.

There has been practically no shipment of munitions to either country. There has, however, been a heavy export of trucks, truck engines, copper and other products which are convertible into war supplies.

This week's ironic note: Recently when Mussolini reviewed 10,000 young fascist officers who will soon go into action there were loosed beside Il Duce great flocks of doves, symbolic of peace.

After a long absence Bruno Hauptmann again "rated" the front pages of newspapers throughout the county. This week the New Jersey court of appeals handed down a decision upholding the death sentence given Hauptmann some months ago. This leaves Bruno three methods of attack. He may appeal to the court of pardons, which can commute his sentence to life imprisonment (slim chances here as the governor of New Jersey and six of ten judges of the court to which he just appealed are members of this court). He may appeal for a new trial on the basis of new evidence. And he may appeal to the supreme court of the United States. Hauptmann's lawyers say they will "go the limit."

Beginnings of the Republican campaign this year are faintly reminiscent of the anti-Al Smith campaign in their bitter criticism. Herbert Hoover, in a speech this week, said, "The issue of America is not a battle of phrases, but a battle between straight and crooked thinking. We need a return from muddling to sanity and realism."

A newspaper editor, remarking recently that the Republican party is running into a lot of difficulty trying to reconstruct the GOP elephant, received an answer from a reader suggesting that they might get their heads together and form at least the tusks.

Italian soldiers at the front in Ethiopia send back word that they are going to cut off Haile Selassie's beard and make a brush for Mussolini's shoes with it.

And now if you can still "take" more Mussolini, please accept my recommendation that you read O. O. McIntyre's Thursday column—second paragraph.

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

ARE WE WORTHY?

"When I die, I want my epitaph written, 'Here lies an enemy of free schools.'" "I thank God we have no free schools nor printing; for learning has brought disobedience and heresy into the world, and printing has divulged them and libels against the government." Of such nature were the remarks made by those who opposed taxation as a means of supporting schools; in these two instances remarks made not by ignorant men, but by a legislator of Indiana and a Governor of Virginia. The fight for universal education in our country was a terrific and prolonged struggle. It has been said that, excepting the battle for the abolition of slavery, the question of free schools aroused the most bitter antagonism and the greatest feeling. Those in favor of taxation for that purpose were fiercely assailed and at times were threatened with personal violence.

Are we worthy of that struggle? The ideal that statesmen and reformers must have held before them, the ideal of knowledge as the way to a better, a more just world of peace and plenty—have we in any way realized their dream? Our world today, facing the likelihood of another war, when twenty years ago college students fought under the beautiful illusion that they were fighting the "war to end wars"; our country with millions of unemployed; our own section of the country alive with racial antagonism and discrimination, have we, or college generations of the past, done our part toward alleviating such conditions? Is it enough that our education be a "passionless pursuit of passionless intelligence?" Clean and noble as such pursuit may be does it not also breed unconcern, indifference, even smugness? Does "getting an education" mean to us only a process whereby our own interests may be advanced, our own lives may be enriched, a means whereby we may become more acceptable in our own group?

Advancement is a pitifully slow process, we are told. Oftentime the retrenchment in progress, the retardation of advancement is the result of our selfishness, our lack of concern, our failure to be vividly and painfully alive and aware.

Let us keep ourselves from a superior, too-wise tolerance of "things as they are." If we must expect eventual disillusionment, if we must some day smile at our youthful idealism let us save it for old age, when there is a certain enjoyment to be derived from being disillusioned. Let us not live upon the rim of life! Let not our generation fail to find its place in the journey toward a world in which man can know "some peace, some content, some joy of living, some sense of the inexhaustible beauties of the universe in which he has been placed."—The Carolinian.

YOUNG IDEAS

It is not peculiar that modern social systems are emphasizing the part of youth in the future of their respective arrangements. Not only to perpetuate the systems, but in some instances, as in our own country, to save and reconstruct the social order is the function which the world today is planning to throw on our shoulders.

Herr Hitler, for instance, knows that his fervid nationalism depends on his people's fervid Nazism. Comrade Stalin knows that his communistic Russia depends on his people's faith and belief in Russia's communistic do trines. Brother Roosevelt rea lizes that his social reform ha no lasting permanency without the next generation's cooperation. Hence, the National Youth Ad-

FELLOW STUDENTS

On our campus and on the campuses of many other southern universities this year, peace has become the object of much thought and discussion. The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. conference at Blue Ridge this past summer issued a direct challenge to state Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. organizations to plan programs and crusades for peace during the ensuing school year. Indirectly the N. F. S. A. and the International clubs have taken up the cudgels for peace in their programs designed to bring about an understanding on the part of the student body of international problems and complications.

This action is admirable and commendable and the organizations are to be congratulated on their efforts. Yet we feel that a word of caution is not inopportune. Peace movements cannot and must not take militaristic and ridiculous aspects. The Peace Strike last year was both militaristic and ridiculous; it was a Peace Riot. Neither must peace movements parade fanaticism.

The true peace movement must have understanding as its keynote. Local, state, and national understanding must precede international peace. Intelligent appreciation of our own and foreign nations' needs must come into the picture before any campaign for the outlawing of war is to succeed.

This question of peace, it seems to me, offers to the present-day college student the most profound and sweeping challenge that can be given him. To answer this challenge he owes it to himself to formulate his ideas on peace in a sane and practical matter. Let "peace movementers" take into consideration so that a disgraceful and emotional flare-up such as the Peace Strike shall not again injure and minimize youth's effort for peace and goodwill toward their fellow men.

Signed. Daisy Parker.

Former Flambeau Editor Visits Tallahassee Again

Rachel "Sockie" Pitchford, who graduated from Florida State College for Women in 1929, has been visiting her sister, Miss Sue Pitchford, of the business office, for a few days this week.

Rachel was editor of the Flambeau during her senior year, and it was during her editorship the Flambeau was changed from a paper of some six columns to a four page paper. For the past four years Rachel has held a position with the Daytona Beach News-Journal.

Rachel majored in sociology here, and is a member of the Sigma Kappa sorority She has been a member of the executive board of the Alumnae association of Florida State College for Women two years.

Stout, Clark, Sealey, Are Tapped to Fill YW Vacant Cabinet Places

The Y. W. C. A. tapped three freshmen to serve on freshman cabinet Monday night. They were recognized Tuesday morning in convocation by Lucy Gee Linn, president of the organization in the formal recognition service.

According to Lucy, "These girls were chosen because of their spirit of service and cooperation with the Y. W. C. A. and because of their efforts to make it a more useful and worthwhile organization." Margaret Stout, Beth Clark, and Sarah Sealey are the new cabinet girls.

Daisy Parker was appointed as chairman of the World Friendship committee of the organization. Assisting her will be Arline Lockhart who was also elected a representative to the Religious Workers' council.

Production of the new British Museum catalog, containing 2,000,000 titles will cost approximately $1,000,000.

Unusual Signs Adorn Doors of Underclassmen

Markers Characteristic Of Tastes of Owners In Most Cases

Door signs have held their places in oblivion in the past. Times have changed, however. Today no respectable freshman is without her portal inscription.

One Walt Disney fan adorns the entrance to her abode with a dancing Mickey Mouse bidding the guest welcome. In Jennie Murphree, the three proverbial monkeys who "hear no evil, see no evil, and speak no evil" have been supplanted by three Chinese lads who offer the same advice to the visitor.

"Warm up and get hot," is the counsel of one door sign which we shiver past on our way to breakfast. Even freshmen appreciate irony.

Freshman advisers also have pronounced tastes in door signs, as one may judge by that one of black and white squares, reminiscent of dominoes, on the door of an adviser.

Upperclassmen have joined the swim,with their years of experience in sign selection giving them a slight edge on the newcomers. Especially diverting is one modern Dorothy Dix's door marker which gives advice to the lovelorn and other temporarily insane or ailing persons. Others prefer the "Inn" variety which invites the visitor to "Duck Inn," "Breeze Inn," "Fall Inn," or just plain "Stagger Inn."

Regular Meeting Held

The regular meeting of the Demonstration school P.-T. A. was held Tuesday night, in the high school auditorium with Mrs. Ralph Hamlin, president in charge. The talk and discussion on "Home Study" was lead by Dean N. M. Sally, of the School of Education.

Mr J. Humphries, of Tallahassee, sang several solos accompanied on the piano by Mrs. M. L. Strong, teacher of music at Florida State College There was also some group singing after which refreshments of Russian tea and wafers were served.

Authoress Gets First Pay Check

We have a real, live authoress on campus.

Nancy Rogers, freshman, has received her first check for her journalistic pursuits, the staggering sum of sixty-seven cents. Nancy is a student in Journalism 110, where each member of the class has been assigned to some newspaper in the state as correspondent.

The young authoress laments the fact thet she has not been beseiged with offers from the various publishers as yet. 'Tis said the road to success is a hard, stony one.

CORRECTION

According to the personnel office, Mary Ingram, who received her L.I. degree at Florida State College during the past summer, was not killed during the recent storm in Key West, as was stated in last week's Flambeau. Their information states that Mary is from Dania and is now teaching school in Greenville.

School Council Elects Officers

Terrell, Kent, Love And Arms Will Serve

The Demonstration school council has recently elected the following officers: president, Ruth Terrell; vice president, Harriet Kent; secretary, Sue Love; and treasurer, Mary Arms.

The primary object of the council is to promote citizenship. To promote this work at the end of each year the records of the students are considered and the name of the student who has contributed the most toward raising the standards of the school is engraved on a metal plaque which is in front of the Demonstration school.

This work was started by the 1932 council. All of the students who have so far had their names engraved on this plaque are in college. Donal Loucks, who first won the honor, is a student at the University of Florida. Virginia Amann is a junior at Florida State college while Dorothy Bellamy and Mary Emily Parker are sophomore and freshman, respectively. This citizenship award has only been in practice for four years, but already it has given the students a goal to work toward each year.

The Student Council also has charge of furnishing the large American flag for the school. They sponsor the school's social affairs and "get togethers." The entire school participates in these functions.

"The Show Must Go On"

Student Learns That Dancing Must Continue In Spite of Weary Limbs and Aching Joints Which Yearn for Rest

ANONYMOUS

The call boy was making his rounds to the dressing rooms. His 'Five minutes' meant that I was going on the stage before an audience for the last time in a long while. As I sat in front of the mirror in a small dressing room I thought of the things I was about to leave behind. I loved the smell of grease paint, the tinsel and spangles of the costumes, the gay laughter of the girls about me and, above everything else, the applause that greeted me as I stepped on the stage. For a whole year I had worked hard for the position I held in the spotlight and now I was going to leave it.

As I sat in front of the mirror my life too, for the past year, paraded before me. My first job came when a vaudeville came to town minus one chorus girl. After much persuasion and cajoling, my parents consented for me to try out for the job. When I got to the theater I found twenty-five other girls competing for the same job. After tapping, kicking, and stretching for three hours all but two of the girls were eliminated. I happened to be one of the two remaining girls. Luck came my way when the manager chose me for the "line-up."

If I could have seen what my life during the coming year was going to be (for I had signed a contract for that length of time) I might have thought twice before accepting the job.

I had to know the routine well enough to go on the stage by the time we reached the next town, and to be perfect by the time we arrived at the town after that. That meant work and plenty of it. From early morning till night I worked on five routines. During rest periods I was summoned to the fitter's room to have my costumes modeled. I had not been used to such long and strenuous practice hours. When I had to "go on" I was so sore I could hardly move a leg.

By the time we had passed two more towns I was sufficiently well again to enjoy my practice hours. The only time we could practice was in the morning when the theater wasn't being used. By nine o'clock the whole company was assembled on the stage to rehearse the whole show and iron out any rough spots. The orchestra was in the center of the stage playing its first number. The jokester sat upon a box rehearsing his lines. Surrounding the orchestra, the girls were busy with their daily routine. Tap dancers, acrobats, toe dancers, and singers were doing their bit to add to the din and racket. After these preliminaries the show began from the beginning and went through its paces.

Getting ready for the shows which went on at 1:30, 4:00, 6:30, and 9:00 was really exciting. After getting dressed the cast met backstage for last minute instructions from the orchestra leader. After the show began no one was allowed to talk or peak out on the stage behind the curtains. The show went on smoothly, and in about forty-five minutes all was over until the next show began.

The show business is fun but, nevertheless, it is a hard life. The code of the business is "The show must go on" and no matter how you feel you've got to go out on the stage and smile at the audience as if nothing is wrong. The only excuse for not going on is that you are sick enough to have a doctor in attendance. Tardiness is not tolerated. You've got to be punctual at all rehearsals and performances. Truly the show business is one of the hardest professions on her nerves and mental well being a girl can get into.

Because of these things I often thought about giving it up and returning home. But there was my contract to consider and even if I had been free I doubt very seriously whether I would have returned home. There is something about show life that gets into your blood. Once you're in it, it's hard to quit.

When the show wasn't rehearsing the company either rode around town or stayed at the hotel. The living suarters of the company were not the best available nor were they the worst. They were plain, middle class hotels with all modern conveniences. Here we spent most of our leisure time. We did not have time to read whole books so our reading was limited to magazine articles and stories. The magazines were, for the most part, movie magazines, The Dance, and Ladies Home Journal with an occasional educational magazine thrown in.

We were back at work again when the manager decided to change the show. For two weeks we were busy whipping a new show into shape while giving the old one.

After "playing" the show for three weeks the unforeseen happened. The company went broke and left the girls and boys stranded in an eastern city. A show never has enough money saved to survive from one city to another. Every city has to support it. In this certain city funds were not forthcoming so we had to disband.

Now it was an excellent chance to go home. I was out of a job and my money was fast disappearing. But instead of going home I got a job with the next show that came into town.

Life in this show was about the same as in the one before it, and being used to routine work, I could now enjoy better the little social life the show afforded. The social life of the show was vxery limited. It consists mostly of after show drinks at the corner drug store. Here the company gathered to forget the show for a few minutes and have a good time. At other times someone would give a small party. The big social event of the show took place at the beach. In between shows we would go down to the beach and swim, dance and ride on the Ferris wheel, roller coaster, et cetera.

I had been in the show business now for six months. All this time I had been working in the chorus. My ambition was to become the featured dancer of the show. There was a job open for some lucky girl and I was determined to be that girl. I had plenty of competition. In fact, every girl in the show wanted the job and was willing to work for it.

Besides the regular shows and rehearsals, we worked every hour we could spare. We practiced every imaginable kind of dance on the rehearsal stage and in our private rooms.

After two months of this grind the final day came when the lead for the show was to be picked. Everyone was lined across the stage. The manager stood in front of the "line-up." Everyone was tense until the demonstrations started. Taken one by one, every girl did her best before the critical eye of the power before her. If he did not like a dance the girl would be automatically eliminated by the shake of his head. If he liked the dances the girls stood on the sidelines until he had gone down the line. Then the choosing for the lead started from the few remaining ones. This was easy and done in on time. In the end I was chosen for the position.

For four months I travelled with the show as leading tap and toe dancer. With the acquisition of this place in the spotlight my salary and privileges increased. Foremost among these privileges was that I was not compelled to rehearse as often as the chorus.

I was very grateful for this privilege. Now I could see the sights of the country, not only behind the footlights, but also through some real traveling. In every town we came to I took time out to see the city and the surrounding country.

Just as soon as I was firmly established as lead and began really to enjoy myself, the company went broke. This time I was still farther away from home. I had a little money saved, due to my increase in salary, so I could live until I secured another job. But a job in a vaudeville was not forthcoming.

During this lull in my activities I took stock of myself. If I did get another job in a vaudeville I would always be on the road. I would never have the time for the social and intellectual activities I desired. I decided right then that I would return home and do as my parents wished me to do.

I worked my way home. In doing this I danced long enough in one town to save up enough money to buy a railroad ticket to the next city. I did this from town to town until I reached home and found my parents quite angry.

I will never go on a road tour again with a third rate road show. This is not the way to advance yourself professionally in the show business. You have no time for study which is essential to the progress of every dancer.

Group to Have Forum Meeting

"Pan-Americanism" to Be Topic Considered

"Pan-Americanism" will be the topic for discussion at the second open forum meeting of the local unit of the National Student Federation of America, which will be held in the old little theater on Tuesday night, Oct. 13, at 8:30.

The program, which is under the direction of Marjorie Harris, will be subdivided into three main divisions. In order to present a background for the discussion, the first speech will recount the history of America's actions concerning Pan-Americanism from the time of the Monroe Doctrine up to the present date, the second, a brief history of Mexico and her policies, the trid, a general summary discussing the conditions existing today in Pan-America. This last speech will be followed by the customary open forum.

The Florida State College NSFA forum of last week was the first of all college units to conduct a discussion meeting this year, according to the weekly newspaper edited by this organization. There was also stated in this paper that a new series of broadcasts will be featured by the NSFA during its weekly program over a nation-wide Columbia Broadcasting System hook-up. The first of these programs will be on the air October 16 and will be continued each Wednesday afternoon from 4:00 to 4:15 p. m., Eastern Standard Time.

Editor Selects Eleven Students to Help Edit Flastacowo This Year

Plans for the Flastacowo, Florida State College annual, are well under way with the appointing of the staff this week. Edith Webb, editor, will be assisted by Janet Griffitts and Marjorie Tillis, associate editors; Eileen Robinson and Audrey Smith, assistants; Margaret Thompson, copy editor; Kathryn Beyer, athletic editor; Anne Mizell, assistant athletic editor; Antoinette Sullivan, senior editor; Grace Whitaker, art editor; and Betty Meyer, staff photographer.

Pictures will be taken in simple costumes of no formal design. Tickets for pictures will be on sale soon.

Demonstration School Orchestra Progresses

The new orchestra from the Demonstration school, which was started the first of this year, is progressing rapidly according to Mr. O. F. Sellars, director.

The orchestra is composed of about twelve students of high school age who meet twice a week. Starting October 14 they plan to entertain the school assembly once each month. Mr. Sellers said that he expected the orchestra to be able to play for the school's annual Christmas pio the school's annual Christmas program, as well as for the operettas which will be held in the early spring.

The students receive a quarter credit-point for this activity.

ministration and its subsidiary agencies in America.

On the other hand it is not only the future, but also the present which is claiming youth as its champion. Whatever the faults of the New Deal, the shallow cry of the American Liberty League, the sluggish conservatism and ignorant radicalism of many of our people, America is being guided more and more by young ideas put into effect by young people. Politicians are coming to realize that men with ideas and not cigars are going to get more votes; not only that, but the voters are realizing that politicians must be governmental experts instead of golden-voiced orators and again youth necessarily scores.—Daily Tar Heel.

NSFA Favors Pan-American Policy At Meet

Student Speakers Outline Opinions of Statesmen; Explain Theories

VOTE IS TAKEN IN OPEN FORUM

Movement for Student-led Debating Team is To Begin in December

A favorable opinion in regard to Pan-Americanism was expressed by the students attending the second open forum of NSFA held Tuesday night in the old little theater, when they agreed with Roosevelt's Pan-American policy

McKay Leads Meeting

In calling the meeting to order, Mary Jeanne McKay made two announcements. The first was a request that all students use the box under the NSFA bulletin board in the administration building, putting in topics for discussion that are of particular interest to them.

Among those topics of last week, there seems to be a strong interest in the Italo-Ethiopian situation which has been discussed. The most interesting topic in the box, according to Mary Jeanne, was "Should the League of Nations do to Italy what they did not do to Japan?"

A brief resume of this situation was given, explaining that the two countries were not alike, in that Japan withdrew from the League and Italy is still a member and were alike in that both are the aggressors and are invading for reasons of more land. "It remains to be seen just what the League will do, and I believe that this is as satisfactory an answer as can be given to the question at present," said Mary Jeanne.

Debating Movement Began

A second announcement was in regard to the student-led debating movement During November a list of parallel reading will be posted on the bulletin board for this course. "As we have no experience," said Mary Jeanne, "we must get a foundation. Students interested will please read the parallel as a prerequisite for the course In the latter part of November students will sign for the team and debating will start in December

Marjorie Harris then introduced the topic, "Pan-Americanism." As a background for the discussion, Annie Marie Mitchell discussed the development of Pan-Americanism from the time of Simon Bolivar through the Roosevelt policy of 1933. "Pan-Americanism is the sentiment for political union of all the states of South America, Central Ame-

Conradi Invited To Inauguration

Dr. James New President Of Ohio University

Dr Edward Conradi, president of Florida State College for Women, has been invited to attend the inauguration of Dr. Herman Gerlach James as the twelfth president of Ohio university in Athens, Ohio, November 15. Approximately five hundred invitations have been extended to presidents of colleges throughout the nation, the constitutional officers of the state of Ohio, and presidents of educational societies.

The inauguration committee, headed by Dr. Edwin Watts Chubb, dean of the college of arts and sciences at Ohio university, has prepared an elaborate program for the inauguration. Harry Woodburn Chase, chancellor of New York university, will deliver the principal address, while the Detroit Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Victor Kolar, will conclude the program with an evening concert.

Dr. James, who has been president of the University of South Dakota since 1929, succeeds the late Dr. Elmer Burritt Bryan in a line of distinguished presidents of the oldest university in the northwest territory. Former presidents of Ohio university include William Holmes McGuffey, author of Readers, and William Henry Scott, once president of Ohio State university and at present Ohio university's oldest living graduate.

History Made As Pie Crowns Head of YWCA Leader

Lucy Gee Linn is Victim Of Pastry Crash In Dining-Hall

Necks craned. students stood up to stare; dietitians scurried about; dignified faculty members waxed curious. A murmur of laughter which soon magnified itself into an hilarious uproar swept the dining hall. A creamy piece of cocoanut pie, topped with a fluffy meringue, had just come to rest upon the head of the president of the YWCA, Lucy Gee Linn.

The victim. peering out from beneath her halo of pastry, became so completely convulsed with laughter that she was unable to assist the persons attempting to remove the downy dessert from her coiffure with spoons, handkerchiefs, and napkins. The group at her table, almost hysterical with mirth, were in danger of acute indigestion, as was the entire dining-hall.

When order had finally been restored to the riotous diners and all vestiges of the pie had been brushed from her hair, with possible exception of a few flecks of meringue, Lucy gasped weakly, "where did it go?"

Student Leader To Speak Here

Stewart Will Represent Student Volunteers Of America

Miss Mary Robert Stewart, representative of the Student Volunteer movement, which is a part of the total Student Christian movement of North America, will come to this campus for four days, arriving on October 28 and remaining till the afternoon of October 31.

Miss Stewart, as field representative of this movement, is visiting all the campuses in the South in preparation for the Twelfth Quadrennial Convention of the movement which is scheduled to take place in Indianapolis from December 28, 1935, through January 1, 1936.

Miss Stewart's home is in Greenville, South Carolina. She is a graduate of Limestone College at Gaffney, having received her B A. degree in 1935. Her work was of such high order as to merit receiving the honor of "Citizen of the College" which is granted to only a limited number of seniors.

During her undergraduate years, Miss Stewart was interested in athletics, literary societies, and inter-racial commissions, but aside from academic pursuits she gave her time and energy most fully to the local and state activities of the Student Volunteer Movement.

In her senior year she was president of the South Carolina Student Volunteer union. In this office she did her work so well that the movement was led to ask for her full service as a staff member during the months leading up to the Indianapolis convention.

During Miss Stewart's visit at Florida State College for Women she will speak before the following groups: Religious Workers council, convocation, Young Women's Christian association cabinet, and the various church groups. Miss Stewart will also keep some of her time free for those who desire to have personal conferences.

Representatives of the Student Volunteer movement have been on this campus before, hoping by their presence to strengthen the ties between this and other campuses throughout the South.

Dr. Andrews Announces Nursery Staff Change

A complete change in the nursery school staff has been necessitated by the resignation of its three teachers, according to Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel

Miss Mattie Sue Collins, formerly a teacher at the nursery school, has married, while another teacher, Miss Sallie Cornell, has accepted a position in Lakeland Miss Margaret Biggs, nutritionist, has enrolled for graduate work in the Home Economics department.

The project now in operation at the nursery school comes to an end on November 1.

YWCA Fund Drive Is Now Underway

Students Asked to Give Pledges This Week

Because the Young Women's Christian association has immediate need for funds to carry on its work for the year, an intensive financial campaign is being conducted by freshman cabinet and executive cabinet The drive begins today and will end tomorrow afternoon.

Students who made pledges for the support of the organization at the beginning of the year will be asked to contribute now.

The campaign is under the direction of Helen Cate, chairman of freshman cabinet finance committee and the following girls are in charge of the drive in the individual dormitories: in Jennie Murphree, Frances Williams, Helma Buffkin, Ann Dickson, Eleanor Daniels, Betty Ambler, Betty Wynn, and Betty Spicer.

In Reynolds, Roberta Diamond, Nellie Jones, and Louise Brown; in Bryan, Sarah Sealey, Jane Rice, Margaret Stout; in Broward, Mollie Holden, Alma Lester, and Louise Doyle; in Gilchrist, Sara Knight, Mary Ola Reynolds, Mary Wing, Eleanor Murrill, Marguerite Brown.

The off-campus workers include Anne Ladd, Beauford Thrower, Dorothy Crews, Edythe Stanley, Dawn Latham, Margaret Neff, and Betty Peck.

Sandels Attends Meet

Dr. Margaret Sandels, dean of the School of Home Economics, appeared as a speaker at the quarterly meeting of the County Home Demonstration council Thursday, at Woodville.

The all-day meeting was held in the Woodville community house, a new ERA project now nearly completed. Lunch was served at intervals during the programs.

Coeducation is Our Only Salvation In Cruel and Wicked World of Men

Spinster Factory Student Unable to Cope With Experienced Miss

College aims to give us the equipment to face life. It gives us the learning that has come down through the centuries, handed like a torch, and says at the end of four years "Here carry on!" And that is all.

Now the college girl is ready to wrestle with life. She knows how Rome was captured, and how the Bastille fell. She has a smattering of the sciences (unless she majored in the field), and she bought all required literature books. Surely the faculty has done well by one more of the country's youth. Wasn't she able to pass a fair test? Weren't all her notebooks complete? Didn't she read all the parallel books? Yes, seniors pat yourselves on your learned brows—you're educated! The graduate has also made those "friendships everlasting." She'll never forget dear old Madge who lived next door in the dormitories, or the dear, dear sorority sisters—those companions of "fair weather and foul"—the loyal girls who stuck by each other through "thick and thin."

But after all this four years preparation the average senior of a girl's college is not prepared to meet life as it really is. For, for four years—probably four of the best years in her life, she has lived in a world of women when this is fundamentally a man's world.

Usually we find that the type girl who can get along well with other girls doesn't find it as easy to get along with the opposite sex and of course, it works the other way too. Thus it is that when a multitude of girls are thrust together into an unnatural environment there will only be a few who will be happy and contented. The question is—why don't we make all schools co-educational?

Nowhere in life will a girl find herself shut away from men so completely as she will in a girls' college. It is almost unbelievable that in our modern world medieval ideas of propriety still exist. The students of a girl's college are given no opportunity by that institution to practically acclimate themselves to the world in which they will live. For surely there must come a time in every girl's life when she finds herself alone in the company of a man.

Whereas, probably if girls were allowed to attend the same classrooms as boys, just as in high school days, watch them stumble over the same French verbs, see them make the same mistakes in grammar, and math, their attitudes would be saner and healthier. Men mould lose somewhat their veil of mystery. Soon the men in the classrooms would be nothing more than fellow-students. But what would be learned from being around these fellow-students would be invaluable.

Just as a girl now meets every type of girl, she would in a coeducational world meet every type of man. That would be an education in itself. Girls would learn how to compete with men, and

Honor Groups Elect Members

French Society Chooses Five; History Club Taps Only One

Beta Pi Theta, French honorary, and Phi Alpha Theta, history honorary, tapped their new members this week.

Those tapped for excellence in French were: Dorothy Crews, Jacksonville; Josephine Binion, West Palm Beach; Pearl Overhultz, Quincy, Barbara Crosland, Lake Wales; and Anna Glen, Chipley.

The new pledges will present a French play for members of the society in the near future to display their ability in the use of the language. Presentation of a program of this type after tapping is a tradition of the club.

Old members include: Ruth Dickson, Jacksonville; Mauvis Lussier, Orlando; Alice Porter, St. Petersburg; Wyima TerBush, Miami; Ruth Feinberg, Lake Wales; Betty Boggs, Jacksonville; Ruth Mock, Tampa; Leona Stimmell, St. Augustine; Mary Carson, Orlando; and Lillian Turlington, Gainesville.

Phi Alpha Theta tapped one new member, Daisy Parker, Monday afternoon, at the home of Dr. Annie Popper, where a tea was given in her honor. Members present were: Lucy Gee Linn, Lakeland; Goldie Lewinsky, Key West; Anna Marie Mitchell, Fort Lauderdale; and Rebecca Keith, Lakeland.

Immediately after pledging Wednesday afternoon at 5:30, the honorary held a banquet in the college dining hall. Those invited to attend were: Dr. and Mrs. R. S. Cotterill, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Williams, Dr. Venila Shores, Dr. Kathryn Abbey, and Dr. Annie Popper, the faculty sponsor.

Two Florida Graduates Have Obtained Nursery Scholarships for Year

Graduate fellowships in nursery school work have been secured by two members of the graduating class of 1935, according to Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel.

Miss Florence Jennings, of Ocala, has been awarded a fellowship at Johns Hopkins, where she is working toward an advanced degree in nursery school training.

Miss Elizabeth Lancaster, of Gainesville, has been chosen for the position of assistant teacher in the nursery school laboratories at the University of Iowa.

Behavior problems occur much more rarely in the University nursery school, according to Miss Lancaster, than in the nursery school at Florida State College for Women, probably because the children enrolled there come from a highly selected group, while those attending the F. S. C. W. nursery school come from families on relief

Professors Hold Animated Discussion Over Moot Question of Examinations

One Opines Quizzes to Be Unnecessary Evils; Life Offers Too Many Tests, Says Other; Problem Still Unsolved

Before you can begin this article, it will be necessary for you to pass an examination successfully in algebra which is only another way of proving professor DF's statement that all life is an examination, anyway. The problem reads:

Professor DF, whose moniker is not in any way intended to convey the meaning of damn-foolishness, represents one extreme of the equation, while Professor JA, whose initials are not to be confused with the animal bearing the same, is the other extreme. The means are represented by the letters Y and X the former, the name of the college that owes back salary to these two men, and the latter, the flagrant question of examinations. Find the value of X.

Thus, according to your written equation, YX, college examinations, would be equal to Professors JA and DF, respectively; however, as both these professors regard X with a different value, it cannot be equal to both of them. Turn in your paper. You have flunked the exam. Well, maybe your reasoning was right, but don't you know that grading a paper as he pleases is a teacher's perogative?

But, dry you. glass tears, for no one has solved the problem yet. That is the sole reason why Professors JA and DF met at the Madison Square Garden, last night, in an effort to solve the problem, themselves. Here, before a house packed with college students, Drs., PhDs., and correspondent students who got their AB's., C.O.D., P.D.Q., the two boys wrestled with the enigma.

Professor JA, who spoke first, stated that examinations were necessary for maintaining a level of education in the various colleges, to which Professor DF replied that levels of education were maintained, today, through inspection and that besides being bogus, spurious, and counterfeit, examinations were wholly unnecessary evils. Roar of applause from the direction of the football team.)

Professor JA quietly awaited for the noise to subside, then continued. "My dear man," he said, "do you not know that England is the home of the examination,

Day Students Contact Other Similar Groups

To Be Brought Into Closer Contact With Campus Affairs by Talks

PLANS MADE FOR HALLOWE'EN FETE

Fain Appoints Telephone Committee to Inform Members Efficiently

Answers to letters written by the Day Student's Organization concerning similar organizations of other colleges were read in the regular meeting of this group on Thursday morning. By sending these letters to other colleges, the day students wish to come into closer contact with the day students of other colleges and thus be able to improve their organization on this campus.

The Alabama college in Montevallo, a school of nine hundred students, of which seventy-five are day students, does not have a day student's organization. Instead, it has a house organization requiring all day students to live in the dormitories. These students are thus under the same regulations as other college students. In Sweetbriar, Virginia, there are only fiften day students. Consequently there is no need for such a group.

Program Arranged

The programs of the meetings from now on will consist of speeches by girls on the campus in order to get the day students into closer contact with the college affairs. Dorothy Bellamy is chairman of the program committee.

Mattie Lou Love, social chairman, announced the plans for a Hallowe'en party to be held in the near future.

A telephone committee was appointed by the president, Marjorie Fain, composed of Geneva Lamb, Winifred Hansen, Jean Gillis, Mattie Lou Love, and Louise Gehan. It is the purpose of this committee to keep in touch with the members of the organization.

It was announced that chapel is not compulsory for the day students. Also that these students are not to be in the dormitories during the lunch hour.

Ad Building Plan Passed by Board

Work Cannot Start Until Government Okehs

The board of control of Florida State College for Women has instructed its architect, Rudolph Weaver, to draw up plans and specifications for rebuilding the north end of the administration building, according to John G. Kellum, business manager of the college.

This step was taken by the board Monday at its regular monthly meeting held in the Education building. Finances for the project have been allotted by the federal government.

Reconstruction on the administration building which will be begun at the north side of the auditorium wing will have to wait until final government instructions are received Although changes will be made in the interior of the part of the building to be reconstructed, it is not yet definite what these changes will be.

At the meeting of the board last Monday the following members were present: George H. Baldwin, chairman, of Jacksonville; General A. H Blanding of Bartow; Alfred H Wagg of Palm Beach, and J. T Diamond, secretary, of Tallahassee.

Dr. John J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida; William Newell, plant commissioner of Gainesville; Clarence J. Settles, president of the School for Deaf and Blind in St. Augustine, and Rudolph Weaver, architect, from Gainesville, also attended the meeting.

Drawings on Exhibit

Life drawings will make up the exhibit this Friday afternoon in the Art Browsing room 307 administration building, according to Mrs. Beatrice Beyer Williams. These drawings are a part of last year's work which was sent to Gainesville, and was exhibited there this fall.

Editor Announces Freshmen Pictures

Freshmen may buy picture tickets beginning Monday, October 21. Tickets will be on sale outside the business office from 2:00 to 4:30 p.m. and from 7:15 to 8:00 p.m., week days. They may also be bought Saturday morning from 9:00 to 12:00.

Freshmen pictures will be made at Pike's Studio.

Sophomores are requested to finish having their pictures made this week-end.

Exhibit Shows War Aspects

Books Reveal New Phases On Struggle Between Italy, Ethiopia

An Ethiopian exhibit consisting of various books treating the different aspects of the recent controversy is now on display in the library.

"Rivalries in Ethiopia" by Elizabeth P. MacCullum is the most recent book on display. It is an objective study of British, French, and Italian penetration into Ethiopia during a period of several decades revealing—largely from official sources—some new and startling aspects of the present Italo-Ethiopian controversy.

The author comments on the internal conditions in Italy, the general political situation in Europe today, and the background of African imperialism, thus pointing out the larger conception of the controversy.

Miss MacCullum, who was born and has lived in the near East many years, is also the author of several works on European imperialism in Africa and has made an intensive study of the present dispute.

The introduction by Newton D. Baker, a distinguished lawyer and a constant student of international politics, sets forth the background of the Ethiopian situation and interprets its significance to the American people.

Religious books are also on display in the library. "Education for Life with God" by Wilfred Evans Powell treats of the fundamental nature of education as carried on in church and school and faces the question: What shall we mean by religious education?

"The Protestant Church as a Social Institution" by H. Paul Douglass and Edmund de S. Brunner summarizes for the first time the results of the projects of the Institute of Social and Religious Research The Institute has investigated during the last fourteen years the question of what is the future of the Protestant church as a factor of modern civilization and it is sufficiently in line with the vital social and intellectual trends of today.

Other recent books are "God Does Guide Us" by W. E. Sangster and "Two Sources of Morality and Religion" by Henri Bergson.

Florida Will Be Host To Annual Conference Of Extension Workers

The annual Agriculture and Home Economics Extension Workers' conference will be held at the University of Florida, October 28 through November 1. At this time all state and county farm and home demonstration agents will be in attendance to discuss and make plans for improvement and expansion of work throughout the ensuing year.

Dr. Jennie Tilt, Dean Margaret Sandels, and other members of the home economics department of Florida State College for Women will appear on the week's program, as will various professors of the University of Florida. Representatives from the federal office of the cooperative extension service of Washington, D. C., will be out of state speakers and councilors during the week.

Miss Flavia Gleason, head of the home economics department, went to Gainesville Wednesday to aid in the preparations

Conradi Will Invest 251 Seniors Tuesday

'Pomp and Circumstance' Will Usher Students, Sophomore Sisters

KATHERINE ABBEY TO GIVE SPEECH

Organ Solo, Benediction, Recessional Complete Annual Ceremony

The right to wear caps and gowns will be formally accorded to the senior class Tuesday night at the traditional investiture ceremony, at which President Edward G. Conradi is to invest the 251 members of the class. Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, sponsor of the class, will be the speaker.

College Officials Lead

A procession of the seniors and their sophomore sisters, led by the college officials, heads of the departments, and the senior class officers, will march into the college auditorium at 8.00.

While Miss Margaret Whitney Dow, professor of organ, plays Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" during the processional, each senior's sophomore sister will give her mortar board to President Conradi, who in turn will invest the senior.

Dr. Abbey will talk on, "The Challenge Still Lives Today," after which Miss Dow is to give an organ solo, "Toccato", from Widor's Fifth Symphony. Following the benediction pronounced by Dr. Conradi, the recessional "Coronation March" by Meyerbeer will end the ceremony.

Seniors to Be Invited

The seniors who are to be invested include the following: Josephine Acosta, Gwendolyn Adair, Araminta Elizabeth (Betty) Akin, Margaret Kay Anderson, Julia Caroline Athon, Sylvia Atren, Helen Louise Ayala, Edith Agnes Ayers, Zefra Baker, Evelyn Ballard, Kathryn B. Miller, Mack, Thompson, Flowers Selected

Spirogiro tapped four Odds for membership in the college dining hall Monday noon. Those receiving the honor were Betty Mack, Lakeland; Mary Miller, Orlando; Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls, and Miss Elizabeth Thompson of the speech department.

Spirogiro, a local campus honorary for Odds, was founded Oct. 12, 1924, for the purpose of selecting for membership girls who are outstanding in leadership, loyalty, and service in the Odd classes.

Members of this society are Beth Daane, Belleglade; Janice Borton, Miami; Martha Makemson, Ft. Lauderdale; Mary Jeanne McKay and Peggy McMichael, Tampa Josephine Binion, West Palm Beach; Miss Mary Settle, Miss Elizabeth Autrey, Dr Enda Mae Deviney, Dean Olivia N. Dorman, Miss Anna Tracy, Miss Pearl Hentz Beverly, and Miss Edith West.

Salesman Sam Analyzes Feminine Purchaser Of Fashionable Shoes

Declares Footwear to Be Indicative of One's Personality

"Shoes," says Salesman Sam, "denote exactly what you are. No matter how you try to act in this world, the way you buy shoes, and the shoes you buy, let out the secret of what is true in reality. It is as easy to read in feet your fame and fortune as it is to read your history in a hand, and feet are right more often. Peetistry and not palmistry is the salesman's motto."

Do you ask for the newest model? Must the shoe you buy be preferably such a select shoe that no one else could possibly have one like it? Do you prefer Parisian to American shoes? Then you are the social butterfly.

But perhaps you are the person who asks for the lowest heels and the softest leather. Does that mean you are a tenderfoot? No, just the opposite, it shows you do not let what other people say and think dictate to what you really desire.

Now if you are the kind who merely asks for sport shoes or dress shoes, you had better be careful about letting other people tell you what to do, for you are inclined to be thoughtless.

"Little women," Salesman Sam said, "buy heels supposedly to make them appear taller, but in reality to make their feet look even smaller than they are. Little women seem to be terribly fickle."

The small woman who buys low heeled shoes is a rarity. She is usually the business woman, thrifty, never sentimental, and always exact.

The woman who knows when she enters the store exactly what kind of a shoe she wants, the size, and the price she is prepared to pay, is usually the methodical woman. She is the one who has children who must always attend Sunday school. Supper is never late, nor floors left unswept in the house that woman has in charge.

But what of the woman attired in the traditional sweater and skirt with the dirty white oxfords, who sees a pair of shoes that attracts her eye and absent-mindedly and accidentally tries them on and buys them? She must be the college professor—or maybe just a student preparing for a professorship.

"Men? Well," says Salesman Sam, "they are all alike."

School Carnival Fetes Hallowe'en

Cabaret, Fortune-Telling Prizes, Featured

Carrying out one of its traditions, the Demonstration school will hold its yearly Hallowe'en carnival November 1.

The carnival will begin at 7:30 and continue until about 11:15 o'clock. Some of the amusement features will be a cabaret, fortune-telling, fish pond, chance games, different raffling games, bobbing for apples, and a grand march, which will begin the carnival. All who enter must be dressed in costume. There will be prizes for the best girl's and best boy's costume in the first six grades and also prizes for the best girl's and best boy's costume in the upper grades.

This Hallowe'en carnival is the only money-making scheme the student council uses during the entire year. Each room cooperates to make the carnival a success by having a booth or a side-show. Usually the junior class has the privilege of having a cabaret. They decorate the upstairs balcony of the Demonstration school like a dance hall and present different acts and dances in costume during the evening. Refreshments are also served.

The juniors are allowed to keep the money they make and use it for the junior-senior banquet which is given the latter part of the school term. All the other classes turn their proceeds over to the student council, which uses it to benefit the school.

Rickard Gives Spanish Speech on Impressions Of America's Culture

Miss Concha Richard of Cuba gave a talk in Spanish of her impressions of America and contrasted life culture of Cuba with that in the United States at a meeting of Phi Beta Sigma, Spanish honorary, Wednesday night at 7:30 in Broward Lounge.

Miss Richard, who is making her first visit to America, expects to stay two months. She is working with Dr. Mark Boyd at the Malaria Experimentation Station located under the infirmary.

Martha Woliston gave a short survey in Spanish of the life of Cervantes. The club will devote this year to Cervantes taking up his life and works.

After a short business meeting the members were served punch and cookies. Besides the student members present were, Dr. Marion Hay, Mrs. Ada Allen, and Mrs. Dorothy Breen.

Aim of College Should Be to Develop A Critical Attitude Among Students

Graduates Need to Possess Soundness of Mind To Exercise Intelligent Control Over Complicated Civilization

The statement by Carol Farabee that the average college student displays a lack of feeling and interest toward all problems that pertain to the social, political, and economic issues that confront society today is no longer startling. For years writers have harped on this appalling situation until the public has become irate at any form of writing that savors of the lethargy of modern youth, but until this stagnation has been lessened in some way or other the subject will continue to be one of grave importance that deserves to be orally and verbally manifested.

It is indeed amazing when one realizes the number of students who think of college as a retreat from life, four years in which to obliterate all cares and worries of this world. It is just as amazing when one realizes the large number of young men and women who are successful in obtaining this goal, who go through college receiving the superficial side of an education, never realizing the latent possibilities that four years of higher education can offer them. When the time for graduation comes it is not only the love for their respective Alma Maters that causes these students to yearn for an indefinitely prolonged college existence, but the realization that they are about to become citizens of this country which carries, or should, a responsibility in regard to the solution of the problems that confront society.

Today, as in times past, and tomorrow, the future, there is, there has been, and there will be need for intelligent citizens to take an active part in these problems for the welfare of society. No longer are we able to pretend that we are enjoying halcyon days; no longer are we prone to accept the belief that our present laissez-faire economic system is of natural origin and will right itself if allowed to follow its own course. The so-called common man is revolting against his present economic, political, and social status. The populace has just enough of an inkling of the problems to want solutions.

The whole world seems to be as a festering sore that at any moment will spread its accumulated poison. If such is the situation then who is to solve these complex problems which need the utmost care and consideration to be cured. What is to happen if intelligent leadership and following does not hold the reins in such matters?

These problems with which the world is faced must be dealt with from an intelligent rather than an emotional viewpoint. So long as our colleges are turning out a majority of students who have not had access to the means by which to cope with these life situations how can we hope for an intelligent solution? Indeed, the present naive youth is not prepared for the responsibility.

College should be a laboratory of life in which students can experiment and study life problems to be better fitted as citizens. Instead, college students balk like stubborn mules at anything which bears a trace of reality. Their college activities are a series of trips to the movies, preferably musical comedies, jaunts to the tearoom, and deep concentration on the popular fictional magazines. As for their academic pursuits, their main aim is to see how many A's and B's they can make, or to see just how little work is required to "just pass" a course. Most students are so intent upon the above mentioned aims that they can take a course in economics without questioning the present economic system and the inequality of income that follows in its wake. Political science fails to reveal to them the fallacies in our present political set-up. In fact, most every course that they are exposed to could offer food for thought, a meal that should be well balanced and masticated properly, instead of bolted down hurriedly without the proper assimilation.

In psychological parlance the pursuits of the college student would be called "an escape from reality" or regression, which as every one knows who is familiar with this form of escape, is indeed a serious problem that should be eradicated immediately to prevent serious results. College students will continue to regress as long as they ignore actualities and will create a serious problem if the forces that control or influence them do not take action against this prevailing condition.

It should be the aim of the college to develop a critical attitude among its students. Without such we will continue to grope blindly, gullibly, and selfishly through life, solving our problems without seeing the situation clearly. College students should question everything they read, hear, or think, not in an antagonistic way but in a way which will result in constructive solving.

Speaking of the college as a laboratory does not mean merely presenting the life situations before students as factual information, for if they were presented in this manner they would go the way of all such information, glibly slip off their tongues and pens without realizing their significance. Students should actually participate in these situations, making their trials and errors before they leave college, but aside from this, they should even become radicals on different subjects and also pass through stages of agnosticism, questioning the value of everything. It seems almost a necessity to experience these different stages of thinking in order to get a clear perspective of life. This very condition which is most needed in college is discouraged more than any other form of activity, by outsiders who scoff at the adolescence of the students involved, or by fellow students who are prone to remain in one little narrow rut all their lives and brand the more progressive thinkers as radicals and liberals, terms which are never wholly defined but nevertheless carry horrible implications to the layman.

If the students refuse to have upheavals in regard to their thinking after being exposed to provoking subject matter and "radical bull sessions" every possible effort should be made to blast them from their negativism in regard to their philosophy of life. If they should become too uprooted and are unable to make an adequate adjustment on their own initiative, intelligent guidance should be employed in setting them on the right path. It is those who can make satisfactory adjustments who will make the most intelligent citizens and should have a definite responsibility in shaping the present and future of society.

Without a critical attitude and a philosophy formulated from their own deductions students "who just go through" college will tend to be swayed by emotional radicalism or will be unable to adjust their thinking to the tempo of the time and will have a part in turning the world into a maelstrom of superficial leadership and following instead of weighing and balancing the problems, formulating solutions which will result in the progress of civilization.

If such is the plight of the college student then who is to blame? The solution does not lie in placing the blame on the forces that control the college but in immediate action. Prevention and cure are the best treatments for all ills and since the trouble has its roots in the students, faculty, curriculum, administration, business world, and practically every force which affects society, the treatment is a wholesale job and all the forces should have complete cooperation to bring the teaching, thinking, and living up to the present in order to bring on a regime that will face problems squarely and intelligently. Will the colleges turn out citizens who possess sufficient soundness of mind to exercise intelligent control over the complicated civilization we have created? The college does hold the solution but whether it will ever be realized depends upon its future teachings.

rica, and the United States," she stated.

The two aspects of the situation, according to Anna Marie, are the relationship of non-American countries to the American republic and the relationship of the American republics to each other. "The reasons for slow progress in Pan-Americanism are due to the barrier of race, the economic penetration of the United States and the fact that there was no political discussion at the early Pan-American meetings."

Dickson Speaks on Statesmen—

The second speaker, Ruth Dickson, spoke on the "Policies of the Great American Statesmen." Four outstanding men were quoted as follows: Woodrow Wilson, "Pan-Americanism is not imperialism, but is friendly and helpful"; Charles Evans Hughes, "Pan-American union rests on mutual interests, independence, stability, good will, and cooperation"; Herbert Hoover, "I have confidence in the ability of the American people to govern themselves"; the late Calvin Coolidge, "Pan-American stands on an equal basis with us."

Since Mary Irene McKay, the third speaker, was unable to attend the meeting her speech on "Pan-American Policies of Today" was read by Marjorie Harris. The keynote of our present policy is summed up by President Roosevelt in his inaugural address, "I would dedicate this nation to the policy of the good neighbor . . . the neighbor who resolutely respects himself and because he does so, respects the rights of others . ."

The policies hinge on economic adjustments. The United States is no longer going to stick her finger in every nation of the New World, rather all are going to try and forget past differences and misunderstandings and work together to weld the New World into an economic and peaceful unit."

At the conclusion of this speech the following question was put to the open forum by Marjorie Harris: "What do we think Pan-Americanism can be made in the future. How far can it progress?" The forum discussed such opinions as "Resentment is due to propaganda, and the feeling has decreased since the Roosevelt administration"; "The new policy has not been readily accepted by Pan-America due to a feeling of distrust."

Margaret Graham stated that if we cannot control the business man at home, we can not control him in Pan America. But it was agreed that if the business men will cooperate, the new policy will, in all probability be a success. Margaret Graham made a motion to the effect that we agree with Roosevelt's Pan-American policy, and the vote was unanimous that his policy is ben eficial for all countries concer and is heartily approved by th students of Florida State Col who attended the meeting. T forum was then closed with M Jeanne McKay reminding ever one to watch the NSFA bul board for further news.

Telegraph Boys Deliver Over 10 Messages Daily To "Secluded" Gir

Besides Regular Duties They Cash Checks and P Travelers on Bus; Important Week-ends Double Number of Wires

The mathematical powers of the college girl are varied and remarkable. There's the student who sent a telegram down to the telegraph office accompanied by thirteen cents and a credit slip from Sears & Roebuck for thirteen cents.

Then there was the one who sent twenty-six cents down with a seventy-five cent telegram. High finance!

The telegraph boys really work for the college for according to one, 100 to 125 wires are delivered to the college girls every day. Let's see, twenty-four hours, 1440 m utes — well — hm — that ma about one every twelve minute every twelve minutes of the and night somebody, somewhe writes a telegram to a college g These college girls may be cluded, but they aren't forg ten.

One sage messenger had audacity to note that most of telegrams sent from the colle go collect but those coming carry no charges!

The manager, on being in viewed, remarked, "Yes, the do work pretty hard. They everything from cashing che for the girls to putting them the bus for a big week end. T biggest part of their day is in morning when 10 to 15 night ters are delivered."

"Oh yes, about the same nu ber of them come in every m ing. Except, of course, on w ends like Homecoming. Than giving or any big week end can always tell when there's a week end coming by the increa number of telegrams, around a day."

"No," he continued "we h very few death messages for girls. Sick messages are pr unusual also."

Dormitories To Have New Shades

To spend one's evenings in the darkness or in the public eye: that is the controversy.

And it is an important controversy for many of the students living in Bryan and Broward halls, since the windows in a number of rooms have been stripped of their shades.

New shades of much better quality than the old ones are to be put up in some of the rooms, according to Mrs. Lollie Wimberly, social director in Bryan. The other rooms will be furnished with the best of the old shades.

How long the shade-less rooms will remain exposed to the public gaze is a debatable subject, says Mrs. Wimberly. The new shades have been here for two weeks and are still waiting to be put up by the carpenters.

Prof. Holds Animated Discussion Over Moot Question of Exams

and that her system of education leads the world?"

"Kindly omit the endearments, professor," DP responded. "You may be a teacher of grammar, but you certainly don't know your English. The first local examinations began in England in 1858. Years later, the English got the joke and today, Oxford university employs a different method of examination entirely."

"Well, take Italy," began JA.

"No thank you. You keep it," DP interrupted.

"Will anyone have Italy? Now see here, DP," lamented JA, "you get me muddled. Now what was I going to say? Oh yes. Examinations are tests that can be applied to life in general. In a recent experiment at a certain American college it was discovered that the most intelligent students don't cheat

"Is that a statement or a confession?" DP wanted to know.

"Now listen here, DP," JA reprimanded, "will you keep out of this until I've finished? To conclude, however, I only wish to say that if examinations should be abolished, half the livelihood of the college professor would go with them. Every year, teachers scan their examination papers for ridiculous answers, string these together into a magazine article, and make enough to allow them to buy a suit of clothes with two pairs of pants.

At this remark, five hundred PhDs turned Eddie Cantor and let out enough whoopees to cancel a reservation.

It was now DP's turn to wait for the noise to cease. "Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "up to this time I have been merely feeling out my audience (the depression is bad) but now I think that you are ready for the truth. Seriously, I tell you that examinations are ruining the health of our college students. During exam week, they get little sleep and exercise, pay no attention to diet, and lose weight and fingernails.

"Examinations should be abolished because they are not fair. Why only the other day a professor told me that he flunked four students on the strength of the onion soup he had for dinner. It is a well known fact that teachers grade differently at different times or according to their physical state.

"And another thing. Life is made up of enough examinations without burdening a person's college life with them. When you are born, you are examined to see if you are alive, and when you die, you are examined to see if you are dead."

The applause that followed brought down the house. (Loss sufficiently covered by insurance.)

As DP and JA pulled themselves out of the ruins, two blue coated gentlemen seized them, and they both so thoroughly flunked the examination that followed that they were each given twenty years in which to study. Perhaps in that time they will quit talking and really do something about this problem of college examinations.

America Needs Professional Sportswomen To Lead Teams

Miley, Golf Champ, Wants Athletics to Exist For Sake of Game

By MARIAN MILEY
Kentucky State Golf Champion

I am not writing this to in any way add or deflect glory and praise on women's competitive sports. I am writing it to prove that America needs more trained women to coach its teams.

Since the beginning of the twentieth century women have risen to unpredicted heights in practically every phase of sport. They ride, hunt, swim, play golf, play tennis, and have organized teams in every conceivable sport, including basketball, soccer, hockey, polo, and almost all the games that men have heretofore considered solely their own.

With this rise in the interest of women in athletics there has bene a general tendency toward the organization of teams, not for mere recreation but for competitive purposes. High schools and colleges first instigated the idea of the girls' teams playing the teams of other schools as did the boys' teams. The idea, however, did not end there, it went much further. Industrial concerns, chambers of commerce, sporting goods companies, athletic associations, and even churches began to organize teams for competitive play against other teams.

Girls who are taking physical education in colleges and entering into competitive sports there are for the most part instructed and directed by women who are trained for their work. Under this type of leadership there has been developed a broad program of athletics that include not merely one or two games for organized competitive teams but many sports that can be enjoyed in afterlife.

They have succeeded in emphasizing the spirit of play, making it something free from exploitation and over-strain. This type of instructor, unfortunately, is found but rarely outside the college. The type that coachs the industrial and other teams are far different.

Industrial concerns and other organizations that have women's teams have them as a general rule for the purpose of publicity and advertisement. The coachs of these teams are most often men and they, realizing that the best assurance of keeping their jobs depends in their team winning, will sacrifice all else in the effort to turn out a record breaking team.

America must have trained women to coach these teams—women who will look primarily to the health and individual welfare of the members of their teams rather than to the god of victory. If America is to have these women she must lose her old prejudice toward professionalism. The people must realize that the woman who earns her lievelihood by coaching is doing it not primarily because of personal gain or matters of finance, for there is no more financial gain there than in any other teaching profession. She is doing it because it is her chosen line of work.

James A. Ten Eyck, professional coach at Syracuse, has expressed the problem that seems to be facing the people today in regard to professionalism in the following: "The thing I cannot understand is why a stigma should be attached to the professional coach who has spent a long time learning his work, any more than there is dishonor attached to the teaching of English or algebra, or the professors of law and medicine."

In these words Ten Eyck has expressed the idea that coaching should be on an equal basis with other occupations that require knowledge and skill. This fact must be realized by all Americans if they wish to save the competitive teams from complete degradation and wish to save the health of women who play on these teams.

America must have more professional sportswomen.

Club Will Sponsor Open Forum Monday

The International Relations Committee of the American Association of University Women will sponsor an open forum next Monday, October 21, at 8 o'clock in Ruge hall. Dr. V. M. Shores will speak on the Italian-Ethiopian controversy.

Dr. Shores has spoken on this subject several times, but the forum will permit a much fuller discussion of this subject. All interested are invited to attend.

Andrews Thanks Students

Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel, this week expressed appreciation for the splendid spirit of cooperation manifested by students in responding to requests for personal interviews. Statements issued recently by the personnel department indicate that an average number of thirty-four students were seen daily during the first week in which the interviews were conducted.

their feminine minds would gradually come to grasp more of the male psychology.

The graduate of a girl's college is not really ready to met life as it is. True she has learned important facts and great underlying principles, and she has listened to experts give their opinions on the economic, social, religious and political situations of the day. For the American system of education sows well the seeds for intellectual growth in addition to the boast that it fits girls to earn their livings.

However, the girl graduate of co-educational institutions beside learning all the necessary facts for facing life have gotten much more in the way of experience. The girl graduate has had a chance to know many men other than those from the old home town who knew her when she first put on long stockings. Also she has had the experience of living around men her own age without constant advice from mother and older sister.

Thus we find that the women graduates of co-educational institutions are thoroughly modern women, well equipped to live with the world instear of poor sheltered dears who feel like so many medieval princesses, cruelly thrown into the wicked world of men.

Dean Salley Represents Florida State College At Education Meeting

Dean Nathaniel Moss Salley, head of the School of Education, left yesterday to attend a meeting of the Peace River District Education Association in Sebring. A member of the board of directors of the State Education Association, Dean Salley will represent the interests of the college at this district meeting.

The purpose of the meeting is to consider the problems of schools and teachers in that portion of the state. Dean Salley will take advantage of this visit to confer with various school heads on the recurrent problem of increased cooperative service between the schools of the state and the School of Education of Florida State College for Women.

Dean Salley also announced that the faculty of the School of Education has been invited to participate in a meeting of the Suwannee District association November 7-8, and that he and a group of other faculty members will attend.

Extensive Program Begun

An extensive improvement program, employing forty PWA laborers, was begun Wednesday on the campus of Florida State College for Women, according to Mr. Herbert Mendenhal, college engineer.

Grading, and planting of grass, begun on the southwest corner of the campus, will be finished, and thirty light poles will be placed around the road leading to the gymnasium, around the gymnasium, and along the road from Jennie Murphree residence hall to the Demonstration school. This work will involve the placing underground of 7000-foot heavy parkway electric cables.

In addition to this work, according to Mr Mendenhall, the workers will clean out and make a park out of the college arboretum, and will begin the preliminary excavations, gradings, and landscaping for the new nine-hole golf course.

Florida's Fair Seek Beauty In Modern Salons

Femina Perfecta Engage In Eternal Pursuit Of Loveliness

Second not even to intellectual pursuits in the itinerary of the Femina Perfecta of Florida State is that of pulchritude. In their eternal search for beauty the would-be Aphrodites of campus haunt the beauty salons of Tallahassee.

Although during quarterly and final exams, the library has a slight edge on the beauty parlor as far as attendance is concerned, the salon soon comes into its own again with the cessation of these cramming ordeals. Disarranged coiffures, rough finger-nails, scaly polish, and unshaped brows are worked over until they suit the taste of the most meticulous madamoiselle.

These voluntary retirements from the world of men into that of creams and fluids, while popular throughout the year, reach their zenith just prior to Homecoming in Gainesville and before the prom. In the salons one is apt to see anyone from her best friend to her worst enemy, and to hear all types of conversation, especially that dealing with the "date" responsible for this aesthetic trial. "Oh, I was too, too, very thrilled when Bill asked me to Homecoming. Don't you know it will just slay Bob when he sees me there? And that senior from my home town was so sure he'd ask her! Honey, he has the prettiest eyes, and when he smiles. . . ."

The senior seated beside her, a bit time-worn and definitely sophisticated, glancés superciliously at this naive creature. This is her fourth Homecoming; the novelty has worn off.

Intellect must take a back seat when beauty calls.

Education Director To Discuss Rehabilitation

Dr. C. B Loomis, director of education, will discuss various aspects of the Federal Rehabilitation project now being established at Cherry Lake Farms near Madison, Florida, this evening at 8:00 o'clock, in the Augusta Conradi Little Theater.

In his talk, Dr. Loomis will develop the social aspects of this undertaking, which has for one of its objectives the establishment of five hundred or more families on the two thousand acres of land allotted to the project. The speaker will also consider adult education as related to this plan.

All students are invited to attend this lecture, which is being sponsored by the A. A. U. P.

How Does Our Curriculum Measure Up?

The Flambeau recently ventured the guess that our institution is gradually advancing toward a universal plan of two-year courses of liberal education, with laboratories for higher specialization in many fields, citing our brother college at Gainesville as an example where the new plan is being brought to the testing point.

Whether such a plan can weather the storm of practical administrative difficulties which of necessity accompany any reorganization will soon be evident. But similar plans are being tried in many other schools of higher learning with varying degrees of success. At any rate, students entering the University this year will not be bothered with clock hours, class grades, or credit hours. And contrary to the usual procedure of plunging the freshmen into the intricacies of some special and highly technical field of study, the first two years will be devoted to an attempt to develop the physical and mental efficiency of all new students by deferring specialization until the junior year at college.

Admission to the General college will not be based upon any specific high school unit, although students must hove certain skills and attainments in English and mathematics and a certain level of general ability in order to pursue the college work, an innovation which is of great significance to the high schools. They will be freer to teach subjects which they think will be most profitable to the high school pupils, rather than those which have hitherto been required for college entrance.

On our own campus last spring a big forward step was also taken when a group of faculty members and students went into conference together to discuss possible plans for a new course in the sociol sciences. Later a course called "An Introduction to Contemporary Civilization," outlined by the social studies committee and approved by the curriculum committee, was added to take the place of economics 101, sociology 101, and geography 110 as an elective for freshmen only. Its purpose as stated in the general plan is "to develop in the students wholesome and socially desirable attitudes."

The trend certainly seems to be in the direction of further liberalization and when Florida State does decide to take complete inventory, with the idea of initiating a new regime for the classroom, it is to be hoped thot we will find the faculty and students working together toward the same end—the creation of a college where a "liberal education" consists in fitting students to live and to make a living.

Guest Editorial

Ideals Broken In Three

"We live and have lived long in a world of greed, of self-seeking and cruelty. Cannot two thousand years of civilization produce anything better than this? Must we of this generation take over these conditions as an inherited birthright and carry them on in the same old way as best we can, with their unemployment, fear, discord; with people distressed and dazed but mainly not comprehending?" These are the words of William Kenworthy quoted from the November issue of the Forum. Mr. Kenworthy is a young run-of-the-cloth Englishman who is faced with the same problems thot confront all thoughtful young people today.

Many people would claim that he is cynical, prejudiced, extreme in his views. They would probably say that he has lost his ideals. As he is a fair representative of youth in general, one would then be prone to question, "Are young people really losing their ideals?" Twentieth century youth, given an opportunity would hasten to declare that although many of its ideals are broken, they have not disappeared.

Most of their ideals which are turning topsy-turvy and wrong-side-out seem to parallel three of the fundamentsl principals of our existing social order: a decent livelihood for everyone, democracy, and peace. Therefore, one might say that our ideals are broken in three.

Befuddled and bewildered, we have seen our government agencies destroying animals and cotton, and making bondslaves of the average citizen. We have witnessed a distribution of millions of dollars which provided only temporary relief.

And we have asked ourselves, "Is full employment of all people possible, or must we have a permanent army of unemployed?" From Hugh Molson comes an answer: "Acute and prolonged unemployment is at the moment an unsoluable prob- full employment of all people possible, or lem, bound to last another fifteen years, due to the fact that certain natural adjustments are taking place too slowly . . . In the meantime, there will be much waste and suffering."

Is it a wonder that under such conditions we have challenged our ideal of "prosperity for all?"

Closely related to this matter of social justice and security is our ideal of democracy. In Italy and Germany has arisen the shout of "Down with democracy!" Russia has rejected parliamentary government, and the surviving western democracies are struggling for political and social readjustments. Liberal democracy still carries on in Britain, but not without challenge as to its very foundations.

The contemporary evidence of our loyalty to equality and fraternity is not to be found in our politicol documents.

We believe in the brotherhood of man and the principle of equal rights and protection; yet our own brand of democracy is challenged when we see the injustice that is rendered on the part of the average "good citizen." "Our political system," Lord Bishop of Exter claims, "permits the selfish and inferior to rule over us." Political dexterity rather than training and competence usually offers the road to office.

Young people, on reading accounts of the trial of "Dutch" Schultz and similar cases, are shocked to a sudden realization that perhaps we are actually unworthy to rule ourselves. We still have faith in the principle of democracy. Yes. We believe in its superiority as a binding force in our design of living. At the same time, we realize that our present system is not democracy at all. It is a sham, a pretense at something fine and noble. Our ideal of democracy has been broken by the ineffectiveness of the present system. We would work toward some sane, adequate program of social equality.

As we believe our ideal democracy would provide national harmony, youth would go a step further, seeking an international understanding. Cooperation between notions would offer peace—a peace based not on the fear of war, but on a real desire for satisfactory international relationships. Although such a peace program appears absurd to some people, it is the ideol program to which youth has been looking.

The Italo-Ethiopian dispute is testing the peoce movement, and once agoin the world is about to learn how far international organization has progressed. Can the League of Notions respect ond preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of Ethiopia? If Italy resorts to war in disregard of its covenants under articles 12, 13, or 15, will it be deemed ipso facto to have committed an act of war against all other members of the League? If so, will the League undertake to subject Italy to the severance of oll trade or financial relations? Will the League go further ond set "armed forces . . . to protect the covenants of the League?"

Youth is holding its breath, so to speak, anxiously awaiting decisions which may irreparably crack the most beautiful of our ideals—peace.

No. Youth's ideals are not lost. They are broken in three. The way of escape lies not in the framing of new ideals for a new world, but in the bringing of thot new world under the control of principles which have always been the primary spiritual forces in the life of American people—economic justice, equality, and peace.

—SARA RUTLEDGE.

FELLOW STUDENTS

Throughout the United States and abroad the larger colleges and universities have foreign exchange students or other foreign students on their campuses. In the United States, Yale, the University of Southern California, and Columbia are noted for their cosmopolitan groupings. In our own state Rollins is active in acquiring foreign students for its campus and does it through the exchange system. Among the foreign students there last year were a pair of young Czechoslovakian twins and a girl from Oberammergau. Several delegates of the International Relations Club of our campus had the pleasure of meeting them on the Rollins campus last year at the mock assembly of the League of Nations. Our F. S. C. W. group came to the conclusion that a foreign student was one of the needs of our campus and decided to investigate the possibility of the idea. Thus in its early stage it became a project of the International Relations Club.

This organization hopes to get a French girl on this campus next year. Before we can be sure of a student we must be able to guarantee her expenses while here. So far those individuals working on the finances of this project have received enthusiastic support from the executive board, from the members of the faculty, and from the various honoraries on campus. Now we offer it to you, the student body as a whole, for your consideration.

This is a college project—not the monopolistic privilege of a small group. The International Relations Club offers this plan to you and hopes to achieve it with your cooperation and for your benefit. At the present you can help us by intelligent and sincere discussion. Talk it over with your friends and see the desirability of the idea. If you are interested in more specific information, see Miss Marian Irish, member of the faculty of F. S. C. W. and sponsor of the International Relations Club, or any members of that group.

With your assistance we intend to broaden the representation of our college and expand it into the national field. Next year, if you of the student body desire, we shall have our first foreign student under this new project.

Signed: Anna Marie Mitchell.

TO THE GREEKS

Once again the battle for deferred rushing has been fought—and lost. Although the sororities seemed to be even more strongly in favor of it this year than last, only four of them stood by their guns when it was put to vote at a recent Pan-Hellenic meeting.

It would seem that the arguments for deferred rushing, however much agreed upon, are not to be recognized. Everyone admits (unofficially) that the atmosphere during three day rushing is strained and unusual. The sorority members are obliged to have one date after another, smile and talk and laugh hour after hour: the rushees trot wearily back and forth, look at annuals and scrap books until they are exhausted, and discuss the courses they are taking on an average of a dozen times a day. These girls are expected to determine which sorority they feel most at home in. They are being asked to choose the group with whom they wish to spend most of the four years of their college life.

Can such an important decision be made in three days time when the rushees know very well that they are not seeing the sorority as it is under normal circumstances? It is the opinion of this writer that few are able to decide except for those who have made up their minds prior to school opening or those who have several friends within a sorority group. And even they would probably like to be more certain. The other girls who are interested in sororities but who know none of the members in them are left in a quandry. Some of them choose to wait; others make a hurried decision and hope for the best.

It is a poor system which provides for sorority membership in such a way as this. And in spite of failure this year, there are several sororities on campus that will continue to fight to improve it. Deferred rushing may not be the answer but it is worth a trial.

Signed.

Clotilde O'Rourke.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

BY GRACE MARY WEBSTER

Hopes nourished for peace through the efforts of Premier Laval faded into thin air yesterday. The proposition suggested was turned down by both the British and Italian governments. Roughly, the plan was to get England to move her fleet out of the Mediterranean so that Mussolini could negotiate for peace. But England says she won't move until Italy stops fighting; and Italy thinks she does not dare move until Great Britain gets out of the Mediterranean. Hence, things are at a standstill.

The League so far has made two definite moves. First, she passed military sanctions lifting the embargo on arms to Ethiopia and clamping down tight on Italy. Secondly, she has passed economic sanctions shutting off all credit or loans of any kind to Italy. Under this sanction all religious and humanitarian projects are exempt. Hence the Red Cross funds or those of any religious organization will be allowed to Italy. The next proposal, a step which is very popular with England, is one to boycott all Italian goods.

Egypt is getting wary of Italian operations on her frontier. The Italians are said to be digging trenches, placing underground mines and building other fortifications in Libya right on Egypt's boundary. Hence Egypt is rushing defense preparations to her northern coast. Meanwhile the Egyptian cabinet continues in consultation over the question of application of League sanctions against Italy.

After eleven years under a Republican form of government Greece decided this week that a king was not such a bad idea after all. And so she scrapped her republic, asked her president to resign and sent out an SOS to King George II, who has been exiled in England all this time. It was a day for the dapper king to remove his monocle and say, "I told you so." For he has always maintained that some day they would call him back.

However, already a pretender to the throne has appeared on the scene. Prince Eugene Lararis sent word from Madrid that his followers will "convert Greece into a river of blood" unless he is placed on the throne. Prince Lacaris is a naturalized Spaniard and has ben in Madrid in exile

Newspapers this week are wealtny in tidy little stories revealing the steady profit resulting from various New Deal ventures, the hopeful outlook of the economic world and the enormous decrease in our treasury deficit. As an antedote to the evil influence of such stories we find columns and columns of neat little estimates on the size of our deficit in 1950 if we continue at the rate we have set under the New Deal, stories on the enormous damage claims against the government and statements from well known Americans berating the United States for extravagance. Such activities would almost lead us to suspect that there is a presidential campaign in the offing.

"You can't lure a duck with its own quack," ruled the Federal court in Kansas City this week. Manufacturers of duck decoys and phonograph records of real duck "quacks" were suing to halt government arrests of hunters who were using their "quacks." The ruling was given one week before hunting season opened, but the manufacturers will be given another chance to test their case.

Yesterday's front page carried a story that Mussolini will soon have two lions from Ethiopia. It sems that the two lions were found in a palace at Aduwa after the Italian occupation of the city and are being shipped to Il Duce. And yet the Lion of Judah insists that he will lead his own troops!

HOW TO BE POPULAR, THOUGH A LADY

In a syndicated interview published Sunday, Miss Dorothy Stone, celebrated dancing and musical comedy star, gives a few tips to the fair sex on "How to Behave to Keep the Men Guessing." The college man could add a few others.

Giving her "Rules for Charm," Miss Stone advises women to be gracious, impersonal, mysterious and silent. These rules were drawn up when she was 15, and since then she has married happily; so they must be effective.

But still not complete. More mature now Miss Stone makes further suggestions. She warns her sisters not to embarrass the sensitive male, not to try to top his shady stories and not to take the initiative ever.

All very true. The college man would agree with all her suggestions. But he would probably boil them down a little, then offer a few more.

Crystallizing bull-session opinion, we might say that the young man of today wants above all a feminina woman. That in itself implies graciousness and mysteriousness, if not (indeed!) the ability to listen well.

He wants a girl who is fastidious enough about her appearance to make him proud of her in public; he wants a girl who can act as a perfect hostess to his friends; he wants one who has enough reserve to keep him guessing.

She must not be a clinging vine. When she begins to call him up, check on his movements, her case is lost. Likewise, she must be careful about airing her troubles. A man expects a certain amount of maternal sympathy from any girl; but he isn't a willing listener when she wants to cry on his shoulder. A little of that goes a long way.

Nor can she be a tom-boy. A man doesn't mind if the girl smokes or drinks and he likes her to be just a bit broadminded about stories that might be told in her presence. But he doesn't want her to smoke when someone is going to be shocked, and he doesn't want her to enjoy shady stories or repeat them. As for the drinking: Poise and loveliness disappear after a few glasses. And that goes for nearly all men; even the rounders in general are disgusted if a girl tries to keep up with them.

Graciousness, too, and tact, are important. A girl should never remind a man that a couple of his fraternity brothers are saps, but should treat them like friends after introductions have been made. She should never ask "Heavens. Where did you get that tie?" Or kid him about going to sleep on a date. And above all she should realize, in spite of current opinion to the contrary, that it's good taste to say Thank You for favors. The good old days of Walter and Beth, when a lady used a man's best coat to preserve her velvet-clad toes from the mud of the gutter, without so much as a word of acknowledgment, are gone forever. The well-bred woman of today doesn't think it below her dignity to be polite.

The value of being able to listen well is open to question. Miss Stone contends that it takes intelligence to be a good listener. But it also takes intelligence to be a good conversationalist. Both parties should strive for a balance there. Every man apprect-

SHALL WE LET THE LADIES JOIN US?

By Julius S. Bixler
American Scholar, Autumn, 1935

Now that women have proven their right to education, Julius Bixler, professor of theology at Harvard, asks if women should not, besides being allowed to learn in men's company, be given some means of developing their special abilities in isolation.

"When students think the only natural meeting place for young men and women is the dance floor or the merely social function, he says, they tend to set education in artificial grooves, while it should signify intellectual cooperation between the sexes.

Further, in reviving that old discarded term "feminine intuition" Bixler asks that women be given means for special development along those lines in which they are supposed naturally to excel men. "If women have special literary or aesthetic tastes, or understand now sympathy may be socially expressed, or can show us what is important in those areas of experience where words and proofs count for little," let them receive further specialized development than men along these lines.

It is the attitude of women that men should be shared with others in this busy man-made world, he says, "something hard to define, which lies at the heart, not only of religion but of art and poetry and all the higher strivings of human emotion."

THE MOVIES JOIN HEARST

By Selden C. Menefee
The New Republic, Oct. 9, 1935.

"From a survey made by sociology students of the content of newsreels and from his own list of movies, Menefee finds the film influence is strongly fascistic and militaristic.

Sports, human interest and militarism head the classifications of major newsreels' content Menefee reveals by the survey, with the college students considering only 36 per cent of all newsreel items primarily educational.

Menefee presents two ways to combat fascism and militarism in the movies. Protest, he says, as several college towns did successfully last spring, such movies as Hearst Metrotone News, "Red Salute," "Call to Arms" and "March of Time" newsreels with organized campaign of letters and phone calls to theater managers.

The second method suggested by Richard S Ames, he says, is to demand a congressional investigating of film industry similar to munitions investigation.

Federal regulation may be no more desirable in the long run than Hearst-Wall street regulation, he concludes, but at least the film fans may become slightly more conscious of the forces that determine their visual diet.

A WORD TO THE REPUBLICANS

By Harold J. Laski
Harper's, October, 1935

In discussing representative government, Harold Laski, professor of political science at the University of London, reminds the Republicans of their duty as an opposition party.

Since negative criticism of the party in power has never won an electorate, Laski says Republicans must reconstruct their philosophy of conservatism, yet it must be consistent with the new environment. Republicans must drive their philosophy home with specific criticisms of the President's measures, yet offer strong alternatives for their specified criticisms, he adds, rather than weakly criticize the measures in general.

If the opposition party ignores changing institutions in this historical transformation, he declares, tho representative form of government may be overturned by men who think the regime is at fault. If such a social disruption comes about, he predicts in conclusion, "Western civilization is not unlikely to enter upon a new and uglier Dark Age."

The Social Week

Panhellenic Will Sponsor Informal Friendship Teas

This week-end Panhellenic is beginning a series of informal teas in an effort to promote a closer union among non-sorority girls and sorority members. The first series of teas will be held this afternoon and the second, Sunday.

These teas will furnish an opportunity for all students and faculty members to get together in an informal manner, and to become better acquainted with each other.

Each sorority will have an opportunity to act as hostess at some time. Personal invitations are being issued to the students.

The members of the Chi Gmega, Phi Mu, and Theta Upsilon sororities will be hostesses this afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock at the Chi Gmega house on West Jefferson street, honoring students living in upper Gilchrist hall.

The lower floor of the house will be effectively decorated with fall garden flowers.

During the afternoon tea, sandwiches, and cakes will be served to the guests by the members of the three sororities.

Students living in lower Gilchrist hall will also be entertained this afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock when the members of the Alpha Xi Delta and the Alpha Delta Pi sororities will give a tea at the Alpha Delta Po house on West Pensacola street.

Fall garden flowers will be used throughout the house to decorate fo rthis affair. The receiving line will consist of representatives of each sorority including Audrey Smith, president of Alpha Delta Pi, and Carlotta Cubillas, vice president of Alpha Xi Delta.

Sunday afternoon the members of the Sigma Kappa and Alpha Omicron Pi scroritizs will be hostesses to the students of lower Reynolds at an informal tea given at the Sigma Kappa house.

Varigated fall flowers will be used throughout the lower floor of the house.

In the living room there will be two serving tables with a representative from each of the hostess sororities pouring During the afternoon coffee and cookies will be served to the guests.

Decorations will feature seasonal flowers and greenery.

The fourth of these informal teas will be given by the Sigma Sigma Sigma Delta Phi Epsilon, and Kappa Delta sororities at the Kappa Delta house on Copeland street.

In the receiving lina will be Jo King, president of the Kappa Delta sorority, Ruth Feinberg, president of the Delta Phi Epsilon, and Lydia Craig, representing the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority.

Tea and individual cakes will be served during the afternoon in the yard of the house.

These teas will be continued next week. It is hoped that if they are successful, they will become an annual affair.

Pi Beta Phi Sorority Honors Initiates With Breakfast

The active members of the Pi Beta Phi sorority were hostesses Saturday morning at a breakfast at the Floridan Hotel in honor of their new initiates Dorothy Bellamy, Marian Alice Rogers, Mary Kinser, Kashmir Mumby, Betty Ann McKenzie.

PHI MU PLEDGES TO GIVE KID PARTY HONORING 'FIRST GRADERS' ON CAMPUS

The Phi Mu pledges will entertain the pledges of other sororities on campus at 8:00 o'clock tonight with a kid party. Invitations from the "first graders" have been sent to the other houses in the shape of a big lollypop.

The house will be effectively decorated with colorful balloons and arrangements of crepe paper. Flowers in fall colors will be arranged throughout the lower floor which will be used by the guests.

Games such as farmer in the dell, ring around the rosy, and drop the hanky will be played. Pinning the tail on one of the five donkeys will be one of the games played. A prize will be given to the most accurate contestant.

A special program will be given during the evening by the pledges. They will present a first grade classroom scene where there will be recitations of modern nursery rhymes.

The "children" will be fed ice cream cones and big lolly-pops at feeding time.

May Ingle is chairman of all the arrangements, assisted by Mary Jane Johnston and Peggy Gerald.

Hostesses for this affair will be: Caroline Barrett, Nancy Bryan, Joe Cunningham, Sophie Draughon, Pearl Gay, Peggy Gerald, May Ingle, Mary Jane Johnston, Ethel Jones, Jean Smith, Helen Stewart, Margaret Wilson, and Marian Purviance.

ALPHA CHI OMEGA TO ENTERTAIN NEW MEMBERS WITH BANQUET AT FLORIDAN

The newly initiated members of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority will be entertained with a banquet tomorrow night at the Floridan hotel. This banquet will also be given to celebrate the national Founder's Day.

The color scheme, black and white, will be carried out in the place cards and menus. The centerpiece of the banquet table will be of red carnations.

Favors combining the theme of 1885-1935 will be given to each member, while recognition pins will be given to each of the new initiates.

The new initiates to the sorority are: Sara Sealey, Molly Holden, Dorothy Stubbs, Mildred Seekins, Roberta Diamond, and Bertha Veith.

Persons and McGuire Will Hear Many Notables Of News World

The joint convention of the Associated Collegiate press with the National Press association is being held at the famed Medina club in Chicago, October 17 to 19. The delegates from the Flambeau are Ruth Persons, editor, and Lilly McGuire, assistant business manager.

The program for the convention is centered around the theme "Building the College Newspaper," and includes addresses by many notables from the newspaper and advertising worlds. Heading the list of prominent speakers is Leland Stowe, who is Paris correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune, winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1930 for the best example of foreign correspondence, president of the Anglo-American press of Paris and author of "Nazi Means War"

Carroll Binder, distinguished foreign expert of the Chicago Daily News and Grant Olson, advertising manager of the Shaeffer Pen company In addition to these experts, many authorities in the college field will speak, among whom are: Dr Ralph D. Casey, dean of the University of Minnesota School of journalism; Professor Kenneth E. Olson, director of Rutgers university School of journalism; Dr. Curtis D. MacDougall, editor of Evanstown News-Index and lecturer at Northwestern university school of journalism, and Harry B. Rutledge, managing director, National Editorial association.

The subjects to be discussed at the editorial round table will cover everything from make-up and typography to the latest developments in news photography. Speakers at business sessions will present the latest ideas in the solicitation of advertising, advertising services surveys, and business accounting

A new feature of the convention is the special round table for editors who head staffs of papers that are published less often than two times a week This round table will discuss the elements of staff organization, news, features, and editorial procedure.

Contemporary Students Thought

ates a girl who can listen, apparently with appreciation, to what he considers his philosophy; but he shouldn't bore her with the results of his marksmanship at Camp Custer or the yarn about his latest blinger, unless there is something in the way of humor or pathos in the tale to make it of common interest. And the girl can always be entertaining until she resurrects her sorority songs or discusses the clothes she would like to wear. Also, a "line" from either party deserves mayhem. But of course each expects the other to contribute something lest their friends suspect wallflower tendencies.

Miss Stone considered mysteriousness, elusiveness, to be very important, and so does the college man. If she is quite indifferent about his away-from-her affairs, he'll probably hover more closely, trying to make a more lasting impression. A man always likes to be surprised by new traits of character in a girl, and she in turn, if she wants to stay fresh, will take on a certain reserve to accomplish it.

But there is one thing that Miss Stone missed. To be ever-appealing a girl must be a good sport. That is especially true in a collegiate atmosphere, for many of us poor proletarians are lacking in rich uncles and can't offer much in the way of gilded glamour, though we do like appreciation for benefits rendered. No co-ed with an ounce of brains will throw a couple of fits and be publicly hysterical because her escort of the moment can't take her to the J Hop—although such conduct seemed to be quite the rage last season. And when the young blade in modest circumstances rakes up a means of transportation after strenuous effort and is exultant because it hits on at least three cylinders, the girl should never, never, make him feel like an ass by exclaiming with dismay: "What! In that!" Much better for her to laugh with him about it and offer

Zealous News-Seeker Reports On Use Of Leisure Time On Campus

Leisure is defined by a standard dictionary as "time at one's command." To most students on campus, however it is a practically obsolete word picked up occasionally in dryer-than-dry parallel. Going on this assumption, one zealous reporter set out to compile .. collection of statistics on the ways in which the few fortunates on this campus who have spare time spend it.

The seniors almost unanimously raised their brows and smiled pityingly on one who would be naive enough to suggest that they ever enjoyed an idle moment. Some did, however, have hazy ideas on the way in which it might be spent The reading of new books and magazines for the improvement of their minds was the reply with few exceptions. One remarkable senior did express an altruistic desire, scarcely more exciting than that of her sisters. "If I had leisure time, I'd spend it with freshmen," she asserted, "because they like to know upperclassmen." She then dismissed the reporter by dropping her eyes to a ponderous volume of Shakespeare remembering, no doubt the last time she had danced with said news-seeker in "Rec."

The juniors and sophomores either handle the truth more carefully or are less hard-worked than their senior classmates. They spend their leisure time by following strange hobbies. Among these are included: painting, chasing bugs, preferably cockroaches, and collecting unusual plants, which they usually name "Daniel" or "Esmeralda"; knitting; making scrapbooks; and, most popular of all, sleeping.

The freshmen have their own unique ways of spending leisure time of which they seem to have plenty One of this class "just flits around." Her roommate innocently states, "I study in my spare time." Another likes to go to town during her unoccupied moments.

Despite all the assertions to the contrary, the reporter finally came to the conclusion that the over-worked student body spends its leisure time—and it apparently has a good deal—in theaters, in tea-rooms, and in ten-cent stores.

Distaff Welcomes All Contributors

The deadline for handing in material for the Distaff has been advanced to Saturday, October 19, according to Sarah Krentzman, editor, who would like all copy brought to her room, 319 Gilchrist.

Freshmen as well as upperclassmen are urged to "try their hand" and contribute articles to this quarterly magazine.

Informal Tea to Be Given by Andrews For Assistants

Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel, will act as hostess at an informal tea to be held at 4:30 on Saturday afternoon in honor of the students who conducted freshman interviews this year and the student assistants employed in the personnel department.

Those included in the invitation are: Katherine Blood, Barbara Crosland, Minna Dunn, Frances Forth, Barbara Greene, Clarissa Kright, Sarah Krentzman, Lucy Gee Linn, Betty Meyer, Annawilda Norris, Gladys Oliver, Murae Reddick, Edith Webb, Katherine Yongue, Virginia Crump, Alma Butler, and Gertrude Rogers.

to push the dejected vehicle if Mr. Ford's masterpiece happens to disintegrate. Likewise, she mustn't complain if their theater seats aren't the best in the house or if the party is lousy.

And of course we trust that never again will we hear at a dance "Say, listen—I can't buy a new pair of shoes for every party."—Michigan State News.

WORK

Among the Auburn student body there exists many and different attitudes concerning work and the easiest way in which it can be avoided. Some of these include ideas such as how to pass a course with the least possible preparation, how many classes can be cut without too severe penalty being inflicted, how to get out of quizzes, various means of persuading the professor to give a "beat", and, if one just must attend class, how to get in the most comfortable position in order to survive the fifty minute ordeal.

In view of the above facts it is interesting to note what the president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company Frederick H. Ecker, has to say on the subject of work. Mr. Ecker, writing as guest editorialist in The American Magazine, presents a different conception from that held by most of us on this matter. He contradicts the popular idea that work is merely a means of securing leisure.

According to Mr. Ecker, it is very easy for our present day youth to be misled by such terms as the "new leisure", the "five-day week", and the "six-hour day." These terms, he states, "are used in discussions of employed labor, not of work. Work is timeless. It knows no limitations except that of energy. It is man in action. One can lose a job. One need not lose work.

"It is wise to take stock of oneself in youth, then set the hand to the plow Talent? Ability? That is all beside the point. Work is the principal factor. I say that if one plows the field and sows the grain, the harvest will come as surely as day follows night. We make our talent, ability, yea, genius, through discipline and endless work No philosophy of leisure, of loafing and inviting the soul, of new economy or do-as-you-please psychology can outwit the necessity of work as the forerunner of harvest and the fulfillment of self."

Just what change in the Auburn student body would a wholehearted adoption of this attitude in our college work bring? It's worth thinking about; a man who has attained Mr. Ecker's prominence and position should know.—Auburn Plainsman.

THE PROGRESSIVE THIRTIES

Like the "gay nineties" which America experienced in the closing years of the nineteenth century, college life had its "gay twenties." Those years following the World War up to 1929 marked a colorful period in American college life. Dad could send John and Mary to school well clothed and assured a fat allowance. Fraternity life flourished. Brokerage firms vied for flashing halfbacks and jobs were plentiful.

Then the bubble burst. The market crashed and the American middle class, from which college population is largely derived, suffered a curtailment of income. Still thousands streamed into the institutions of higher learning. Of course hard times affected campus life as it did home life. Students had to cut expenses to the bone. Government relief was necessary to keep many in school and examples of supreme sacrifice became legion.

Changing values in collegiate life were inevitable. A spirit of democracy and cooperation was the logical outcome. Experiments in cooperative living, a more democratic and inexpensive social life as exemplified by our Wednesday night dances on this campus, and the Student Union Building idea, all received a new impetus. The stress shifted from social and fraternal values to open competition in more intellectual pursuits. Scholarship has been given a new impetus.

That the average boy and girl has brought these changes about, is particularly encouraging. Of course there will always be those ambitious souls, who no matter how indigent, will get an education. Biography bears testimony to this. But this stamina being displayed by the American middle class is the manifestation of the new spirit of America.

The American college is weathering the storm and being strengthened by the hardships of economic adversity. The nuturing of good minds in a wholesome and progressive atmosphere is an encouraging sign.

Dying Swan and Falling Leaf Incapacitate Frosh Dancers

Kentucky Derby Entry Gains Three Pounds; Sends Home for Laboratory Flies and Falls For Burning Torch

By MINNA AGRESS

Dear Ma:

Rec'd your letter today but did not get the flies. Please hurry and send them because I am supposed to have them for my lab. and can't catch any here. I caught two, but they got away when I picked up the cup to see if they were still there. Please make Johnny catch some as I need them. Send them right away because I have to have them Monday.

Chasing flies has worn me down so that I can't get up enough will power to keep from breaking out into "neighs." I feel like a Kentucky Derby entry. I have to gallop out of the room everytime a bell rings to run either to a class or to the dining room. I have gained three pounds so far this week.

I didn't get up for regular breakfast this a. m. so I thought I'd eat a little later like I see some girls do. When I walked into the dining room by the door leading from my dorm the girl standing inside seemed awful surprised. She spoke to me rather sarcastically when I explained to her that I didn't mind eating late. She said biggety-like that the fact that even I didn't mind eating late didn't mean a thing—I mean she was actually sarcastic. I sorta think it was because she saw me coming from the freshman part of the building—they're awful mean to us. I thought of some positively killing things to say, but that was after she left. I waited until lunch to eat.

I almost burned myself to death last night, Ma I had to carry a torch in that parade-like thing where you wear a net nightgown thing without shoes. I was supposed to light my torch and walk straight ahead like I was proud of carrying it. Well, I did right well except that I looked too straight ahead and somebody put their foot right out in my way. I didn't see it because I was not looking anywheres but straight ahead like they told us to. I sorta fell on the torch which was hot. I didn't burn my dress. Also I didn't get hurt either. Some of the feet look much prettier with shoes on.

Ma, I can't write a very long letter because I am taking interpretative dancing. I thought it would be fun because they wear the cutest little bathing suit-like things. I was a falling leaf all last week and a dying swan yesterday. It's kind of uncomfortable to sit very long now. I drifted a little bit too hard to the floor at the dying part I think. The dance is really pretty when the teacher does it. Tomorrow I'm just going to do the first part. The last part is when you drift to the floor.

I'm going to stand up for a little while now, so I'll close.

Your loving

Susie Belle.

Miss Terrier Goes Hungry When Closed Sign is Hung to Foil Her

Friendly Dog Takes Part In Campus Life With Collegiate Air

Even the dogs at Florida State catch the swing of colegiate life. One afternoon this week a sophomore was at her desk studying, when she heard a slight noise coming from the direction of her roommate's closet. She thought that her roommate had returned from a trip to town, and upon turning to greet her, saw a little terrier emerging from the closet The dog walked around for a little while and was then escorted out of the room.

Miss Terrier walked down to Broward smoking room, sat down on a chair, and began to manicure her nails. She seemed to be waiting for the dinner bell to ring.

She is always on time for the dining hall bell. She can be seen nearly every morning standing at the door, along with the students who are also waiting to go in. The look on her face appears to say, "I wonder why they always put up that 'closed' sign just as I get to the door." She didn't get her dinner.

Many Faculty Will Attend Convention

Conradi to Speak on "Fine Arts in the College Curriculum"

ANNA TRACY WILL PRESIDE AT MEET

Sandels Also to Attend; Report by Tilt Will Be Presented

Headed by Dr. Edward Conradi, college president, many Florida State College for Women faculty members are planning trips to educational and other conventions and meetings in Cleveland, Birmingham, Atlanta and places in Florida.

Conradi Goes To Atlanta

Dr Conradi is among the educational leaders scheduled to discuss "Fine Arts in the College Curriculum," November 1-2, at a meeting of the southeastern division of the American association of colleges in Atlanta. He has also received an invitation to attend the inauguration November 1 at Athens, Ohio, of Dr. Herman Gerlach James as twelfth president of Ohio university.

Tracy To Preside

Miss Anna May Tracy, college dietitian and associate professor of institution economics, will preside over the administrative section of the American Dietetic association at its annual convention, October 27-31, at Cleveland. Miss Tracy left yesterday for Cleveland in order to attend the meetings of the association executive committee before the convention opens, and she plans to remain two days after the convention for other sessions of the executive committee. Also attending this meeting will be Dr. Margaret Rector Sandels, dean of the school of home economics.

At the convention a report by Dr Jennie Tilt professor of physiology chemistry and nutrition at Florida State College, will be read. Dr. Tilt, who was scheduled on the program, was unable to attend the convention as she has a speaking engagement at the annual Florida conference of extension workers in agriculture and home economics in Gainesville at this time

Other Members Attend

In addition to Dr. Tilt others attending the Florida conference October 28-November 1, are Miss Flavia Gleason, who will have charge of the home demonstration division. Speakers at the meeting include: Dr. Ruth Conner, associate professor of home economics, on "Family Relationship". Miss Henrietta Sivyer, as-

Building Plans To Be Completed

Gainesville Architects To Secure Data Here

Plans for reconstruction work on the administration building are expected to be completed by November 1, according to H. G. Mendenhall, college engineer.

Guy C. Fulton, F. T. Hanaford and Norman A. Skeels, who are from the office of the Board of Control's architect in Gainesville, were on campus this week securing data to begin work on the plans.

Rudolph Weaver, architect, received instructions from the Board of Control at its regular meeting October 7 to begin drawing up plans and is now awaiting final instructions from the federal government before beginning actual work.

Reconstruction will consist of restoring the north wing of the administration building as far as the auditorium. The new portion of the building will be of reinforced concrete and brick, the floors will be concrete covered with asphalt tile, and the walls and corridors will be lined with glazed tile. The present doors, windows, roofing tiles, and as much other material as can be salvaged will be used. Several changes in the interior of the building are also being planned but are not yet definite.

This reconstruction project is made possible by the allocation of federal government funds in addition to an appropriation made by the state legislature at its last session.

Dinner Tickets Go On Sale November 15

Thanksgiving dinner tickets will go on sale November 15, 100 to be issued from the alumnae office for alumnae, and 100 from the senior class for parents of seniors.

Because of crowded conditions in the dining room, only 200 tickets will be placed on sale this year. Each senior purchasing tickets will be limited to two tickets only. Tickets are to be sold to students for members of their family only —not for "the boy friend."

College President Makes Address At Ceremony Of Investiture

Two hundred and fifty-two seniors were invested Tuesday night with the traditional ceremony in which President Edward Conradi placed a mortor board on the head of each senior as the class filed across the stage on the arms of their sophomore sisters.

The processional began at eight o'clock with the playing of "Pomp and Circumstance" by Miss Margaret Whitney Dow, professor of organ. Following this Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, faculty advisor of the class of 1936, introduced Dr. Bessie Carter Randolph who gave the class an address.

Dr. Randolph, for seven years a professor of political science at Florida State college, now president of Hollins college in Virginia, brought to the student body the greetings from the women's colleges in the commonwealth of Virginia. Her talk centered around the special significance of the class of 1936 and the decisions and adjustments to be made by them in respect to the vital problems of the day.

Dr. Randolph stated that the freshman and sophomore years are for the purpose of rounding out the student's girlhood education, while the junior and senior years are the beginning of a new period of adult education.

Just as the districts, counties, states, and even nations have gradually broken their bonds of dependency, and have become unified by grouping themselves into larger organizations to solve common problems, so must the senior combine every side of her life—political, social, and economic—in order to broaden her knowledge of the real problems of today. When a student becomes a senior she possess a political or scientific attitude towards life, a power to evaluate the important things, and an ambition to make good the deficiencies and omissions of her former years.

There are many decisions and evaluations to be made by a graduate, and Dr. Randolph pointed out four of the most timely ones. The first is the depression, now in its seventh year, which is greatly influencing ideas on education. It is only by international action that another depression such as this can be prevented.

The second is the new deal, inaugurated by President Roosevelt, which is testing the strength and ability of the constitution to measure up to the standards and demands of our present day. The third is the greatest attempt at political control—the control of war— and the fourth is the struggle between democracy and dictatorship, whether or not we are to prefer safety to liberty as the Germans, Italians, Austrians, and Poles have already done before us.

It is the graduating class of 1936 which will help mako and see executed the decisions on these questions according to Dr. Randolph. It is their responsibility to evaluate the right from the wrong, and it is only due to the proper development and education which they receive in their college courses, that they will be enabled to act wisely in these matters.

Dr. Randolph concluded by defining investiture as an outward sign of an inward spiritual growth.

Varied Events On Campus Are Briefly Shown

Investiture Takes Place Amidst the Flourish Of Caps and Gowns

LURE OF CIRCUS TO INVITE MANY

College Awaiting Annual Display of Faculty Actors-de-Luxe

To the tune of "Pomp and Circumstances," "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," and "Faculty on Parade," we skim over the varied events and prospects of the past, present, and future.

Seniors Invested

Giggling seniors suddenly transformed into solemn wearers of "the emblem of knowledge" at Investiture Tuesday night . . . rows upon rows of sophomore sisters, their white dresses affording modernistic contrast to the black of caps and gowns. Thoughtful faces under tasseled mortar boards listening to Dr. Randolph . . . the last college year . . . then what?

Dignity discarded after the ceremony with sophomores and seniors off to the tea-rooms, the treat on the seniors.

Circus In Town

Over the week-end the lure of the circus will enchant many of the intelligentsia. Silver spangled costumes sparkling on the agile bodies of tight-rope walkers . . . ribbon bedecked horses prancing to a slightly off-key band . . . the girls behind you dropping peanut shells on your new Angora sweater . . . trained seals balancing bright-colored balls on shiny noses, greedily begging for a reward of fish . . . pink lemonade . . . cotton candy . . . hot dogs . . . Then the side shows . . . bearded ladies . . . sharp-witted barkers . . . pushing crowds.

Faculty Frolics. Who will take part? Once a year students have the opportunity of viewing their best friends and worst enemies on the faculty showing off for an audience willing to pay well to see it.

Co-Eds To Gainesville

Up and at 'em—treat 'em rough —yeah team, that's the stuff— Many of the co-eds are planning with undue enthusiasm for the homecoming at Gainesville this week-end. Excitement prevails in many rooms in the dorms as the popular collegiates wonder whose clothes they will take with them and just what to wear to the football game.

Traditions will go on and sen-

Demonstrations Get Under Way

First Rehearsal Tonight Harris Announces

Work on Odd and Even Demonstrations is getting underway this week with first rehearsal for the Evens tonight at 9:00 o'clock, and tryouts for Odo speaking parts this afternoon at 3:30 and Saturday morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Most of the cast for Even Demonstration has been selected, according to Marjorie Harris, chairman, and includes: Helen Young, Marguerite Brown, Betty Ostlund, Margaret Stout, Hilda Spradlin, Mary Patterson, May Fernandez, Nell St. John, Alicia Meacham, Dot Hoffman, Eleanor Jenkins, Sara Nance, Mary Carson and Caroline Gliver.

Committees for Even Demonstration are: Director, Dora Helen Baggott; dances, Caroline Oliver; music, Marian Conn; costumes, Victoria Crisp, Helen Miller, Betty Manning; stage managers Floy Lenert and Magaret K. Anderson; properties, Jo Douglas; programs, Louise Lingo; publicity, Althea Smith; typing, Marjorie Mueller; script, Althea Smith and Marjorie Harris.

The cast for Odd Demonstration will be announced soon, according to Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman.

Unannounced Guests Dapart With Shocked Hostesses' Wherewithal

Visiting at some sorority houses this week-end was a person or persons unknown who so far violoted the rules of the model guest as to walk off with portions of their hostesses' wherewithal, leaving empty pocketbooks and dresser drawers in their wake.

These gentlemen (for such we hope they were) did not herald their arrival with so much as a telephone call, nor did they stay to introduce themselves formally to the house mother. One of them so far forgot custom as to usher himself unannounced into the room of one of the young ladies, picking his way through the screen with a lowly icepick and ignoring the front door with admirable nonchalance.

This method is not to be advised, even for the he-man type, for so much bubbling enthusiasm is apt to repel the college girl and send her running for the more undemonstrative type.

And then there was the visitor who climbed up the drainpipe of Jennie Murphree That was just plain showing-off. Such would-be impressers should remember that athletic prowess may be demonstrated more effectively on the football field.

These light-fingered P. O. P. U.'s are hereby publicly asked to make their visits in the daylight, coming in the front door as is customary and expending some of their own money on the ladies of their choice instead of evincing such coy "gigoloish tendencies" as taking souvenirs. Then, and then only can college women again don curlers and face creams before retiring and leave their money in places where they can find it again.

Ruth B. Owens To Speak Here

U. S. Minister to Denmark Visits Here During Leave of Absence

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, United States Minister to Denmark, who has returned to the states from Copenhagen for a short leave of absence will visit the campus of the Florida State College for Women this week. During her visit she will be the guest speaker at a special formal convocation to be held in her honor in the college auditorium Thursday morning at 11 o'clock.

Before her appointment as Minister to Denmark Mrs. Owens was Congresswoman of the east coast of Florida during which period she won renown as one of the outstanding women in political circles.

Mrs. Owen arrived in the United States the first of October aboard the Scanmail accompanied by her daughter, Miss Helen Rudd Owen, and Miss Peggy Brenner.

In addition to Mrs. Owen other state officials have been invited to attend the special convocation program, among whom are Governor David Sholts.

Members of the faculty and senior class have been requested to wear caps, formal collars, and gowns.

All 10:30 classes will be omitted on Thursday to enable seniors and members of the faculty to arrange for convocation.

Speech Department To Give Play "Moor Born"

The speech department of Florida State College will present the play "Moor Born," as its first production of the year 1935-1936, in the very near future, according to Miss Kemper M. Moore, professor of speech.

"Moor Born" was written by Dan Totheroh, an American dramatist. Dr. Totherch illustrates in the play that geographical situations can influence people and their philosophies of life.

The stage setting for "Moor Born" will attempt to create the theme of the play in design, the denomination of the moor over the lives of the individuals being the predominant spirit of the design.

Freshmen Gives Oath In Fealty

Class to Pay Homage To Alma Mater Rather Than to Juniors

When the freshman class gives its oath of allegiance to the college in the annual ceremony of Fealty on November 2 the orientation period for 1935 will have come to a close and a new tradition will have been established on this campus.

Contrary to the practice in past years the oath will be to the alma mater of the freshman class rather than to the sister class, the juniors. This year the freshman advisory council will be in charge of Fealty. The council is composed of Minna Dunn, the freshman advisor, and the floor chairmen of Reynolds and Jennie Murphree halls with Dean Olivia Dorman and Katharine Warren acting as advisors to the advisory council.

During the orientation period regular meetings of the freshman class have been held. Different members of the faculty addressed the class at each of these meetings to aid in acquainting them with college life and traditions. The orientation period will come to a formal close when freshman class officers are elected sometime next month.

The script for Fealty was written by Audrey Farmer of the senior class. Committees which have been appointed to aid in carrying out the Fealty ceremony are as follows:

Geneva Stout, properties; Mary Ann Hills, staging; Miss Henrietta Sivyer of the home economics department, Dimples Turner, and Ann Sams, costuming; Nettie Taylor, finances; Jo Binion, dances; Miss Sarah Thompson and Miss Margaret Wylie, of the speech department, dialogue; and Marjorie Tillis, general chairman.

Art Exhibit to Be Held

A representative group of paintings and drawings from each of the art classts will make up an exhibit to be shown this afternoon in the Art Browsing room, 307 Administration building, according to Miss Amy Ferris Briggs, assistant professor of art.

These drawings are a part of last year's work which was exhibited this fall at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

Magazine Business Prospering at Florida State According to Enterprising Young Book Salesmen

BY HILDRED SAMPSON

Young America has entered the magazino business at Florida State College for Women. Every day during the lunch and dinner hours, seven little boys between the ages of eight and twelve are to be found on the campus near the dining hall enticing nickels and dimes from the students with the cry of, "Magazine, lady? Want to buy a Saturday Evening Post? A Ladies' Home Journal?"

The competition among the magazine venders is keen but friendly. Each of the boys, Johnny, Frank, Dickie, Aquila, two Jimmys, and Bobby, is in business for himself, and will do his best to sell his magazines, regardless of his rivals.

"It is fun to sell magazines," Johnny, an enterprising eight-year-old salesman, said, "but sometimes you get tired and discouraged when you have an order of magazines and you can't make your sales"

Business is usually fair, however, and each boy makes a profit of 1½ cents on the sale of a five-cent magazine. A boy is allowed ten weekly magazines and from eight to ten of each of the two monthly magazines which he handles.

Each of the boys is gaining a distinct training in salesmanship. When one of them displays an attractive cover and implores with a pleading eye, one can hardly resist borrowing a nickel if one's own pocket is empty.

Although these boys are there to sell magazines, they will readily carry on a conversation if accosted. Asked what they do with the money they earn, James and Johnny both said they are "saving it up."

The boys, however, do not intend to sell maazines all their lives. This business is only a step on their way to future success. When they "grow up," James said he will probably go to college, while Johnny thinks he will be a cowboy, "like the real ones out west." His true home is in Texas.

Parlors Toured As Step Toward Beautification

Improvement and Social Committees Effected Numerous Changes

EACH HALL TO GET TEA SERVICE SET

Monthly Inspections to Be Made to Determine Further Action

An inspection tour of the dormitory parlors was made last night by the dormitory improvement committee for the purpose of determining the next step towards beautification of social areas of the parlors.

This committee consists of Mrs. Beatrice Beyer Williams, of the art department, chairman; Miss Henrietta Ruth Sivyer, of the home economics department; Miss Anna May Tracy, dietition; Miss Maude Alice Flowers, director of residence halls; H D. Mendenhall, college engineer and architect; and Miss Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students.

To students' complaints of the lack of beauty of dormitory parlors, date parlors and lounges, this committee was formed last year and has accomplished many changes on campus.

Activities of Committee

Working in conjunction with the social committee, the improvement committee last year was responsible for the renovating of Broward lounge. The room was redecorated with old furniture re-upholstered, other furniture purchased, new drapes, curtains, shades, and a new piano provided. The committee's next step was to provide each dormitory with a smoking room with the result that smoking lounges in Gilchrist and Jennie Murphree halls were opened to students.

During the summer the committee provided for the repainting of Jennie Murphree and Reynolds parlors, and for refinishing the woodwork of Gilchrist parlor New drapes were also provided for Gilchrist parlor as well as for the atrium, parlors, and offices of Bryan hall. Five hundred mattresses were re-stuffed for beds in the residence halls.

One of the next objectives of the improvement group is the completion of the murals in Reynolds' recreation hall as well as renovating and refurnishing the hall.

A china service is being bought for each dormitory for use at the various teas and receptions throughout the year. A silver service was furnished the dormitories last year.

These projects are expensive

Lewis Attends Chemistry Meet

Pennsylvania State Dean Principal Speaker

At a sectional meeting of the American Chemical society held in Gainesville, October 19, which was attended by Dr. Leland J. Lewis, professor of chemistry at Florida State College, plans were discussed for having the next meeting in Tallahassee. The group usually holds five meetings during the school year.

The principal speaker at the meeting was Dr. Frank Whitmore, dean of science at Pennsylvania State College, who gave a talk on "Recent Developments With Sex Hormones." Stating that there are now thirty people at Pennsylvania State College doing research work on this subject. Dr. Whitmore said be had just received a telegram to the effect that one student had succeeded in greatly increasing the yield of synthesized male sex hormone "The male sex hormone is not extremely difficult to synthesize," he said, "but a 39% yield represents an enormous quantity. So far it has been impossible to prepare th female hormone synthetically." However, he added that the latter is very easily obtained in nature while the former is almost never obtained thet way

According to Dr. Lewis, the members of the state association were very much impressed by the speaker's forcefulness in presenting his material.

NSFA Forum To Discuss Peace

Harris Says College Will Not Affiliate Wholly With Movement

Peace, how to acquire it and students' opinions on the subject, will be the topic for discussion at the third open forum sponsored by the N. S. F. A. in 203 Administration building on Thursday night, October 31, at 7:30, according to Marjorie Harris, program chairman.

The discussion Thursday night will be divided into three phases: Clarissa Knight will present a background, tracing the peace policies of the world throughout the ages; Hazel Bowman will discuss keeping peace in the United States by the "let alone" policy; and Blanton Barrett, the first freshman to speak on these programs, will talk on peace by preparedness through armaments in the United States and its effect on this country. The usual open-forum will follow these three speeches with a general discussion of how peace can best be kept in the United States under the present international conditions.

In regard to the debating team, mentioned at the last N. S. F. A. meeting, books for parallel reading have been posted and are as follows: Alden, The Art of Debate; Foster, Debating; O'Neill, Debating; Phelps, Debating; and Sheffield, Debating.

"Most of our great statesmen were on their college debating teams. Their ability to use the king's English put them where they were. Why don t you try to develop into a good speaker if for no other reason than personal glorification?" This is the announcement made to tho entire student body by the N. S. F. A. debating movement.

Mathematician Leaves Campus

Carver Resumes Duties In U. of Michigan

Dr. H. C. Carver, professor of mathematical statistics, left Wednesday for the University of Michigan where he will resume his duties after a four weeks leave of absence spent in Tallahassee. Dr. Carver is regarded as one of the greatest minds in the field of applied mathematics and a leader in the development of this field.

Dr. Carver has published many articles on mathematical problems. In addition to this he is editor-in-chief of The Annals of Mathematics Statistics, a quarterly journal devoted to mathematical research, to which he contributes regularly.

Tuesday morning, Dr. Carver spoke to the honors students in mathematics. Tuesday afternoon, he spoke to the psychology department on the statistical procedure as it pertains to work in psychology.

During his stay in Tallahassee, Dr. Carver obtained material for the book that he is writing which will be published by him sometime next year.

Weekly Vesper Program To Have Variety Time

A variety program will be presented at the vesper service of the Young Women's Christian association in the Augusta Conradi theater Sunday evening at 6:00 o'clock. The program is under the supervision of Dorothy Bryan.

Th program will open with special music followed by a devotional led by Margaret Stout. A story will be told by Zuliame Russell and Florence Jones will play a violin solo. There will also be hymns and additional features.

Phi Mu Sponsors Coffee

The members and pledges of the Phi Mu sorority will give an after-dinner coffee Sunday night, followed by skits and an informal get-together of the pledges.

Second Annual Faculty Frolic Will Offer Fun

Main Feature of Program To Be Quintuplets In Musical Offering

STUDENTS TO TAKE PART IN CONTEST

Dean Opperman to Direct Selection Shrouded With Mystery

The second annual Faculty Frolic will take place in the college auditorium next Tuesday evening, October 29, at 8:15 o'clock. This is presented by the faculty for the benefit of the American Association of University Women Scholarship fund with Dr. Dorothy Rose Disher, assistant professor of psychology, in charge of the program.

The main features of the program will be the quintuplets, a faculty interpretation of registration, a famous personage contest, a family picture, an unknown number in rhythm, and a deep, dark secret.

The musical number of the quintuplets will provide tha most amazing combination of feminine voices ever heard in Tallahassee. The song birds will be Miss Edna Mae MacIntosh, Miss Katherine Warren, Miss Julia Gehan, Miss Margaret Gaillard, and Miss Helen Mary Fritsch.

Genesis Shows Registration

Genesis, the faculty interpretation of registration, is a companion piece to last year's honors examination. Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell is director of this number and her cast includes: Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, Dr. Beulah B. Briley, Mrs. Mary Buford, Miss Olga Larson, Dr. Venila L. Shores, Miss Sarah Herndon, Miss Katherine Rawles, Miss Helenmary Fritsch and others.

All students may participate in the famous personages contest provided they come equipped with pencils. A grand prize will be given the winner. This is under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Lynn who has a cast of much enduring faculty members who so contort themselves as to represent famous personages in history and literature. Tho question is whether they or the characters they represent are the most disguised.

Pictures American Life

The Grummidges is a family picture which aims to present a true picture of American life. Grandmother, grandfather, uncles, aunts, papas, mamas, and all the kids will be there. This is directed by Miss Sarah Herndon and includes the following names among its supporters: Miss Mary H. MacKean, Dr. Ezda M. Deviney, Miss Mary L. Richey, Dr. Herman Kurtz, Mr. O. F. Sellers, Mr. H. F. Becker, Dr. Elisabeth G. Andrews, Miss Elizabeth P. Autrey, Miss Grace I. Fox, Mr.

Dancing Allowed Off-Campus Girls

New Ruling Will Go Into Effect Immediately

Informal dancing in off-campus houses of not less than ten students has been approved and put into effect this week. This has been an issue of interest for off-campus students and householders since last year.

The matter was first brought up by Mrs G. T. Lloyd, the householder of Campuside, and it was the subject of discussion of the Off-Campus Committee, Social Committee, and College Council for some time. This request for dancing recently passed the Senate and the College Council and is now in effect. Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, Chairman of the Social Committee, was asked by Miss Olivia Dorman, dean of students, to appoint a student in each off-campus house in which dancing will be permitted to supervise the arrangements.

The dancing in off-campus houses is regulated by the College Government Association. The regulations in the official handbook permit dancing in sorority houses and one residence hall on Saturday from 2:30 to 6 30 p. m. and 7:30 to 11:00 p. m The same regulations will govern off-campus dancing.

Florida and Ida, Freshman Maids, Tell of Lowly Group

Two Women Who Have Worked at Florida State For Many Years Insist Present Newcomers Surpass All Others by Far

BY ELLA BROOKS

There are two people on campus who think that this year's crop of freshmen is the best of all. They are Florida and Ida, two maids in Reynolds and Jennie Murphree halls.

"I been here since November 6, 1914, an' I've worked in mos' every dorm'tory here, an' I knows a lot o' girls, but de freshmen girls dis year is de bes' of all," says Florida. "I 'members dere was jus' three halls, Bryan, Reynolds, and Eas' hall, when I come here. I was workin' with Mis' Jennie Spears in Eas' Hall when it burnt on de 5th Sunday of October in 1920. Since 1921 I been with Miss Mamie Andrews here in Reynolds, and I'se seen a lot of girls come an' go."

Ida, in Jennie Murphree, holds the second longest record for employment. "I been workin' here 'bout twenty years and I knows lots o' girls. 'Course, dey moves from here after a year, but I sees 'em and 'members 'em and hates to see 'em go. De girls all seem alike to mee and I loves 'em all alike, but de freshmen dis year is mighty sweet!"

Both Florida and Ida think all college girls are fine. They like to work for them. Ida says her motto, "Do by others as you wish to be done by," helps her a lot in getting to know the girls and being friends with them. "I mothers 'em all and tries to help 'em all I kin. I sorta think 'bout 'em as my chillun after a while. De new girls dis year is pow'erful nice. We get along jus' fine together."

Florida confesses that she feels more at home in Reynolds with all the girls than she does with her family. As long as she can make the girls happy she is more than willing to kep right on working for them.

Although she is pleased with all the freshmen, Florida wishes they didn't have to work so hard. "De school sho' does give 'em plenty o' work to do. Looks like dey studies all de time! Dey's always busy, an' dey keeps me busy, too. Dey's a nice bunch o' girls. I loves 'em all and loves to be around dem."

They take a great deal of pride in remembering the exart dey that East hall burned and the years in which the administration, science and history buildings, the library, Gilchrist, Broward, and Jennie Murphree halls and the dining room were built. The school has changed considerably since they first came, and they say the students have changed equally as much. The girls are still girls, according to Ida, and all of them are pretty much alike, but they have changed a lot in habits, dress ideas, and ways of doing things.

"Dey's lots nicer, though!" adds Florida. "I jus' loves 'em. Seems like dis year dey's de bes' of all!"

Members of the home demonstration staff who are eqpecting to attend are: Miss Ruby McDavid, district home demonstration agent; Miss Anna Mae Sikes, acting district home demonstration agent; Miss Virginia P. Moore, home improvement agent; Miss Isabelle S. Thursby, economist in food conservation, and Mrs. Eva R. Culley, acting extension nutritionist, all of Tallahassee, and Miss Lucy Belle Settle, Gainesville, district home demonstration agent.

Kathryn T. Abbey, professor of history, will attend the first annual meeting of the Southern Historical association this week-end at Birmingham. The association, organized a year ago at Atlanta, now has approximately 400 members. Dr. Abbey is a member of the executive council.

Dr. Nathaniel M. Salley, dean of the school of education, and Dr Olivia Dorman, dean of women, appear on the program of the central Florida district of the Florida Education association in session this week-end in Gainesville. At this meeting a forum is to be conducted on "The Needs of Modern Youth," with Dr Dorman presenting the point of view of college women. Dean Salley recently spoke at the meeting of the Peace River Education association at Sebring and at the Suwannee County Teachers association in Live Oak

AAUW Hears Shores Speech

Discusses Sanctions And Attitude of America Towards Them

Dr. Venila L. Shores, associate professor of history, in an address on the Italo-Ethiopian problem to members of the American Association of University Women last Monday night summarized the Italo-Ethiopian events during the past summer; stated briefly the main facts in the geographical situations involved; and traced the colonial ambitions of England and Italy, noting especially their conflicts of colonial interests in Africa.

"Since December 1934," said Doctor Shores, "Ethiopia has appealed several times to the League of Nations, of which she is a member, for adjustment of her differences with Italy. Not until the very eve of the Italian invasion of Ethiopia were any effective steps taken by the league.

"However," she continued, "during the week of October 11 the league declared Italy an aggressor and implied immediate use of sanctions against her." The following sanctions were approved by the league: An embargo was placed on the shipment on arms to Italy, and the embargo laid previously on Ethiopia was raised; all loans and credits were forbidden to Italy, a boycott was placed on all Italian grown or manufactured goods; key products, mainly minerals and transport animals, were forbidden to be sold to Italy; and members of the league pledged to assist those members of the league who might carry out sanctions with serious economic injury to themselves.

The effectiveness of these sanctions depend, Doctor Shores believes, largely upon the amount of essential commodities Italy can secure indirectly from her neighbors, Germany, Austria, and Hungary, and upon the amount of goods she can sell through these neighbors.

The United States, though not a member of the league, has already declared an arms-embargo against both belligerents. There are acts on the statute books of the league which make it possible for the United States to cooperate with most of the other sanctions, if President Roosevelt deems it wise.

"Lack of water for drinking and other purposes and the geographical characteristics of Ethiopia," said Doctor Shores, "will serve as natural defenses in time of war."

Ethiopia is about eight times the size of Florida and has relatively the same density of population. Most of Ethiopia is 8000 feet above sea level, and many of her mountain peaks are 15000 feet above sea level. Mineral deposits are the chief natural resources the country possesses. Yet her soil is so rich that two or three crops are produced each year with the crude Ethiopian farming implements.

Italy is in great need of both raw materials and homes for overcrowded citizens. She hopes to move at least 3,000,000 Italians into the colonies which she may carve out of Ethiopian territory.

Doctor Shores recalled the fact that the interests of European nations in Ethiopia dated from the year 1860. These European interests have steadily increased since then and have been the subject for numerous treety agreements.

The present situation in Ethiopia is the result of a clash between native troops accompanying an Anglo-Ethiopian commission near the oasis of Valval. Italy claims this oasis is within her territory, and Ethiopia says it is in Ethiopian territory.

Sensitivity in Hearing Determined by New Test

Tests for the recording of the sensitivity for hearing were sent by the Federal government to the Florida State College for Women this week according to Dr. P. F. Finner, head of the department of psychology. He considers it the best test for this field that has been made.

The tests are being arranged now and will be given to students in the psychology department in the near future. They may be extended to other students also but no definite plans have been made as yet concerning this.

Just Bulling Around

Ideal College Girl Must Have Versatility, Good Sportsmanship, Adaptability, And Physical Attractiveness

The bull session had begun. Ten girls, who knew they had work to do, sat idly talking. Some sat on the bed, others on the floor with their legs crossed Hindu-fashion, still others balanced perilously in chairs with only two legs on the floor. The chatter increased.

Finally one girl asked, "Well, what is your conception of the ideal college girl?"

"I think," said another girl, and then she paused, "Why, that's hard to say! However, I do think she should be attractive, and should have a certain amount of leadership and personality."

"Personality," said the sad-faced girl of the group, "I think a sense of humor comes before anything else. It's awfully hard for me to see the funny side of things, and I know that's the one thing I would like to have."

"My ideal," said a fourth girl, "is one that can play without worrying and yet keep up at least a "C" average. Honestly, I think it would be marvelous to feel free when week-ends roll 'round. I never do."

"The one thing in my opinion to qualify as an ideal college girl is to be a good mixer. With that, of course, goes personality, tact, kindness, and unselfishness. Certainly, any ideal girl would be expected to keep her studies at least up to average and above in most cases. I've always admired a girl like that," stated another girl.

"Well, I know there's an old saying "beautiful but dumb," none the less I think that the ideal college girl can be summed up in two things, beauty and brains. Under beauty I don't mean just a face and figure, but also beauty of mind, spirit, and manners, and a lot of other things you can make beautiful if you only try. Under brains comes not only the ability to make good grades, but the intelligence to meet and mix well with people, to solve your own problem with little help, to see your own faults and not to meddle in other persons' affairs. Don't you think that just about covers it?" said the girl in the purple pajamas to the girl in the striped green bathrobe.

"Yes. But you left out sincerity. To me, that is the one trait she should have above all others."

"I disagree," said another. "Tact, and consideration of others should always come first."

"To change the subject slightly, the trait I admire most is good sportsmanship. Naturally, an ideal girl would have it," declared the girl, who had instigated the controversy.

"I agree," put in a girl, who had previously been silent, "but I can also add adaptability to most any situation that might arise."

"Right," affirmed another girl.

"That seems to be more or less unanimous, then" said another

"You may think I'm a bit crazy, but, anyway, I've always admired cynicism and the ability to get away with it without hurting other people's feelings," said the girl who was busily rolling her hair up.

"That would be remarkable. However, I don't know whether I'd like it or not But now, what about the appearance of an ideal girl?" queried the same argument-starter.

"Oh, that's easy. She should be and look healthy, and be full of life and pep,' claimed a lover of strenuous sports.

"What about her clothes?" interposed another

"Well, she should dress appropriately at all times, never dress extravagantly, and never allow her slip to be an added ruffle to her dress, her stocking to wrinkle around her ankles, or her hems to droop here and there. And there's one thing that I pocitively hate, and that's for girls to come to classes sloppily dressed just because there are no boys to shine in front of."

"That's just about all I guess," commented another.

"Just one more thing. I think a girl should lend individuality to clothes instead of wearing clothes so individual that they are eccentric."

"You know, some girls have outstanding traits that most people don't have and can't acqu're. Versatility is one of these. A few girls, too few in fact, can act, dance, play a musical instrument, excel in several sports, take pa in organizations and clubs, keep up their school work, and still be charming persons. That is my ideal girl, and versatility is what characterizes her" said the girl with the thoughtful air.

Murmurs of approval came from all sides.

"From what I've gathered, we all agree that versatility, adaptability, good sportsmanship, and attractiveness about covers everything and that these attributes come first in the ideals of most of us. By the bye, I have a French test to-morrow, finished the one who had asked the first question

Thus ended the bull session.

Student Never Has Spare Time

The student who says that she never has a spare minute probably thinks she is entirely truthful. She finds her time so full of things she must do and wants to do that she never quite gets around to them all. Her case may be called more or less typical, for every student feels to some degree that she cannot fit her time to the demands on her.

What would be nearer the truth in each case is that schedules and activities do not arrange themselves of their own accord, for few students make a serious effort to work out study, activity, and recreational hours into an organized plan. For the most part, the college student lets things fall as they may. She prepares the assignments for the next day's classes, and lets it go at that. She does not think about a term paper until the week before the paper is due. She reads parallel at the last moment possible. She leaves college a masterly procrastinator.

That this should be the case is far at variance with the college's purpose of teaching students to use their minds Instead of training the mind by adjusting it to a systematized study scheme, the student rather is molding it into no pattern at all. An unorganized and leisurely day can only mean hours wasted and hurried work later on. A thoughtfully arranged program will not only insure that her work be thorough and unhurried, but will give her the spare moments whose lack she had deplored.

Volunteer Worker Will Speak in Convocation

Miss Mary Robert Stewart, field representative of the Student Volunteer movement, will be on the campus from October 28 to October 31, during which time she will speak to several student groups on the campus.

Miss Stewart will speak in convocation, and also to The Religious Workers council, The Young Women's Christian association cabinet, and to the various church groups.

Miss Stewart will also grant personal conferences to those who desire to talk with her.

Kathryn Beyer Paid Tribute

Resolutions Adopted By Seniors Honor Her Fine Character

A set of resolutions paying tribute to the "fine character" of their class mate, Kathryn Thomas Beyer, who died in the college infirmary last Friday, has been adopted by the senior class of Florida State College for Women.

These resolutions as presented by Caroline Oliver, class president, read as follows:

"Upon the forward advancement of our student life in the Florida State College for Women, there has fallen the shadow of death in the passing of our beloved comrade and classmate, Kathryn Beyer Although the seriousness of her illness was made known to us some days ago and we know that every possible aid was administered to her, we still feel unprepared to give up one whose presence has meant so much to us in our life on the campus.

As a student in the specific sense, she made an enviable record, having achieved success in mastering her course, and having been recognized with honor in both academic and social lines She was honored with membership in several clubs that represent much of the fine work of the college, in the fraternal relations, the physical education department, and in purely academic studies. In view of these considerations be it

Resolved: That we hold in sacred memory her splendid character, her loyalty to duty, and her unselfish devotion to her obligations as a student.

Resolved: That we hold in sacred memory her beautiful example of loyalty to classmates, to teachers, and to the entire college.

Resolved: That we extend our sympathies to her bereaved family and friends.

Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be furnished her family, the Florida Flambeau, and the minutes of the senior class."

Kathryn held a high score in scholarship on the campus. Every semester during her three years on this campus she has been on the honor roll, and had just received a bid to Kappa Delta Pi, national honorary educational society. She was on the volley ball, swimming, soccer and baseball teams and had taken part in many of the college dramatic presentations. She also had held the positions of secretary-treasurer in the life saving corps and vice-president of the physical education association.

It was stated by college authorities that this is only the second time in the 30 years of the college's history that a student has died on the campus. Miss Perle Williams, of McMinneville, Tennessee, died here October 17, 1930, as the result of injuries received in an automobile accident.

The unknown in rhythm is being presented by Miss Mary Settle and Miss Nellie B. Dickinson. This is the first appearance of Miss Dickinson in any frolics: but Miss Settle's fans will remember her performance in the Fashion Show of last year.

The deep dark secret offered by the department of music under the direction of Dean Ella Scoble Opperman is still as much a secret to the committee as to anyone in the audience. It has been whispered though that the entire department will be there and that it will be a gala occasion.

Clacking, Popping, Whacking Gum Chewers Are Florida State's Pests

When the Universe was created, the Almighty added to the great quantity of his blessings a pest for everyone To the housewife he gave the ant and the cockroach; to the elephant he gave the mouse: to the general public he gave the saxophone player; and to Florida State he gave the gum-chewer.

Just as there are good and bad grades of spinach, in itself a despicable weed, so are there good and bad gum-chewers; namely, the professional, the apprentice, and the amateur.

The amateur gum-chewer is the less vindictive of the three types. She chews, not for enjoyment, but because the gum costs her nothing, her room-mate being an ardent whacker Her's is not the loud attention-calling chew of a professional, nor is it the clamorprovoking one of the apprentic It is quietly contemplative, sly deceptive, the expected chew of t chiseler.

The apprentice masticates he gum for an entirely differe reason. She is an idealistic an who longs for distinction in an field. When she was eight, an he was fifteen, he could alw whack his gum louder than an of the other boys Thus, she determines to emulate her dream hero. She is the one who le forth a guilty whack during a especially important lecture thereby awakening the rest o the class and gaining their und ing hatred. But she doesn't ca as she continues to perfect h chewing ability.

There is nothing to be said f the professional. She is the reason other girls go to the librar to study. She is the noises whacker on the hall, and she i proud of it. If there were a chewing-gum champion of th world, she would be it. She i the person who should have li insurance immediately, for he room-mate cannot stand the vilent, thudding whacks muc longer.

Kappa Delta Pi Holds Meeting in Library Of Demonstration School

The first meeting of Kappa Delta Pi, educational honorary, was held recently in the library of the Demonstration school.

After the business session, conducted by Mrs Dora Skipper, president, talks were given by members who had taken special work during the summer. Miss Margaret McCurdie, critic teacher and instructor in education, gave the highlights of her summer's work at Columbia university.

Mr. Oval S Harrison, critic teacher, briefly summarized his work in vocational guidance in the Demonstration school, reading samples of the students' job analysis.

Mr. M D. Stone, principal of Leon high school, gave a brief sketch of work at Columbia this summer, stressing the educational value of the courses.

Student members of Kappa Delta Pi include Nancy Wilkinson, Murae Reddick, Rebecca Keith, Virginia Cromartie, Anna Groover, Alice Porter, and Ruth Persons.

Faculty and town members include Margaret McCurdie, Mrs. Dora Skipper, Dean Nathaniel M. Salley, Miss K Nita Pyburn, Miss Florence Tryon Miss Leonora Smith Mrs. Marion Hay, Mr. O. S. Two Teams Tie In Swim Meet

Another Meet Considered To Determine Final Championship

Spirogira and Pi Beta Phi swimming teams tied for first honors with scores of twenty-nine points in the finals of the intramural meet held at Play Nite last week. Another meet to decide the campus champion may be held, Miss Betty Washburn has announced.

Gilchrist and Reynolds were runners-up in the meet.

Both of the winning teams were accorded three first places, while Reynolds was winner of one first place. Martha Makemson, representing Spirogira, was high point winner, having won two first places and one second.

The results of the 25-yard free style dash follow: Martha Makemson, Spirogira, first place in thirteen and two-fifth seconds; Florence Ward, Reynolds, second in fourteen and two-tenths seconds; Ellen Wiggen, Pi Beta Phi, third place, and Betty Clark, Pi Beta Phi, fourth place.

Shirley Stevens, Reynolds, won first place in the side stroke for form, while Jo Binion and Peggy McMichael, Spirogira, tied for second place.

Martha Makemson, Spirogira, won first place in the 25-yard back crawl, in sixteen and five-tenths seconds; Marion Weeks, Gilchrist, was second, making it in eitheen seconds, and Betty Vann, Pi Beta Phi, was third, in nineteen and four-fifths seconds.

Peggy McMichael, Spirogira, was accorded first honors in the elementary backstroke for form, while June Maule and Betty Wynn, Pi Beta Phi, and Jo Binion and Janice Borton, Spirogira, were given the same number of points for their display.

Representing the Pi Phi's, Bonnie Ray in nineteen and one-fifth seconds won first place in the English racing for twenty-five yards Betty Evans, Gilchrist, was second, swimming it in twenty and five-tenths seconds and Betty Wynn, Pi Phi, was third, with a time of twenty and four-fifths seconds.

For her diving exhibition, June Maule, Pi Beta Phi, won first place. Each contestant was required to do a front back, jack knife and half twist and were allowed two optional dives. Other winners were Martha Makemson, Spirogira second; Florence Devine third, Gilchrist, and Ellen Wiggen, Pi Beta Phi, fourth.

The Pi Beta Phi relay team won first place in this event; Gilchrist was second; Reyonlds third and Spirogira fonrth.

Members of the Pi Phi team were Betty Clark, Ellen Wiggen, Betty Vann, Bonnie Ray, Betty Wynn, Betty Blalock, and June Maule On the Spirogira team were Marthe Makemson, J oBinion Janice Borton, Peggy McMichael, and Mary Miller. Composing the Reynolds team were Florence Ward, Agnes Hill Stiggins, Shirley Stevens, Maria Taylor and Lois Hughes. The Gilchrist team included Marion Weeks, Betty Evans, Florence Devine, Helen Kierce and Polly Eveleth.

Dorothy Lancaster was intramural manager. Individual managers are June Maule, Pi Beta Phi; Martha Makemson, Spirogira; Dimpies Turner, Reynolds, and Marian Lessey, Gilchrist.

Judges for the event were Miss Mary Settle and Miss Elizabeth Autrey, members of the physical education department, and Miss Claire Redfield. Miss Nellie Dickson, also of this department, was head officir and was assisted by several students.

Spanish Inquisition Exemplified in Diabolical Device Employed by Modern History Instructor

Paralleling the Spanish Inquisition in its exquisite degree of hopelessness, but surpassing it with modern psychology's contribution of mental cruelty, is the system devised by a history professor on campus for choosing a student lecturer.

The professor, a woman—no mere man could contrive such a scheme—assigns one topic to two students until each person in the class has a partner as far as the topics are concerned. The unsuspecting victims are given ample time to prepare the report, which is to be delivered orally with all the quality of a Webster, the ardor of a Henry, and the originality of a Lee.

Then—the sword of Damocles, suspended by the proverbial hair, begins to tremble, it falls; the day of doom has arrived; one of the tortured two, both of whom are breathless with suspense, must give the report. Who will it be? Therein lies the Inquisition.

Reluctantly tha two huddle outside the office of their tormenter, much as a condemned man awaits his executioner. Finally she trips in with a cheery, "Good morning," which gets little response from her strained lambs.

"Ready?" she questions, tearing a piece of paper into two small pieces, taking a portion off one so that it will be shorter than the other. "The short one gives the report!"

The two students regard one another with a wary eye. It is not difficult to ascertain what each is hoping

"Draw!" The voice of the professor rings with the finality of a Peter refusing en iniquitous soul entrance into Paradise.

With a faltering hand the braver of the two steps reluctantly forward.

She draws.

She turns with a dazed expression on her pale face, staring at her paper incredulously.

She has drawn the longer straw.

Former Flambeau Editor Fills College Position

Miss Rachael Pitchford, a graduate of Florida State College for Women with the class of 1929 has recently been selected to fill the position of assistant publicity chairman at the college.

For the last four years Miss Pitchford has been of the staff of the Daytona Beach News Journal

During her senior year at F. S C. W. Miss Pitchford was editor of the Flambeau and it was during this time that the Flambean changed from a six to an eight column paper.

Rat Disturbs Dining Hall Peacefulness

Fear Transforms Diners As Rodents Appear During Meal

The soft hum of conversation prevailing in the downstairs dining-room Saturday evening gave indication, as did several rows of empty tables, that many students were away for the week-end. Facial expressions of the diners showed their feeling of pleasure at being able to consume the evening meal in such a restful atmosphere. The sounds of knives and forks scraping against plates were reduced to a soft tinkle, noises issuing from the kitchen predominating over those of the dining room.

Suddenly an electric shock seemed to run through the entire room—in one corner a small, furry body with a whisking tail came into view atop a radiator pipe. The word "rat" formed simultaneously on dozens of pairs of lips. Eyes all turned in one direction.

The quiet of the room was broken as dozens of pairs of fect came quickly off the floor. A clamor arose from each table—squeals of "ohs" and "ahs" blended. "Do you think he will come over this way?" "Look how big he is." "Have you heard about the girl that was bitten by a rat once?"—Many such statements were contributed at each table.

Then the rat changed the tempo of excitement With a running leap he jumped from the radiator pipe to the higher pipes near the ceiling which extend the full length of the room. Like the man on the flying trapeze he scuddled along the top of the pipes as dozens of pairs of eyes followed his every movement, and faces froze into a fixed stare Then quite suddenly the rat disappeared.

But the lovely quiet of the dining room was broken. No longer did the restful atmosphere prevail. Faces still wore a wary expression and feet remained perched on the highest rung of dining room chairs. However with the coming of dessert -butter-scotch pie with pecans and meringue, the excitement caused by the scuttling rodent gradually subsided.

Persons, McGuire Press Delegates

Attend Joint Convention Held in Chicago

The joint convention of the Associated Collegiate Press with the National College Press association, which was held in Chicago recently was attended by approximately 375 delegates representing 37 states of the union, an increase of more than a hundred over last year's registration at a meeting of this group. Delegates from Florida State were Ruth Persons, editor of the Flambeau and Lillie McGuire, assistant business manager of the Flambeau.

At a joint business session of NCPA and ACP, members voted to consolidate into one association, since they decided that the two organizations made for a duplication of effort and many duplications in membership. The principal advantages of this joint association as outlined by Mr. Victor Portmann, professor at the University of Kentucky and newly-elected president of the association, will be a larger, more compact membership with a common interest and aim, with an increased prestige, and decreased cost of operation.

In addition to the regular program centering around the theme "Building the College Newspaper," one feature of the convention was a display of college newspapers receiving All-American and First Class honor rating when publications were judged last spring. The Flambeau was among the papers shown.

Red Cross Will Show Picturers

Life Saving Corps Hears Howard; Water Sports Season Begins

Nelson Howard, Red Cross disaster worker from Washington, D. C., spoke at the meeting of the Life Saving corps Thursday morning. Mr. Howard has just completed his work in the Florida keys where he was called after the hurricane and is now assisting about the state in Red Cross roll calls.

Mr. Howard explained his work and announced that he would return to the college on November 4 to present motion pictures of swimming and diving and also relief work in Florida. During the summer he has charge of recreational swimming in an institute for the Red Cross at Brevard, N. C.

The corps members will begin training in canoe racing and other maneuvers Saturday afternoon at Camp Flastacowo, it was announced. In the near future classes in canoeing will be sponsored by the corps, with Martha Makemson in charge. These will be open to beginners or those who wish to perfect their style and will be held on Saturday afternoons from 1:30 to 3:30 o'clock at the camp.

Class teams and Odd and Even racing teams will be formed, these to take part in the second annual water sports day early in December sponsored by the "F" club and corps. In addition to the races there will be demonstrations on the handling of canoes, other exhibitions, and acquatic events.

From proceeds obtained from selling bathing caps in the college book store, suits for the Corp's swimming club will be bought. Permission, it was announced, has been obtained from J. G. Kellum, business manager, to sell the caps. Polly Flint is in charge of the club.

Six Man Football Newly Introduced

Florida, Leon Hi Schools Plan Initial Clash

Florida high school has introduced something new in Florida football—a six-man football team.

This was learned today from Dr. R. B. Parsons, the school superintendent His idea for six-man football came from an article in the October, 1935, issue of The School Executive, and he decided to give it a try. After two weeks of try-outs he says "the boys are crazy about it" and think "it't a wonderful game."

Already Florida high is planning such a six man game with Leon high, Dr. Parsons having given a rule book to the Florida high coach, Oval S. Harrison, and one to M. L. Stone, supervising principal of Leon High school.

"In all the essential qualities this game is the same as 11-man football," Dr. Parsons declared, "and the smaller sized team has the advantage of being better adapted to intramural and junior high use. There is less expense involved with the smaller team, less extensive equipment needed for each player and reduced injury hazards."

There are no tackles or guards in six-man footbal and thus each man gets greater variety and number of plays. There are three men on the line—a center and two ends and three in the backfield. The field, for six-man football, is 40x80 yards instead of 50x100 yards as in regular football.

At Florida high since there are less than 100 boys from the seventh to the eighth grades a six-man team affords more selection.

It was also pointed out that fewer transportation facilities will be required for a smaller team, costs for food and lodging lessened, and capital cutlay and maintenance of the smaller field will be decreased.

According to the article in The School Executive The Nebraska high school athletic association found that less than 40 per cent of the high schools in the association play football and raises the question, "Does football as played with 11 men on a team meet the needs of all the high schools?" The author, Stephen E. Epler of the senior high school at Beatrice, Nebraska, says six-man football is only one year old, that the first game was played on the Hebron College football field at Hebron, Nebraska the night of September 26, 1934. Scottsbluff Junior college played the first college game, it says. Its success the first year indicates a bright future for it, according to the author.

Dieters-Campus Martyrs

College Has Three Schools of Thought: Gainers, Status Quo Girls, and Reducers; Show Ways of Weight Control

Dietetically speaking, the campus may be divided into three sets: the ganiers, the stay-as-sweet-as-you-are girls, and the reducers. The reducers are the ones who upset the dining-hall, the dormitory, and the sorority house in their prodigious race to leave a few pounds behind.

Of course, there's the common garden variety we all know, the kind who doesn't take bread, who passes up potatoes, and who leaves before the dessert comes. But have you met the one who, with the soul of a true ascetic, suddenly decides that for a week she will eat nothing except bananas and milk? This kind usually holds out for a couple of days.

Not quite so violent, but still heroic, is the "dot and dash" reducer—the "every other day a liquid day" person. On the "dash" day she eats anything she wishes. But on the "dot" day nothing passes her lips that could not pass them through a straw. The "dot and dasher" may last about a week.

Then there is that program of self-control, the non-eater. She is worthy of our highest respect. We have seen such specimens go for four days without a morsel of food.

Of course, all reducing isn't simply dieting. There are some comfortable souls who cannot resist the melodious ringing of the dining-room bell. These are the ones who quiet their consciences by exercise. They are seen of an evening rolling their well-padded frames on the floor, or stretched prone on their backs rhythmically raising and lowering their legs with stifled grunts. Or you might find them, supported on feet and shoulders, bouncing the intermediate rgions on the floor. This is quite strenuous.

One girl says that when she wants to reduce she just goes to gym. Another splashes through every plunge period. Others walk to town. One pioneer gets out on the curb and plays football with the little neighbor boys. She literally kicks the pounds off.

But the really original reducer, the one who uses her gray matter, is the girl who gets in the shower, turns on the hot water full force, and sweats off pounds of flesh in the clouds of steam that make it a home-owned Turkish bath. Such is the spirit our figures are made of!

Lightflash is Signal for Race To Soapy Lather and Clopping 'Mules'

Lights Are Signal For Hurried, Sleepy But Yet Enlightening Conferences With Roommate As Bedtime Nears

Bedtime in a college dormitory is first of all a race for the wash places, secondly, a fashion show for boudoir costumes, and altogether a period of noise-making.

Tired sleepy girls come in from the library dragging armloads of books, which they drop heavily on chair, table, or bed. Coat or sweater joins the pile, and dress and underclothes follow. Then, getting into whatever she calls her night clothes, with soap, towel, wash rag, and toothbrush she joins the noisy crowd in the bathroom. At first lightflash the dignified senior calmly lays away her day's work and prepares to retire. But once she is on the green linoleum, toothbrush in hand, she becomes one of the noisy throng.

First lightflash at ten-fifteen is the signal for all the showers and all the faucets over bathtubs, all the spigots over basins and all the drinking fountains to start running. Doors start slamming. "mules" go slapping down the halls, heads poked out of doors call to other heads poked out of other doors, and giggling girls race each other to the bathrooms. Even the proctor is not above such exhibitions of joyousness as she sails down the hall to her bath, kimono flapping and tresses streaming.

This time of the day presents a most colorful fashion show in boudoir costumes. Here is gorgeous array of sleeping garments in every style and color, from the dress-up pajamas with daintily frilled organdie collars to beach pajamas cut low in the back to allow for a good sun tan. There are sailor suits, "overall" suits, and those popular ones with "handkerchief tie" waists and long floppy trousers.

Many girls prefer the old fashioned night-gown, some even going in for pink-and-blue-striped outing ones with high necks, long sleeves, and skirts to tha floor. One girl wears a night cap. She confessed it mischievously and in a half whisper, quickly adding that she doesn't put it on until lights are out at night, and takes it off before her roommate wakes up in the morning.

There are all sorts of kimonos. The beautifully hand painted ones of peach colored silk, the warm plaid wool-lined bathrobe for the girl who goes in strong for comfort, and the short mannish, rubberized bathrobe, all have a place in this pageant.

Few parties are broken up by first light flash, unless a majority of the guests live off campus. So the party usually roars on till second flash, when suddenly there begins a mad scramble for all guests to swallow their cracker crumbs, finish the last word of their favorite yarn, collect their belongings and make a hasty exit. Many "feasts," "bull sessions," and study groups are broken up in this fashion.

But even these late comers grab for their soap, towel, and toothbrushes, and try to make the bathroom before the last flash. Maybe this is the toothbrush brigade. Every girl in the dormitory semes to have a toothbrush and the incurable good health habit of cleaning her teeth each night before retiring.

By the time third flash winks its one solemn warning throughout the dormitories, quiet has begun to reign. The last smothered noises are hushing, proctors pace the halls in soft slippers, quietly locking dors, switching off lights, whispering "shhhh" by doors that continue to emit low sounds, or more sternly, "quiet please, girls," or "lights out please, girls."

But on the other side of these closed doors some girls nod sleepily behind light cut signs, till they wake with a guilty start, make several other attempts to concentrate on the subject at hand, and finally creep sheepishly to bed Others settle down for a long confidential talk with the roommate, as they nestle together in the same bed and nibble candy and crackers in the dark. There are so many things to be talked about: homefolks, good old high school days, "sweeties," and lesser boy friends, and the thousand and one other confidences that girls can find to talk about in the long, dark hours of the night.

Sorority Homes Are Renovated

Several renovations of sorority houses were made during this past summer.

The lower part of Pi Beta Phi house has been re-shingled and painted a dark brown, and the upper part of the house has been painted a light tan. The foundation of tha house was jacked up, and various pieces of new furniture were added.

In the Chi Omega house, three new bedrooms, a new sleeping porch, and a new bathroom were added this summer. Downstairs there is a new smoking-room decorated in black and red. New plumbing and a new heating system were installed also. New closets and storage places were put in, and the living rooms are being redecorated in cardinal and straw, the sorority colors.

At the Alpha Chi Omega house a green studio couch, new white drapes, and green rugs for the study, rugs for the living room, and new curtains for the living room have been purchased.

The lawn of the Sigma Kappa house has been leveled off and Bermuda grass planted.

Salley, Dorman To Attend Meet

Education Dean Speaks At Association

Dr. Nathaniel Moss Salley, dean of the school of education, and Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of women, of Florida State College for Women, will appear on the program of the central Florida district of the Florida Education association Friday in Gainesville.

A forum will be conducted on the subject "The Needs of Modern Youth" and Dr. Dorman is to present the point of view of college women. Counties in the district include Alachua, Dixie, Gilchrist, Levy, Marion, Putnam, Bradford, Columbia, and Union.

Dean Salley returned Saturday from a trip to Live Oak and Sebring where he took part in educational meetings He was one of four Tallahasseeans appearing on Friday's program of the Peace River Education association at Sebring This association is made up of teachers in district thirteen of the Florida Education association and includes Desoto, Hardee and Highlands counties Dean Salley spoke on "The Unity of Popular Education from the Nursery School Through the Institutions of Higher Learning" and again on "The Larger Responsibilities to the Community."

Others from Tallahassee on the program were W. S. Cawthon, state superintendent of public instruction; James S Rickards, secretary of the Florida Education association; and R. M Evans, elementary state schools supervisor.

Dean Salley and other school officials were luncheon guests Friday of Colonel F M. K. Bailey, superintendent of schools in Highlands county.

On Saturday Dean Salley and Secretary Rickards spoke on the program of the Suwanee County Teachers association at Live Oak, the dean's subject being "Importance of the Florida Education association to the College and Public Schools and the Need of Giving It Proper Support."

Press Delegates Don't "Stand" On Anything

Approximately 375 young people, student editors and business managers of publications, of 37 states, got together last week and they didn't even take a stand on how to end war or how to combat the "red revolution!" In fact, they didn't "stand on" anything or anybody except their own individual newspapers. And in this field they listened to people of experience, who gave them many different opinions and ideas of what the college newspaper should do and be. They also listened to criticisms of their papers and had the opportunity to talk to other student editors and business managers.

The lack of any definite "stands" does not necessarily mean that these students are not interested in world problems of today, but it does suggest that they are beginning to recognize the futility of accomplishing anything by passing verbose resolutions or going on record as favoring "thisa and thata" as so many conventioners are prone to do.

One thing definitely achieved by the delegates to the joint convention of the Associated Collegiate Press and the National College Press Association was the combination of these two groups. Heretofore we have had two national organizations with much duplication of aim, a large overlapping of membership, and much overhead expense. Now it is hoped that there will be one large compact group which can better serve the needs of student leaders of publications in our American colleges today.

"What Can A Professor Profess?"

We students have of late proffered much criticism about what our professors "dish out" to us each day, but when we boil the problem down to the fundamental issue of what a professor can really profess, we find it quite involved. According to the Washington State Evergreen, there are three possible answers. "He may refrain from saying anything that he believes, in which case he is worthless. He may honestly and frankly state his conclusions on the problems he has studied, and win the disapproval of the pseudo-patriots. Thirdly, he may state only part of his conclusions (those which will offend none of the controlling interests in society), which is misrepresentation and dishonesty."

If this is true, aren't the professors in a rather precarious position? The Evergreen suggests that students should be aware of this and should determine which of the three possible positions each instructor is taking and evaluate his teachings accordingly.

Wanted: Caliber: Are Our Lives Directionless?

"It has always been our tendency to worship bigness," said Bruce Catton recently. Mr. Catton then proceeded to point out the fallacy in this idea with Concord, whose 300th birthday marked a milestone in as important a history as a town ever had, as example.

Concord, he said, came to its fame at the very time when America was at its busiest in the great task of expansion and physical development. There lived Thoreau, Hawthorne, and Emerson who once made the little country town the intellectual capital of the United States.

"Concord is worth remembering because it is a living proof that neither commerce nor industry nor finance make a city great— but the moral and intellectual caliber of its people" continued Catton, reminding any who long for "bigness" that that expression is often far from synonymous with "greatness."

Here at Florida State College, whose size and list of honors gained are impressive, the many chapters of the colorful history back of the school were added, not by accident, but by a liberal sprinkling of the caliber cited by Catton, among its faculty and student body.

Students of today are adding in their turn to the history of F. S. C. "Know thyself," Socrates advised the Athenian youth as he might well advise us, who are the "moral and intellectual" fiber of the college.

The collegiate desire to know everybody on campus can often produce the pathetic figure of the girl who knows everybody but herself. Those of us who do not take time for self-acquaintance and self-realization as a fundamental requisite to the possession of that history-making caliber, are apt to discover later that our education as well as our life, is directionless.

We Like Reform— Practiced on Our Neighbors

The urge to reform the other fellow is somehow always stronger than the urge to reform oneself.

Not too many years ago in this very country a group of righteous Americans who objected to slavery on a moral basis went to war to force the prohibition of it on a people who practiced it. One, we recall, became a fanatic on the question—John Brown. This zealous group did not have slaves themselves and did not believe it was morally right for anyone else to have them. Therefore, they saw to it that slavery was made prohibitive. There are later parallels.

Now that the Volstead act is a thing of the dark past we all pretty much accept the theory that the moralists or so-called fundamentalists of the United States were the ones who sneaked prohibition through. They did not drink themselves: they did not believe it was right that others should drink; and so they made it illegal.

One of the most popular reform movements of today is that of sterilization. We must sterilize the insane; sterilize the feebleminded; sterilize the criminal; in fact sterilize the unfortunate members of the lower economic strata of life who will be unable to furnish the proper cultural environment for their off-spring. For the ratio between the high birth-rate of the lower strata and the decreasing rate among the upper strata, which practices birth control, just does not make sense.

The crusade for sterilization is led by the intelligentsia, especially the scientific-minded group of our society. Let us look at some statistics concerning this people. Statistics quoted by Andre Siegfried in America Comes of Age show that 60 per cent of women university graduates do not marry. Of those who do marry 36 per cent never have a child. On this basis 1,000 Harvard graduates would have 50 descendants in two centuries, while a Roumanian in Boston would have 100,000 over the same period of time. Yet who ever heard of a campaign on a college campus or elsewhere urging "bigger and better" families for university graduates? Are we looking to ourselves at all, when we consider the question of over-population among the lower classes? Or perhaps it is easier to urge a reform which will keep other people from having children, than to see the positive side of the question too.

Someone has said that the strongest impulse of the human race is to sit down. Might we not amend this to say that the strongest urge of the human race is to make somebody else sit down?

MOSCOW MOODS
By Maurice Hindus
Asia, November, 1935.

As the title implies, this article contains the purely personal reactions of Maurice Hindus, Russian-born author of Humanity Uprooted and Red Bread, who is seeing Moscow with new eyes.

Interesting descriptive phrases reveal Moscow is drab in physical appearance except for its skies which are the most luminous and liveliest the writer has ever seen. From his experiences, however, we gather the most astonishing thing about Moscow is its people—almost naively informal, singing, talking, talking, singing, asking you a thousand and one intimate questions, confessing as many intimate things to you about their lives.

He contrasts the reception given a white funeral, the mark of the capitalistic family, with that of a red funeral, the mark of the Soviet union; then with the contrast between a red flag and a Christian cross he sees capping two buildings nearby, he leaves us abruptly with the symbolical thought:

"Yet there they were—the red flag and the Christian cross as if in a joint salute to the world about them."

ADJUSTING DEMOCRACY — CONSTITUTIONALLY AND OTHERWISE
By Frank P. Graham
American Scholar, Autumn, 1935.

President Graham of the University of North Carolina thinks we are swinging neither to the extreme right nor to the extreme left in adjusting ourselves to changing conditions, but that we are turning to the method given us by our forefathers—amending the constitution.

Besides a dictatorship's being inconsistent with the nature of American people, the farmers and industrial workers are strong enough to prevent a fascistic or political dictatorship, he says, while the urban middle class and the individualistic farmers could keep the proletariat from attempting a communistic dictatorship.

We could solve some of our social problems with federal grants-in-aid, Graham says, but we would not be getting at the core of the national problems, which have taken the place of many former local and state questions since the rise of industry.

This is only the third historic occasion for amending the constitution, says Graham, whereas Thomas Jefferson said we might expect a revolution of the people every 20 years for the purpose of changing the form of governmnt.

The first and second occasions for amending the constitution pertain to the American bill of rights and the emancipation of slaves, and the third should be, he concludes, "A more comprehensive congressional bill of human rights—the right to honest work, to decent industry—wide minimum standards of hours, wages and fair competition, to equality of bargaining power, to social security against economic hazards of modern society, and to social control of means of abundant production of goods for a more abundant distribution of the good life."

FERMENT IN THE COLLEGES
By James Wechsler
New Republic, October 16, 1935.

With the rise of the Student League of Industrial Democracy, National Students' league, Intercollegiate organizations and the more expressive right-wing Vigilantes, not to mention other smaller reactionary groups, the writer sees "an awakening" among college students.

At least, he says, it becomes increasingly evident that students can no longer remain impartial or "apathetic" to politics, as Harold Laski, visiting English professor, found them in 1931.

GRIEF TOUCHED US EARLY
By Mary Everett
American Review, October, 1935.

This middle-aged mother of growing children conform with present-day psychologists and educators' ideas about rearing her children, but she believes that the question of death is better dealt with by the religion of her fathers.

She was a child of the typical Southern family who did not shield its children from seeing their relatives or friends die and who took funerals, and habitual visits to the family graves as a matter of course.

As a result the writer accepts death as a natural consequence of life while she finds her children from their training put so much faith in the test tube that they look upon death as unreal and as a strange intruder.

Surely it is as important for man to grapple with mystery and terror, she declares, as it is for him to learn the merits of social co-operation and the over-emphasized "facts of life." It at least calls for a kind of high courage, she says, of which man has always had an increasing need.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

By GRACE MARY WEBSTER

LAST Friday morning just outside the harbor of Alexandria, Egypt, an explosion in the boiler room of an Italian liner anchored there set the ship aflame. British warships hovering near hurried to the rescue. The British fought the fire; carried passengers away from danger and took injured members of the crew to the British hospital ship Maine. The traditions of sea sportsmanship held fast.

A BIT of interesting information to those who read the news of the war—Italian war news is censored twice, once behind the lines and once again in Rome. Ethiopian news is censored also. However, lines of communication between Addis Ababa and the "front" are not dependable and therefore the capital city is a hotbed of rumors.

THE conflict over American entrance in the 1936 Olympics, which are scheduled to be held in Germany becomes more serious.

Jeremiah T. Mahoney, president of the Amateur Athletic union of the United States and former justice of the supreme court, recently investigated the charge of Nazi discrimination against Jewish, Catholic and some Protestant athletes and found Germany guilty of such action. On this basis Mr. Mahoney says,

"I believe that participation in the games under the Swastika implies tacit approval of all that the Swastika symbolizes. I believe that for an American to participate in the Olympics means giving American moral and financial support to the Nazi regime which is opposed to all that America holds dearest. Therefore I hope that all Americans will join with me in opposing American participation in the German Olympics next year and will aid in having them transferred to another country."

THREE more sanctions were passed by the League of Nations last week-end. In the first sanction the League agrees to boycott all goods "grown, produced or manufactured in Italy or her colonies." The second sanction is one by which the member nations have agreed to refuse sale of all key products (such as mules and horses) to Italy or her colonies. The third sanction is a pledge of mutual assistance for League members who will suffer economically from the trade stoppage such as the little nation of Albania. These sanctions are to go into effect October 31.

NYA A DECIDED BOON TO COLLEGE EDUCATIONS

Students will think twice before condemning the National Youth Administration plan when a careful weighing and consideration of the set-up is made. The significant thing that at once appears more pertinent than all others is the number of students aided in securing a higher education.

The NYA functions similarly to the old FERA. The newer movement differs from the old in that NYA is much broader in scope. A sum of $50,000,000 has been set aside from the Works Progress Administration funds, and 125,000 college students all over the United States will be aided in addition to 200,000 high school students.

The nature of the work itself has given students ample time to complete their outside studies and enables them to participate in extra-curricular activities. The work itself is of apprentice nature and will not displace skilled or professional labor. Students regularly employed have been glad to hear that their positions will not be filled by NYA workers.—Antelope.

IN BEHALF OF WIMPY

Wimpy, we salute you! There are few characters in public life today who have been so widely emulated by their fellow men, and it has long been an established fact that the highest form of praise is that of being imitated.

The eulogization of this outstanding figure of American current life today is carried even to our own campus. Step forward, ye parasites! We find ourselves infested with students who "bum" everything from a match to a meal from their fellow students. As the school year progresses these Don Quixotes will become even more exacting in their demands.

These "Wimpies" are not like our pompuous utility magnates and grafting politicians—they do not chisel half a million dollars a year from unsuspecting consumers, they do not take bread from the mouths of impoverished widows and orphans by means of a back door entrance, they do not steal when you are not looking—nothing of the sort—rather the Wimpy that just smiles and takes what he wants from you when you're fully aware of what he's doing.

College "Wimpies" deal mainly in such articles as pennies, nickels, dimes, hamburgers, cigarettes—in short, anything in common demand that has no great value. Because the article that he wants is so small, the "Wimpy" gets it merely for the asking. He knows that most people will not bother to refuse. Besides such refusals are usually embarrassing because the "Wimpy" has an uncanny habit of "striking" his victim when the unsuspecting one is in a

Student Tells Trouble With Our Schooling

Opines Education Should Develop Intellectual Curiosity

By JANE HAFER

"So you see", concluded the professor, "no one has discovered yet an easy procedure for successively precipitating the onions in groups, and then analyzing each group for its several members as is done in cation analysis. Oh yes, there is plenty work left for you young chemists; plenty for you to discover and tell the world about. But first you must learn what is known."

That statement of the professor actually made me feel good. It was a new feeling—one of eagerness to find what was known about this subject and to discover what was not known about it.

The experience made me realize that one fault with education as it exists in the schools today is that it does not teach what is not known; it does not teach enough of the unsolved problems of the sciences, of the arts, and of life. Therefore, it does not aim, apparently to make one keen with educated, intelligent curiosity about the unknown, not eager to do the undone; it teaches only what is known.

As I think back over my school courses I can not remember when any one of my teachers had aroused my curiosity about a subject. They did not stimulate first the wish to know before handing out required knowledge. No, they gave us positive knowledge when there is no certain knowledge, and worst of all, when we did not particularly want it.

I remember particularly a history class which I hated. Although all I do remember about it is that I used to look out the window at the baseball games because the class was the most boring one I ever experienced. The teacher couldn't have existed without her notes. They were planted on her desk before her and claimed her undivided attention. History as taught by her was a collection of dead facts to be handed out by degrees as of unquestionable authority instead of the fascinating story of man's successes and failures. She did not stimulate our interest by showing us that the present day civilization could be understood if one understood the foundations of other civilizations. Nor did she show us how the mistakes of the people as recorded in history should be a guide to the peoples of today. She did not encourage our questions. All the history we needed was in her little notebook and it was not to be questioned.

That, I think is what is wrong with education. Boys and girls are not taught how to be students—intellectually curious. They are given convictions on many subjects and these convictions become so well grounded that they prohibit the open minded, unbiased study of new ideas. It has been said that educated people are the slowest to move toward any change. In other words, under the existing method of education minds become fixed, satisfied, and unquestioning.

It seems that curiosity is the beginning and end of education and that if one could arouse that in the minds of students, they might reverse their relations with their teachers. The students would be asking questions, not the professors; the students would be learning instead of the teachers teaching.

If the students could be sent into the classroom eager to know all about some subject, the professor's pleasant business would be to offer carefully, not with any certainty the little uncertain knowledge he has; then to point off at the unsolved problems of that study, and finally, when the students are ready for more, for the unknown, to drill them in the methods of modern research.

This method should leave burning questions instead of convictions in the minds of the students. The effect of the interest created should put an intellectual subject in the position athletics holds in modern American universities. There might be debates and essays on it, not only in classrooms, but in clubs, at dinners, and in the yards or on the campus. And the final result would not be a satisfactory answer to the question but the graduation from the university of a lot of educated thoughtful scholars who know how to meet and think through life's problems.

Collegiate Come-Backs

Everyone turned out Tuesday night for Investiture to gaze with an envious eye at the blase, sophisticated, and erudite seniors (adjectives per a sociology professor on campus) who donned their intellectual millinery after three years' struggle with the rudiments of culture. By the way, we thought mortar boards were "emblems of knowledge," to be worn in a dignified fashion, if possible, and not perched at a saucy angle over the right eye, revealing only the beginning of what promises to be an eyebrow. Too, when caps are worn at that angle, it's hard to see through the tassel.

Some smart lad at New York university has found a new way to crib, according to the Creighton-ian. It seems that notes written on spectacles or watch-crystals in grapefruit juice become visible when breathed upon. Considering the endurance exams we have at Florida State we're sure we couldn't write the answer to one question, to say nothing of a whole exam, on either of the aforementioned articles. However, if we see anyone bringing a window pane to an exam, we'll certainly be suspicious. Even though we don't crib, we're glad to discover some use for grapefruit. We always knew God never meant them to be eaten.

Staticians at the University of Minnesota have recently shown that women students spend on seventy-six cents more per month in beauty shops than men do in barber shops, says the Merci Cluster. After eyeing both sexes critically with this statement in mind, we'd advise the boys to spend the extra seventy-six cents in the same place we do.

The Carolinian tells of the girl who informed some friends that she had a boy-friend she wanted them to meet.

The girls responded in the following manner:

Athletic girl: What can he do?
Chorus girl: How much money has he?
Literary girl: What does he read?
Religious girl: To what church does he belong?
Society girl: Who is his family?
College girl: WHERE is he?

We are firmly convinced that the last girl was an inmate of our own dear Alma Mater.

We read in Collier's that it is doubtful whether a perfect human body has ever existed, because every individual is believed to have defective vision. Some degree of astigmatism, it is said, is present in every eye. When we observe the brutes that some girls fawn over, we heartily agree with this conservative estimate, preferring to lay the weakness of our sisters to defective vision rather than natural dumbness.

PRAYER

Dear God, keep me
From love's luring lane,
From being a bane,
From singing the refrain
"I love him; he loves me."

Dear God, aid me

Who does not shriek
When phones do squeak.
Please answer my plea

Dear God, kill me
If I rave of eyes divine,
Of features so fine,
Of lips that are mine.
Oh God, I ask of thee
Asphyxiate gals in love for me!

The Social Week

Faculty Will Be Guests At Dinner On Thursday Night

The first faculty-student dinner of the year will be given next Thursday night in the college dining room.

The dining room will have a Hallowe'en atmosphere for this affair, with orange flowers, candies, and other appropriate decorations.

Due to the fact that the dining room is crowded this year the number of guests has been necessarily limited to ninety. Therefore, the first ninety names signed will be guests at the first faculty dinner Not all students will be able to have guests because of this restriction but those who are not included the first time will be given preference at the next faculty-student dinner.

Students who have signed for their guests on the bulletin board will not have to make any other arrangements concerning the reservation of the tables. That will be taken care of by the social committee under the direction of Mary Etta Thistlewaite.

Students are asked to meet their guests in the parlors of their places of residence to avoid confusion in the dining room

Any students who change their plans after having signed up on the bulletin board are asked to notify Mary Etta

At present the following faculty members invited to attend the faculty-student dinner include Dr Edward G Conradi, Miss Louise Conradi Miss Maude Flowers, Miss Kay Warren, Dr. Olivia N Dorman, Miss Fern Boan Miss Elizabeth Hutt, Miss Margaret Campbell, Miss Edith W West, Miss Adrienne Taylor, Miss Olga Larson, Miss Esther Smith, Miss Leonora Smith, Dr Venila Shores, Dr and Mrs. W G Dodd, Mrs Beatrice Williams, Miss Sarah D Meador, Miss Ezda May Deviney Miss Elizabeth Lynn Miss Mary Richey, Miss Mildred Finnegon, Miss Mary Settle Dr. and Mrs. W. Beta Phi Alpha Will Entertain Friends Tomorrow Night

Members of the Beta Phi Alpha sorority will entertain friends with an informal dance tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at the sorority house on West College street.

The house will be decorated for this affair with vases and bowls of autumn flowers in various shades.

Throughout the evening punch and sandwiches will be served to the guests.

Hostesses at this affair will be Virginia Duke, Jean Willis, Ruth Garcia, Carl Brigman, Genevieve Crowley, Jane Moyer, Jessica Jane Mackey, Ellen McLeod, Margie Creel and Helen McKoewn.

DR. BESSIE RANDOLPH CARTER HONOREE AT RECEPTION BY PRESIDENT CONRADI

Following Investiture Tuesday night Dr. Edward Conradi and Miss Louise Conradi entertained in Gilchrist parlors with a reception honoring Dr. Bessie Carter Randolph, president of Hollins College, Hollins, Va.

The parlors of the hall were effectively decorated with fall flowers in yellow and green. The mantle was banked with coral vines, cosmos, and fern, furnishing a lovely background for the reception

In the receiving line with Dr. and Miss Conradi, and Dr. Randolph were Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, and Miss Maude Flowers.

Pouring were Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell, Dr. Venila L. Shores, and Dr. Annie Popper, all members of the history department.

Floor hostesses for the occasion were Mrs. Arthur Williams, Mrs. Robert S. Cotterill, Miss Marian Irish, Miss Rowena Longmire, Miss Jennie Tilt, and Dr. Ezda Deviney.

Students who served during the evening were Lucy Gee Linn, Goldie Lewinsky, Anna Marie Mitchell, Rebecca Keith, Daisy Parker, Mary Kathryn Gibson, Clarissa Knight, Mercedes Garriga, and Grace Mary Webster. These girls are members of either the International club or Phi Alpha Theta, the national history honorary society.

DELTA ZETA HONORS FOUNDER'S DAY, TWO NEOPHYTES AT SORORITY BANQUET

The members of the Delta Zeta sorority entertained the new initiates, Jean Jackson and Kathryn Smith, with a banquet at the Dutch Kitchen at 6:30 o'clock last night, and at the same time celebrated their national Founder's Day.

The banquet table was decorated with red roses, the sorority flower, tastefully arranged with fern. The initiates were presented with recognition pins as a memento of the occasion.

During the evening an appropriate program of toasts and short talks was given.

Among those attending the affair was Louise Knight, an alumnae from Jacksonville.

The members of the sorority who were present at this banquet were Kathleen Harris, Margaret Pinkoson, Mary Glen Coarsey, and Adelaide Ireland.

Phi Mu Initiates Two Tomorrow Afternoon Banquet Follows

The Phi Mu sorority will have initiation for Fair Milteer and Mabray Sumner, tomorrow afternoon.

Following the service there will be a banquet at the Dutch Kitchen in honor of the initiates.

Hostesses at this affair will be: Mary Frances Whisnant, Mary Pollock, Marion Mason, Janet Griffitts, Roberta Clifford, Lucy Houser, Barbara Hendry, Jimmy Malone, Elizabeth Pierce.

Beta Phi Alpha Will Initiate Four In Sunrise Service

An initiation service will be held at sunrise Sunday morning by the Beta Phi Alpha sorority for Jane Moyer, Jessica Jane Mackey, Ellen McLeod, and Margie Creel.

These initiates will also be entertained with a luncheon at the Three Torches tomorrow at noon.

Appropriate decorations of fall flowers and fern will be used on the luncheon table. There will be a short program of toasts and talks.

Active members of the sorority are Virginia Duke, Jean Willis, Ruth Garcia, Carl Brigman, and Genevieve Crowley

Zeta Tau Alpha Has Initiation Rites For Four Girls

The Zeta Tau Alpha sorority held initiation services Saturday morning for Floy Lenert, Mary Frances Pemberton, Virginia Shultz, and Elizabeth Greene.

These new initiates were entertained with a breakfast at the Goodie Shoppe last Sunday morning.

An informal motif was carried out in the decorations of fall flowers, in the place cards and menus, and in the short program which was held during the breakfast.

Hostesses at this affair were Mary Frances Price, Clara Langford, Dorothy Borden, Evelyn Stump, Mary Elizabeth Simpson, Frances Lingle, Esther Hay, and Elizabeth Fellows.

Theta Upsilon Plans To Entertain With Informal Supper

Miss Rowena Longmire attended the Fritz-Chreisler concert in Jacksonville last Monday.

October Tinges Air on Campus

It is a typical October day. Clouds like gobs of whipped cream float in the blue above. The wind glides lazily through the trees. Twigs and branches sway idly and unrhythmically; they remind one of the twisting smoke of a bonfire. One lone squirrel scurries to shelter; a pigeon silently swirls in the air and then swoops to the ground.

A blue car gleams near; a shaggy-haired Scotty wanders by. A tow-headed boy, his arms loaded with magazines, saunters toward the arcade. Strains of melody flow from a violin. Crickets chirp unceasingly; birds sing unanimously; leaves rustle here and there; a branch gently brushes a roof; dishes clatter in the distance.

The magazine boy settles himself in the shade. Laughter spreads through the air from a window. A scarlet blouse flashes in the sun as the wearer runs.

A startling sight—. A door opens. A face appears, and the college song bursts forth with a myriad of girls. They pour from the building on all sides. Moved by the spirit of the song, they stroll along in groups of varying number.

It is twelve-thirty. From all corners of the campus girls stream—they all head toward the dining hall, and all the while, chatter, chatter—

ALPHA GAMMA DELTA PLEDGES TO GIVE HALLOWE'EN PARTY HONORING MEMBERS

The pledges of the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority will entertain the members Saturday night with a Hallowe'en party.

Seasonal decorations of witches, ghosts, and colored lanterns will be used both inside and out, where games such as bobbing for apples and fortune-telling will be in progress. Favors will be small orange-colored boxes with the sorority letters on them.

The hostesses for this party will be Mary Helen Barnhart, Margaret Boteler, Flo Bottari, Carolyn Boyd, Martha Faile, Julia Harrison, Mary Ann Hart, Julia Hodgson, Virginia Jepson, Elsie Kersey, Helen Lane, Mary Melton, Midell Moore, Margaret Oliver, Katherine Patterson, Isabelle Satterfield, Clara Stewart, Barbara Swanstrom, Nancy Williamson, Mary Elizabeth Halstead, Margaret Fee, Grace Groff, Charlotte Ferinn, Dorothy Williams, Marianna Swank, Madge Collier, and Marian Bailey.

PANHELLENIC WILL CONTINUE SERIES OF TEAS FOR STUDENTS AND FACULTY

Continuing the series of informal teas being sponsored by Panhellenic seeking a closer relationship between sorority and non-sorority girls, and between students and faculty, there will be several teas given this week-end

Students living on the alphabet and numeral floors of Jennie Murphree hall will be invited to a tea given at the Pi Beta Phi house by members of the Zeta Tau Alpha and Pi Beta Phi sororities, this afternoon at 4 00 o'clock.

The house will be decorated with arrangements of chrysanthemums and roses.

Punch and cookies will be served during the afternon. Other guests will include the members of the faculty committee on student affairs and the members of the faculty committee on sorority affairs.

The members of the Delta Delta Delta and Alpha Chi Omega sororities will entertain this afternoon from 4 00 to 5:30 o'clock with a garden tea honoring the students living in upper Jennie Murphree.

The tea will be held on the lawn of the Delta Delta Delta house if the weather permits.

During the afternoon the guests will be served ginger ale and sherbet with open-faced sandwiches.

Members of the faculty have also been invited to this affair.

The students living in Bryan hall will be honored Sunday afternoon by the Alpha Gamma Delta and Beta Phi Alpha sororities with a tea at the Alpha Gamma Delta house.

The rooms of the house will be decorated with roses, dahlias, and fern, arranged effectively.

Other guests will include the faculty committee on student affairs and the faculty committee on sorority affairs.

The members of the Kappa Alpha Theta and Delta Zeta sororities will entertain the girls living on the lower floors of Broward with a garden party given on the lawn of the Kappa Alpha Theta house.

Pouring during the afternoon will be representatives from both of the sororities.

The guests will be served punch and a variety of cookies. Attending this affair will also be members of the faculty.

Kookoo Kollege Party At Sorority House Honors Freshmen

A "Kookoo Kollege" party will be given tonight at 8 o'clock in the Delta Phi Epsilon house by the Jewish Women's organization in honor of the freshmen.

A collegiate atmosphere will be given to the party by the pennants, streamers, and signs which will decorate the walls of the house, and by the invitations which were made to represent college catalogues

During the evening a program will be given which will represent different phases of college life, stressing the activities of freshman week. Following the program appropriate refreshments will be served.

In charge of the party are Rose Safer, Rachel Rothstein, Rose Leven, Evelyn Meitin, Miriam Hein, and Elaine Klepper

Sara McGregory of Tampa was a week-end guest at the Alpha Delta Pi house

Church Groups Have Big Week

Religious Council Meets; Presbyterians Hold Retreat at Camp

Among the more important activities of the campus religious groups for the coming week are a meeting of the Religious Workers' council, a Methodist young people's district conference, and the Presbyterian students' annual retreat held at Camp Flastacowo.

The Religious Workers' council will have dinner in the college dining room Monday night. Representatives from all student councils and from the Y. W. C. A. will meet with them. There will be one delegate from each religious group on campus..

An after-dinner coffee and a program will be held at Ruge hall. At this time Lucy Gee Linn will give a summary of work done by the religious groups on campus in the past. Miss Mary Roh Stewart will speak on "What Jesus can mean to College Students." The meeting will close with a prayer by Dr. Daniel

The local Methodist church and students of Florida State College for Women will be hostesses to a young people's district meeting Friday at the Methodist church. The main speaker on the program will be R. L. Hunt, of Nashville, Tennessee, and editor of "Highroad" Methodist young people's publication. Mr. Hunt will explain the publication in order that young people may understand and gain a better appreciation of it. He will also sing several selections from the new Methodist hymnal.

The meeting will begin at five o'clock and last until seven. Supper will then be served. At eight o'clock, a news-reel will be shown explaining the progress of the "Highroad."

Miss Winnie Lee Davis, Methodist Student Secretary, will attend a conference at the University of Mississippi in Oxford, Mississippi from Friday until Sunday. She will be on the program, leading two one and one-half hour interest groups on the topic "Sharing the Christian Experience"

Episcopal students and their friends will be entertained with an after-dinner coffee Friday night at 7:15 It will be held at Ruge hall with Betty Ostlund, social chairman, in charge.

Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell will speak to the Sunday School class of the Episcopal church at ten o'clock Sunday morning on "The Study of the Bible."

The Presbyterian Students council will hold a retreat at Camp Flastacowo from Friday afternoon through Saturday night. About thirty are expected to attend.

Supper will be eaten Friday night out-of-doors, around a large camp fire After supper Mr Ansley Moore, pastor of Presbyterian church of Thomasville, will speak to the group Games will follow Mr Moore's talk Mary Wylie Kuppelberg will lead evening devotionals

Saturday morning Virginia Taylor will be in charge of an early morning service on the lake. The rest of the morning will be given over to council meeting. At that time, the work of the organization will be examined, and they will outline plans for the coming year. Saturday afternoon will be free for any recreation. A chili supper will be served Saturday night at which . the Rev E. N. Caldwell will speak The rest of the evening will be spent in singing.

Baptist students will be entertained with a Hallowe'en party, November 1. The party will be held at the community hall of the church, beginning at eight o'clock and will be divided into two periods. The first part will feature appropriate Hallowe'en games. During the second part of the party a supper-banquet will be served in small gayly decorated booths, while musie is played Mary Boatright is in charge of the entertainment.

crowd and hesitates not to yield for fear of being called a 'piker' "

Suffice it to say that the deal goes only one way Reciprocity is an unknown quantity to our 'Wimpies.' They contain a considerable amount of that alloy known as brass in fact, it's the principal constituent of their backbone. They make themselves "heard."

We are glad to say that these Wimpies constitute only a small part of our student population Students who are financially "on their uppers" do not indulge in such small practices. However it is to be regretted that the very existence of such professional parasites makes matters ever more difficult for those ordinarily upstanding students who are temporarily financially embarrassed. The latter naturally cannot obtain assistance as readily as the former because they hesitate to ask for such assistance, not being endowed with that "brass" inherent to the "chiseler."

In conclusion, however, may we say that these Wimpies each brand themselves with the word "small," which becomes indelibly written across their character. Consequently the thinking student soon comes to retain what negligible charity he possesses for those who are worthy.—Kentucky Kernel.

Education Director Talks on Cherry Lake Farms Rehabilitation Project

American Association of University Professors Hears Loomis Describe Cooperative Venture Near Tallahassee

Dr. C. B. Loomis, education director of the Cherry Lake Farms project, which is located about 60 miles from Tallahassee, spoke about the rehabilitation project to an audience of faculty and students in the Augusta Conradi theater Friday night.

Dr. Lomis was brought to the college by Dr. David H. Briggs, associate professor of education and supervisor of critic teaching in the Demonstration school, who also is president of the local branch of the American Association of University Professors, the occasion being the first fall meeting of the organization.

"One hundred fifteen families now are taking part in this 'cooperative venture,' " Dr. Loomia said. He added thet each week brings additions. A total of $1,700,000 has been allocated for the project and the plan is to bring the total acreage, now 12,000 acres, to 20,000.

Farming will be the basis of subsistence, according to Dr. Loomis. The settlers will be divided into those whose entire living will depend upon farming and shading on down to those who depend only partly on farming. Then there is a group of non-farmers. The project contemplates planting 700 acres of grapes, also tobacco, cotton and a large amount of vegetables, he said. The government has given about two or three hundred head of drouth cattle, which are being put into condition. With this start an attempt will be made to build the herd up to 1,000 head to afford ample dairy products.

A canning plant is planed to take care of the surplus and a Cherry Lake label will be created. Marketing will be along the coperative line. "Fifty-five hundred acres already have been put into cultivation," he said.

The speaker also told the audience that the project already has a saw and planing mill. Houses of the cottage type are being built, a unit of 60 houses now being finished. The mill probably will be used for furniture-making once the houses are completed.

"A board of governors made up of eight men and eight women of different age groups, thus representing a cross section of community life, acts as a planning group," he said. "Among the things they plan are a library, boxing, a music and art group and a home economic enterprise."

Two Sophomores Discover Number of Miles They Walk During One Week

Two sophomores know approximately the number of miles they walk every day at Florida State College. At least, they know exactly how many miles they walked one week that is typical of all weeks.

The students are of two types: one, a girl who does a certain amount of work requiring about 4 miles of walking each day, found that she covered an average of 7.3 miles every day; the other student, whose daily activity comprises that of the usual student who walks to classes, to meals, to town, to the library, and to tha rooms of other girls found that she walked an average of 6¼ miles per day.

Ten and one-fourth miles was the longest distance covered in one day by the former girl, while 5 was the shortest. Her walking during the week was Monday, 9 miles; Tuesday, 10¼ miles; Wednesday, 8¼; Thursday, 7¾; Friday, 6½; Saturday, 6; and Sunday, 5 miles. The other student walked 7 miles Monday; 6, Tuesday; 5½, Wednesday; 6, Thursday; 6¾, Friday; 8, Saturday; and 4½, Sunday. This mileage is not unusual—some girls do not walk so much, others walk more. They have often wondered just how much they do walk. One girl claims that she walked 12½ miles one day which would not be exceptional.

These girls, like other students admit that they never knew what real walking was, that they never even knew they had feet in this riding age till they came to Florida State. After a sojourn here though, the appearance of callouses, corns, and aching feet every night do testify to the presence of such appendages.

Former Student Receives Honor From Hawaiians

Steffee Placed on Staff Teaching Chemistry In Honolulu

Elizabeth Steffee, graduate of Florida State College for Women in the class of August, 1932, has recently been appointed to the place of instructor of chemistry at the University of Hawaii in Honolulu. She is also doing graduate work in chemistry at the University.

Elizabeth was the first freshman here to make a straight A average for the year. She graduated with an average of 2.96, completing her major in chemistry in three years on a scholarship from Osceola county. She was a member of the freshman soccer and basket ball teams, and made Phi Kappa Phi and Kappa Delta Pi, honorary fraternities.

Since finishing Florida State College Elizabeth has taught three years in the public schools of Pahokee and Kissimmee, Florida. At present besides attending classes at the University of Hawaii, she has lessons in surf-board riding, has been on several native fishing trips, and has attended a Japanese and a Filipino wedding reception.

Freshman Class Holds Meeting

Freshman Advisor Gives Short Address

At the regular freshman class meeting held Saturday October 19, at 1:30 in the auditorium, members of the freshman class gave an entertainment.

June Maule and Mary Jane Johnson, freshman cheer leaders, were introduced by Sue Whitaker, freshman sponsor, and they led the class in singing some of the Odd songs.

Minna Dunn, freshman advisor, gave a short talk in which she told the freshmen what the real purposes of the class meetings are.

Jean Gillis, chairman of the program introduced the entertainers.

Becky Ashton gave two short readings, Sam's Letter and Trouble 'Nuff

After this Mary Frances Campbell, Anna Laurie Sanchez, Dorothy Barr and Mary Kathryn Thomas sang I'll Never Say Never Never Again." Their accompanist was Sara Frances Gatrell.

Dorothy Colburn did an acrobatic danee accompanied at the piano by Mamye Strange after which Mayme and Sara Frances Gatrell played a two-piano medley. The class was dismissed to the tune of Garnet and Gold played by the two-piano team.

Members of the committee who arranged the program were Jean Gilles, Betty White, Lillian Huss, Helen Ramsley, Mary Frances Campell, and Becky Ashton.

According to Sue Whitaker, freshman sponsor, the next meeting will feature good manners.

Writer Thinks Women Need Freedom Of Single Standard

System Embodies Equal Rights With Men In Choices, Privileges

By BILLIE KEPPER

In the twentieth century women have gradually taken the same positions in the world as men with one exception, that of single standard freedom. It seems rather ridiculous that the women of America have not adopted this new freedom also. Some may blame this fact to the conventions, but have not women shockingly defied this world of grim rules before, and with success?

The single standard embodies the idea that women have the same rights in regard to living as men. By this, I mean to say, that women, since they are employed in the same capacities as men, go "fifty-fifty" on everything. It is neither fair nor sensible that the man should support the woman as well as himself when she earns as much as he. Take, as an example, a man and woman lunching together, let her receive her own bill and he, his. In this way, more hours may be spent in each other's company and yet the woman will feel under no obligation to her gentleman friend. There should be no passing of money under the table to the man, but clean "up and above-board" playing. There should be no embarrassment, for I believe it will soon become a universal custom

If this system should become accepted, it will naturally allow women the privilege of asking a man of her choice to join her in her escapades This would greatly simplify life, for as it is now, if a woman is determined to have a date with a certain man, she will manage in some way to obtain it. Often the man, much against his will, finds himself filling an engagement with a woman whom he not only dislikes, but rather has a strong hatred towards. When asked how this happened the unlucky male will only shake his head and attribute it to "one of those unavoidable incidents." It would put an end to much of the lying and deceit practiced by modern women. No more lying awake at nights trying to enveigle some poor fish into her clutches and no more scheming as to how to conveniently break an engagement. Life would be simple. Just call up a man and tell him that you are going to the opera tonight and would be more than pleased if he would accompany you. If he gracefully refuses dial another number and try another friend. The day of chivalry and maidens in distress has long passed away and in its place has come this cruel, cheating, modern life—a life of lies and deceits.

The next subject which arises for discussion is the question of proposals and marriage. I can even now see gentle damsels shrinking from the thought of mentioning the subject of marriage to a man. If a woman is supporting herself, is making her own male friends in a modern, sensible manner, is choosing the engagements which she wishes to fill and not being confined by what is expected of her to do, then a woman has a right to speak for her own mate. Not that a man should not be granted this privilege also, but that man and woman should be placed on the same footing entirely. Both have the power of asking and both have the power of refusing.

Woman has the ability and the character to carry a thing through. Why, then, should she be denied this one supreme right?

Demonstration School Plans More Recreation

Plans are well underway in the Demonstration school for promoting an increased recreational program for its students.

The college gate north of Jennie Murphree hall has been closed to all traffic in order that the boys and girls of the school may have a safe place to skate. Some of the skates are being furnished by the school for those children who cannot afford to purchase any.

Future plans for recreation in this vicinity include a shuffle board and hopscotch courts, according to Mr. R. B. Parsons, superintendent of the school.

The third floor of the Demonstration school building is devoted to what is known as a recreation room where there are ping pong courts and other materials for games.

A Hallowe'en party is being planned for November 1 to be held at the school.

Largest Number of New-Comers Are From Miami

Many States Represented By Freshman Class; Georgia Leads

Where do the freshmen come from?

We hear an answer of "Heaven!" shouted in unison from 711 freshman throats, which completely drowns out the sophomores, juniors, and seniors muttering of gloomy response.

We know the freshmen come from heaven, of course (the cracks, please), but where did these lambs come from more recently? It seems that most of them come from Miami—64, to be exact, from Miami and Miami Beach. Jacksonville contributes the next largest number with 56 freshmen enrolled. Then comes Tampa with 48, Tallahassee with 31, Clearwater with 16, and so down the line to Sopchoppy, Turkey Creek, and Zephyrhills, each of which communities adds one freshman to the class.

There are 25 states represented by freshmen in FSCW this year. Georgia leads with ten. Next is Alabama with five, and New York with three. There is one freshman from the Canal Zone. Altogether, the "sources of the freshmen" are many and varied.

Honorary Degree is Conferred on Owen

Discusses Her Diplomatic Work as Minister To Danish Kingdom

ASKS FOR AMITY AMONG NATIONS

Distinguished Visitors Witness Impressive Ceremonial

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, envoy extraordinary and miniatar plenipotentiary to the kingdom of Denmark, received the honorary degree of doctor of laws here yesterday morning at a special convocation of high state officials, distinguished guests, faculty members, and students. The degree, conferred by President Edward Conradi, was the first of its kind to be awarded by Florida State College for Women in the thirty years of its history.

Tells of Work in Denmark

Before the presentation of the degree, Mrs. Owen gave an address on her work as minister to Denmark, emphasizinng the importance of the United States foreign service in promoting a feeling of sympathy and cooperation between America and other nations. Mrs. Owen was introduced to the audience by Governor Dave Sholtz.

"Because you have always held the torch of human endeavor in the front line of progress, the Florida State College for Women considers it a great honor to confer upon you this, the first honorary doctor of laws degree given by the college," said Dr. Conradi as he conferred the degree.

Dr William G. Dodd, dean of the college of arts and sciences, presented Mrs. Owen to President Conradi for the conferring of the degree, naming among her services her work as a volunteer nurse in the World war, as representative of the Fourth district of Florida in the United States Congress during 1928-1933, and as minister to Denmark.

Example for Womanhood

"Because not only in these highly honorary services but also her less conspicuous activities educator, author, and lecturer," said Dr. Dodd, "she has been a brilliant example of the educated and cultured American woman devoting her time and talent to

Picture Deadline Is Set by Editor

Freshmen, sophomores, and juniors must have their Flastocowo pictures taken by Saturday afternoon, Nov. 2, according to Edith Webb, editor of the annual. Seniors only may have through Saturday, Nov. 9.

Seniors are asked not to forget to take caps and formal collars with them to Adams' Studio.

Carnival Takes Place Tonight

Costume Award, Auction, Dance Are Featured School Program

A costume Halloween carnival sponsored by the senior council and student government of the Demonstration school will be held tonight from 7.30 to 11:00 o'clock at the Demonstration school. Entertainment will be provided by various classes for children in the primary grades as well as for high school students.

The purpose of the carnival is to provide a general good time for the entire school and at the same time make enough money to continue the activities of the student government association.

Among the classes sponsoring games and amusements are the seventh grade which will present a wheel of chance, the eighth grade which will give a broadcast of famous radio personalities; the freshman class which will have an auction in which a cake will be raffled off, the sophomore class which will have a bank nite feature; the junior class which will present cabaret entertainment, and the senior class which will have a bingo game with a cake as the prize awarded.

A general dance will be held at 9.30 o'clock with lead-outs by the student council following a grand march at 8 o'clock led by Ruth Terrell, student council president, and Foster Boone, senior class president.

Everyone is to take part in the march, and four prizes for the best costumes will be awarded: two for the elementary school and two for the high school. A secret committee composed of students' parents will act as judges.

Miss Florence Tryon, faculty sponsor of the senior council, is the faculty adviser for the carnival and Ruth Terrell is general chairman. Mary Charles Findley is in charge of music for the dance and Mary Arms is chairman of the judging committee. Sue Love, Harriet Kent, Ben Ervin, and Keith Kent compose the decoration committee.

The main feature of the weekly chapel program Monday afternoon was a quintette from the A. and M. college. The senior class was in charge of the program with Kenneth Williams, senior faculty adviser conducting it.

Will Present First Distaff On November 8

Quarterly Magazine Will Have Standard Cover And Make-Up

KITCHEN SCENE, PORTRAIT SHOWN

Material in Issue Will Contain Discussions On Education

The first issue of the Distaff, college quarterly magazine, is scheduled to come out next Friday, November 8, according to Sara Krentzman, editor.

Color Style Changed

Although the color and style of the magazine will be the same as last year the size has been changed making the book about one-half inch wider.

"All Wool," a collection of satires, "And a Yard Wide," the editorial section, and "Marching Letters," a section of book reviews, comprise the special divisions of the quarterly publication.

The tentative list of materials for this issue includes "Low Aim Is Crime," a critical discussion of the education problem, by Hazel Bowman; "This Attitude of Indifference," a discussion of the apathy of young people on the campus and in outside life, by Goldie Lewinsky and "One Way of Looking at It." A discussion of recent magazine trends by Daisy Parker.

Describes Education

Grace B. Hatfield's narrative, "Matilda Oldham Sees It Through," is a description of a recent educational experiences. In Catherine Levey's "Crisis," a character study, the crucial moments in the life of a doctor are portrayed. "The Tide Sweeps Out," by Patricia Given, is a story with the hurricane-stricken keys as its background.

The satire section, "All Wool," includes "A Portrait of a Sympathetic Christian," by Ella A. Burrow, a summer school student, and "I Believe in Preparedness," by Hazel Bowman.

The poetry in this issue is by Elizabeth Bicknell, a transfer from Tampa university, Agnes Irene Reedy, and Eleanor Jenkins.

Whitaker, Embrey Articles

The art work was done by Grace Whitaker and Olivia Embrey. Grace has drawn a portrait of H. L. Davis, author of Honey in the Horn, and Olivia has contributed a scene from the kitchen at Florida State college.

Students reviewing books are Hazel Bowman, Frances Forth, Goldie Lewinsky, Daisy Parker, and Grace Caroline Adams.

Members of the staff of the Distaff include editor, Sara Malcalm Krentzman; associate editor, Goldie Lewinsky; assistant editor, Daisy Parker; business manager, Mary Kathryn Gibson; advertising manager, Mary Jeanne McKay; circulation manager, Sarah Sealey.

The Distaff was praised by the editors of Harpers magazine at the end of last year, and received first class honor rating from the Naitonal Scholastic press, according to Sarah.

"Beautiful Way to Begin Florida Visit" States Mrs. Owen Proudly

Speaking Informally While Momentarily Ducking Photographers She Praises Roosevelt For Assisting Women

and
PEARLE SHEPARD

Dignitaries of the college milled around in their black robes of authority, agitated photographers sought her attention, passers-by craned to see her, but Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, holder of the propitious title of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Denmark, sat serene and perfectly at ease amidst it all.

Sitting comfortably on the arm of a seat in the Augusta Conradi theater, Mrs. Owen talked to reporters just before she received the first honorary degree ever given by Florida State college.

Smiling, her smart black hat pulled over one eye, she talked of the pride she felt in receiving her degree, the third, she said, that had been bestowed upon her.

"I think this is a beautiful way to begin my Florida visit," she said, "and I'm very proud."

Declining graciously to answer questions about international affairs, because as she put it, "I, like other representatives of foreign service, am a spokesman of our government," she spoke on other subjects.

In discussing the diplomatic service, Mrs. Owen predicted that women will play a much more prominent part in this field in the future.

Praising President Roosevelt's opening of various offices to women, she said, "It is a splendid thing that the President is opening new fields to women, but the President has only opened the door when he appointed the first woman federal judge, the first woman diplomat and the first woman head of the mint. It remains for other women to enter these fields."

Speaking of the position of the woman as an influence in world politics, Mrs. Owen emphasized the fact that women are only 10 per cent behind men in their voting record, as compared to the much lower figure of a few years ago. She pointed out that with such a high per cent of women voting it is possible for them to have a very great influence upon the trend of national and international affairs.

Laying aside official subjects, her grey eyes twinkled as she told her interviewers that she was thinking of starting a matrimonial bureau. Two of the young women who have held positions with her sometime during her career have been married recently.

"All they have to do is work for me and then they get married," she laughed.

Asked how it seems to be back in America, Mrs. Owen answered simply, "I really never felt very far away from home. The radio,

Germany Topic For Discussion

Club Receives New Books On Peace Tendencies Among Nations

At the next meeting of the International Relations club Monday night at 7:30 o'clock in room 209 History building, Grace Mary Webster will lead a discussion on the place Germany is taking in the world today.

Speakers on the program include Clotilde O'Rourke, who will speak on "Hitler The Man," Mauvis Lussier, who will discuss "Germany's position in International Affairs," and Carolina Adams, who will talk on "Germany's Internal Situation at the Present Time."

New books were received this week from the Carnegie endowment for International Peace and will be kept in the office of Miss Marion Irish, associate professor of political science. Anyone may come and read the books there, but only International club members are allowed to take the books from the office.

The new books include Between Two Worlds, by Nicholas Murray Butler; International Organizations in Which the United States Takes Part, by Lawrence F. Schmeckebier; Peace and the Plain Man, by Norman Angell; International Security by Phillip C. Jessup; Democratic Government by Eugene P. Chase, Robert Valeur, and Raymond Leslie Buell; Labour's Way to Peace by Aurthur Henderson, M. P., and the Treaty of Versailles and After by Lord Riddell, Professor C. K. Webster, Professor Arnold J. Toynbee, Professor Denis Saurat, Baron Werner Von Rheinbaben, Senator Forges Davanzati, Mrs. M. Tappan Holland, The Marquess of Reading and Sir Norman Angell.

A number of pamphlets on the present day affairs received along with the books include America's Capacity to Produce, America's Capacity to Consume, Abyssinia and Italy, Tariff and Its History, International Economic Relations, The Formation of Capital, Price of Peace, Rivalries in Ethiopia, Vanishing Farm Markets and Our World Trade, The United States and Neutrality.

Arts Department Moves

The Industrial Arts department has recently moved into the new Education building. Miss Wilburn, of the Industrial Arts department stated that an exhibit of pottery, modeling, and figures for teaching small children, will be displayed in the three new cabinets on the lower floor of the Education building, beginning next week.

LSU Challenges Rifle Experts

Telegraphic Meet Planned For Spring Between Two Colleges

The physical education department of Florida State College for Women has accepted a challenge from the woman's rifle team of Louisiana State university, at Baton Rouge, to participate in a telegraphic rifle meet, to take place the week ending March 28, 1936. The meet is being announced early so that all who enter may have time for practice.

At present Florida State College has no rifle team but is equipped with rifles, targets, and a range at Camp Flastacowo. The twenty-two rifles are those required by the rules for the meet. The reguired targets have been ordered and will be placed at camp upon their arrival. A standard range will be used in accordance with the rules governing the shooting meet.

Anyone who is interested in entering this contest is asked to see Miss Elizabeth Autrey as soon as possible. All students are eligible, and they may practice shooting at Camp Flastacowo each week-end. A score of the highest marks will be kept and from this fifteen girls will be chosen to serve on the rifle team. Each girl must supply her own ammunition when practicing but the guns and targets will be furnished, it has seen announced.

During the meet fifteen girls will participate with the ten highest scores being telegraphed to Louisiana.

Prominent Speaker May Be Among Lecturers On Series Here This Year

Efforts are being made, according to Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel, to secure John Langdon Davies as one of the speakers for the forthcoming lecture series.

That Mr. Davies is a lecturer of unusual eminence is shown by the fact that for six or eight years he has been chosen to speak at Winthrop College, and that he has been requested to fill return engagements everywhere he has spoken. A man of brilliant intellect and wide experience gained through travel in South Africa, Spain, and America, Mr. Davies will certainly have a valuable message for students here, Dr. Andrews believes.

In addition to being a traveler and lecturer of note, Mr. Davies is an author of distinction, having written such books as Man Comes of Age, Man and his Universe, The New Age of Faith, and A Short History of Women, the latter having been a Literary Guild selection.

Mary Stewart Addresses the Student Body

Representative of Youth Movement Explains Christian Work

CONFERENCE WILL REPRESENT WORLD

Cabinet Will Endeavor To Send Delegates In December

Miss Mary Robert Stewart, graduate of Limestone college, South Carolina, and a representative of the Student Volunteer movement, spent four days on campus this week meeting with religious groups and a student body assembly for the purpose of discussing the work of the Student Volunter movement.

Conference to Be Held

An international meeting of Christian college students will be held in Indianapolis, Indiana, December 28 through January 1, Miss Stewart told students at convocation Tuesday morning.

The purpose of the conference, Miss Stewart said, is to give representatives of the world's youth an opportunity to discuss world problems. Noted student leaders from Japan, England, Korea, United States and other countries are expected at the conference.

Delegates from Yale university, Georgia Tech, Pennsylvania State, Cornell, Johns Hopkins university, University of Tennessee, University of Washington State, and University of Seattle have indicated at this early date they will attend the meeting, according to Miss Stewart.

Meets With Cabinet

At an open Freshman cabinet meeting Wednesday afternoon Miss Stewart led a discussion of student opinion on current international problems and further stressed the international meeting in Indianapolis.

These annual conferences propose to draw the Christian students of the world closer together, regardless of denomination, into one compact organization, the bond of union being their common faith in a Christian God. The theme of this year's conference is "Christian Youth Building a New World."

The conferences have been so enthusiastically received, Miss Stewart said, that a limit has been placed on the number of registrations, each college having a certain quota. Florida State college may have eleven delegates, according to Miss Stewart, not including foreign students and faculty members.

Members of Cabinet discussed the possibility of having a delegation from this college and Dean N. M. Salley offered to inquire about rates for chartering a bus.

No Definite Plans

No definite plans were made but Lucy Gee Linn, president of Y.W.C.A., expressed the students' interest in the project and prom-

Freshmen to Pledge Loyalty to College

Traditional Ceremony Of Fealty Replaced By Simple Service

ALL CASTING IS FROM NEW CLASS

Modern Settings Succeed Medieval; Staging is To Be Stressed

Pledging of allegiance to alma mater in the traditional Fealty ceremony, Saturday night at 8-15 in the college auditorium, the class of '39 will bring to a close its orientation period, and will become an integral part of the college student body.

Change in Usual Ceremony

This year, there will be several outstanding deviations from Fealty ceremonies of previous years, the most important of which is the pledging of loyalty to the alma mater, rather than to the Junior class, as has been the practice in the past. Also this year, the plot of the ceremony has been laid in modern settings, rather than in medieval days, and the significance of the service will depend less on dialogue and more upon lighting effects and the arrangement of characters on the stage.

Plot and Characters

The plot is laid in an artist's studio, and the characters, who are all members of the freshman class, are: sculptor, Betty Wynn; sculptor's assistant' Winifred Eyart; master of ceremonies, Elva Melvin; Alma Mater, Lutrell Patterson; freshman spokesman, Sarah Moore; singer, Margaret Gourlie; dancers: Jeanne Harned, Corine Noble, Beauford Thrower, Virginia Craig, Betty Gause, and Barbara Swanstrom; audience June Maule, Jewel Rollins, Lovina Spaulding, Irene Reat, Julia Mullis, Julia Burnette, Becky Ashton, Frances Clements, Helen Mead, Sarah Lewis, Marguerite Athon, Doris Geiger, Rachael Richards, Berahe Oven and Jane Brown.

The violinist, Betty Parker, and the organist, Jessica June Mackey, are upper classmen.

Marjory Tillis is the general chairman of Fealty and the members of all committees for the ceremony are taken from the ad-

Peace Is Topic For Discussion

Barrett, Bowman, And Knight Give Talks At Third Meet

Peace, and our part in attaining it, was the subject discussed at the third NSFA forum meeting, which was held Wednesday night wtih Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman, presiding.

Clarissa Knight, the first speaker, was introduced by Marjorie Harris, program chairman. Beginning her talk by defining peace as a refusal to resort to physical force as a means of settling disputes between organized groups of society, Clarissa continued, showing that in war there is still peace, for each opposing group must be peaceful within itself. The basic causes of war, which are hunger, love, vanity, and religion, she stated, are also the basic causes of peace. "The fundamental requirement for peace," Clarissa said, "is on the basis of common interest for the world. Have we, as citizens of the United States, the right to stand for peace if we are not willing to share our natural resources wtih nations not as self-supporting as we? Is the American attitude a recognition of common interest in the world?"

"Peace Through Preparedness" was the subject of Blanton Barrett's talk in which she stated that armament and a peaceful spirit are necessary to keep American peace. "Isolation is impossible," she added, "alliances are aggravating, and international troops are not wise. Therefore, the preservation of real peace consists in being forever ready and armed, and willing to intervene in European affairs if necessary."

Blanton also thinks that by the cooperation of the press and by the installation of compulsory military training in the schools, the United States can keep down a belligerent attitude. "The powers of America are great enough," she concluded, "to enforce peace by merely threatening the sword to a would-be Alexander."

Hazel Bowman, the third speaker, discussed the means of attaining peace through peace. The two main causes of the World war, according to her, were the European propaganda, since Eur-

Home Economics Conference Held

Faculty Members Go To Annual State Meet

Several members of the faculty of F. S. C. W., and Miss Flavia Gleason, state home demonstration agent, whose headquarters are at the college, attended and helped direct the annual conference of extension workers in agriculture and home economics, October 28 to November 1, at Gainesville.

Faculty members who attended and the subjects of their lectures are: Dr. Ruth Connor, associate professor of home economics, "Family Relationships"; Miss Henriette Slyver, associate professor of textiles and clothing, 'Good Design and Color in Dress and House Furnishings"; Miss Sarah Meader, instructor in textiles and clothing, "Standardization of Textiles"; and Dr. Jennie Tilt, professor of physiological chemistry and nutrition, "Diet in Relation to Dental Cares."

The theme for the home demonstration section, of which Miss Gleason has charge, is "The group mind, planning, creating, and achieving, can accomplishin marvels of which the individual is incapable." The home demonstration staff includes: Miss Lucy Belle Settle, Gainesville, district home demonstration agent; Miss Anna Mae Sykes, Tallahassee, acting district home demonstration agent; Miss Virginia P. Moore, Tallahassee, home improvement agent; Miss Isabelle S. Thursby, Tallahassee, extension economist in food conservation; Miss Ruby McDavid, Tallahassee, district home demonstration agent, and Mrs. Eva R. Culley, Tallahassee, acting extension nutritionist.

Miss Gleason went to Green Cove Springs Thursday and to Ocala Friday, attending home demonstration achievement days staged by home demonstration agents who displayed exhibits featuring womens work.

935 Flastacowo Wins High Honor

over, Informal Snapshots Especially Praised

First class honor rating has been awarded to last year's Flastacowo by the National Scholastic Press association according to a recent announcement by Edith Webb, this year's editor of the annual.

Last year's book which was edited by Hazel Goza and had as its theme "World Mindedness" was placed in the class of annuals that represented colleges with enrollments from 1,000 to 2,500. Out of thirty-five entries fifteen received this rating.

The entries were judged by Fred Noer, present editor of the Collegiate Digest and associated with the National Scholastic Press association. His criticism of Florida State's annual included special praise of the cover and of the use of informal snapshots for organizations.

All American rating the one above first class honor rating and the highest that can be achieved was given to only two college annuals: the Howitzer of the United States Military Academy at West Point and the Lucky Bag of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

The Flastocowo's rating places it on a footing with the following colleges: Oregon State college, Georgia School of Technology, Creighton university, Brigham Young university, Utah State college, Texas State College for Women, Oberlin college, Tulane university, Texas Technological college, Ohio Wesleyan universtiy, Lewis institute, Universtiy of Arkansas, Clemson college, and George Washington university in Washington, D. C.

Work on the 1936 annual is progressing according to the editor who hopes to complete picture-taking for it in the next two weeks.

Sunday Supplement to Greenwich Village Flourishes On Campus

College Bohemians Gather On Weekends to Paint, Design, and Etch

Greenwich Village has not entirely come to life in Tallahassee, but the art majors have started a Sunday supplement to it. The meeting place of this Bohemian group is the third floor of the Administration building on almost any Saturday or Sunday.

Last Sunday one of the artists brought along that modern masterpiece that is the staff of life to the college girl, a radio, which was acclaimed with loud cheers.

Soon sounds of an opera issued forth. The atmosphere was immediately changed from that of a bare school room to that of an attic studio. Easels, smocks, brushes and paints mingled in friendly disarray.

A large group had assembled, and all were industriously working to musical accompaniment on the paintings that were due all too soon. Interior decorators, designers, and painters were all accounted for.

Though there was one starving artist there—she went without her dinner to paint—it was not a case of a dime, but of time.

Midnight sessions, always seem inevitable for some, but the last of the Bohemians manage somehow to leave at the light flash deadline.

Three Music Graduates Teaching in Cross City

Three graduates of the school of music of Florida State College for Women are employed in the same public school in Cross City, Florida. They are Laura Ann Winny, who teaches piano and the glee club; Alice Fernandez, who carries the instrumental division of public school music; and Emily Crosland who teaches piano.

The Cross City public school offers free piano lessons to the students, but the teachers are paid by the school.

Salley Attends Educators Meet

Financial Stability For Schools in Offing

"A new feeling among the state leaders in the educational field that schools will soon be on a thoroughly sound financial basis," reported Dean Nathaniel Moss Salley, on returning from the eleventh annual session of the Central Florida Educational association meeting in Gainesville "All the officers of the state government " he said, "seem to be working towards that end "

According to further information brought back by Dean Salley from the convention, there is a growing universal interest in the adequate support of the schools of the state. There also seems to be a general tendency in the association to recognize the great importance of careful preparation on the part of teachers for their work

At this meeting were the education leaders of Alachua, Bradford, Columbia, Dixie, Gilchrist, Levy Marion, Putnam, and Union counties. Dean Salley represented the interests of Florida State College for Women and was a speaker at an assembly of the elementary section He talked on "The Importance of a Teacher's Identifying Herself with the Social Activities of a Community

Dean Salley was a guest of honor at a luncheon given by Miss Sara Olsen, president of the State Class Room Teachers Association and also attended a number of other interesting conferences with Parent-Teacher groups affairs of public interest and import.

Honorary Degree Is Confererd On Owen

"It is my privilege, Mr. President, to present to you Dr. Ruth Bryan Owen, to receive at your hands the degree of doctor of laws."

Mrs. Owen in her address discussed her experiences during her service in Denmark, where she has been at work for two and a half years.

"I stand in the relation of one who is introducing two friends," said Mrs. Owen. "My work is to try to say the word that will produce a happy understanding between the two."

The speaker pointed out the three principal ways through which foreigners form their opinions of America· through the news that appears in the papers, through the motion pictures seen on the screen, and through the lives of Americans in other countries.

Impression of America

In regard to the impression of American life created by newspapers, Mrs. Owen told of a scrapbook which she prepared containing all news from the United States printed in Danish newspapers. Seventy-five per cent of the articles clipped were on the subject of crime.

News about those who are building the United States, not about those who are tearing it down " said Mrs. Owen, "is the type by which we want others to judge America."

In speaking of the effect of moving pictures, Mrs. Owen said that the kind of pictures shown this year in Copenhagen is much improved over that of former years, but that the movies still give inaccurate pictures of crime and home life in the United States.

Mrs. Owen characterized Denmark by saying that it is one of the most advanced countries in the world in respect to education and social legislation. It has the lowest illiteracy percentage of all the nations.

Describes Greenland

Contrasted with Denmark's advancement was her description of the primitive people in the Danish colony Greenland. The island can be visited, said Mrs. Owen, only by representatives of schools, hospitals, churches, and governments No tourists or commercial agents are allowed there.

In closing her address, Mrs Owen told of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the American national park in Denmark, which was given by Danish-born Americans. This event, she said, which took place before an audience of 40,000 and included messages from the Danish king and the American president, was significant in the development of friendly relations between the United States and Denmark.

"America and Denmark," she said, "must draw closer together and go forward to the heights—the essence of the goal of diplomacy"

The convocation began with the procession of seniors and faculty members in formal academic gowns. Miss Margaret Whitney Dow, professor of organ, played as the processional Costa's "Triumphal March from Naaman" from which she modulated into the Danish national anthem.

Faculty Trio Plays

The faculty instrumental trio, composed of Miss Augusta Murphy, violinist, Miss Mary Esther Winslow, pianist, and Mr. Owen Sellers, cellist, played Schubert's "Andante con moto from Second Trio" after Mrs. Owen's address. Meyerbere's "Coronation March" was played by Miss Dow as the recessional.

Among the distinguished visitors on the platform were Secretary of State R. A. Grsy, Attorney-General Cary D. Landis, Comptroller J M. Lee, State Superintendent W S. Cawthon, Oliver Semmes, member of the board of control, and J. P. Newell, secretary to Governor Sholtz.

During the convocation Dr Conradi read to the audience telegrams of congratulation to Mrs. Owen and to the college from George H Baldwin, chairman of the board of control, and Mrs. T. V. Moore, president of the Florida Federation of Woman's clubs.

The degree conferred on Mrs. Owen yesterday was the third honorary degree she has received. She was awarded the doctor of laws degree from Rollins college in 1927 and the degree of doctor of humane letters from Russel Sage college in 1931.

Interclass Hockey And Soccer Games Are Held

Strong competition has been going on this week between the inter-class teams of hockey and soccer, when the two classes meet in combat each afternoon.

The winners of these games challenge other winning class teams until all the games have been played, thus leaving the two strongest teams to play for first place.

Telescope Teams Conduct Studies

Volunteer Physicists Make Observations

Students are showing interest in the study of the heavens, offered for the first time this year in the general physics course, according to Dr H. F. Richards, head of the physics department.

Three teams called physics volunteer telescope teams, have organized from the four classes in general physics. Each of these teams, headed by a captain, conducts telescopic observations of the heavens to which members of the physics classes are invited.

In recent observations the surface features of the moon, the rings of Saturn the Milky Way, and several constellations have been studied. Binoculars, as well as the large and small telescopes belonging to the physics laboratory make detailed work possible.

The three physics volunteer telescope teams and their captains are Betty Hamilton, Mary E. Husson, Martha Lester, Anna M Mitchell, Anne L Pates, Genie Whiteside, Mildred Booth, Cora Cheney, and Frances Lewis, captain. Midelle Moore, Elsie Kersey, Katherine Yongue, Judy Bell, Edith Dickson, Frances Forth, Eugenia Glass, and Catherine McGarry, captain; and Audrey Cooper, Frances Hartley, Helen Walde, Ethel Runyan, Mercedes Garriga, Dorothy Scott, Rosemary Hamly, and Marguerits Sjostrom, captain.

COMMITTEES IN CHARGE

Audrey Farmer, house chairman of Jennie Murphree, wrote the script for the new program. Nettie Taylor is chairman of the finance and program committee, and has appointed several freshmen to work with her. Mis Henrietta Ruth Sivyer, of the Home Economics department, Dimples Turner, and Ann Sams, have charge of costumes. The properties committee is composed of Geneva Stout, Mary Ann Hills and Kathleen Robinson, and Josephine Binion is in charge of the dances

The speech department is assisting by appointing members of the stage craft class to work on lights and make up, and Miss Margaret and Miss Sarah Elizabeth Thompson are the advisors for these committees.

letters from my friends and the bond that seems to exist between the two countries keeps me always in close contact with my country."

She spoke proudly of her family of four, her two sons, her married daughter and her 15-year-old daughter who is in her junior year in a school in New York. This younger daughter has already made up her mind to follow in her mother's footsteps. As soon as she has finished her high school education she will take up the study of law.

Mrs. Owen accompanied by Miss Leila May Jennings, daughter of Bryan Jennings, left by plane for a short trip to Miami and Key West.

She will return to Washington, November 8 where she will be the guest of the President and will confer with him. In order to be back to her post by Christmas Mrs. Owen will set sail on December 7 aboard a special Christmas Scandanavian liner.

"I want to be back in Copenhagen by Christmas, for Danish Christmases are unique in their simple pleasures," she said. Then in her inimitable fashion she concluded the interview with a poem she had composed and which described the festival spirit of Christmas in Denmark. A minute later she was claimed by the photographer.

ised to investigate the matter more fully.

Miss Stewart also met with the religious workers' council, the Presbyterian student council, the Baptist life service band, and the Methodist student council this week and held personal conferences.

She expected to leave today for Gainesville where she will spend two days in conferences with Christian leaders on the University of Florida's campus.

Peace Is Topic For Discussion

ope desired the entrance of the United States because of its wealth, and the American press, which was influenced by the "Morgans" of America who desired war for their own personal gain. The churches, colleges, and social and fraternal clubs also played their part in influencing the susceptible mind of the masses. "If all these sources would combine for peace," Hazel said, "the mass mind wohld inevitably be swayed towards peace.

"International arbitration is one road open to us, and although America regarda the League of Nations as a farce, we must remember that we have helped to make it a farce. Strict neutrality maintained by armaments, which is the present Roosevelt policy, is the other road ope to us. If we are united within our own country we have perhaps attained one objective. Yet it seems cowardly to let Europe fight it out alone If this is our attitude," she concluded, "then civilization has made little progress"

Following the regular program Mary Jeanne presented to the forum a latter sent from NSFA headquarters concerning a national peace mobilization on Nov 8 at 11 o'clock which the NSFA is supporting

In this letter the national committee recommended the formation on each campus of student-faculty mobilization committees thoroughly representative of all campus organizations. Points which students are asked to endorse for the mobilization program are· to support by every means at our disposal genuine neutrality legislation to prevent entanglement of the Unitad States in war—no loans, credits, munitions or secondary war materials to belligerents, to work for the demilitarization of our colleges and schools especially by assuring the passage of the Nye-Kvale bill to make the R.O.T.C. optional instead of compulsory; to insist on opportunities in the curriculum and out for relating our education to these crucial problems; and to refuse to support the government of the United States in any war it may undertake."

The opinion of the several students who expressed themselves at the meeting seemed to be that such a demonstration would be a ridiculous display on the part of the student body of Florida State college.

Members of different sororities are giving jointly these teas which will furnish an opportunity for all students and faculty members to get together in an informal manner and to become better acquainted with each other.

Alumnae Office Dispenses News

The alumnae office has decided to offer former students of Florida State college a different medium of monthly communication. Instead of the monthly bulletin there will be published once each month a section of the Flambeau devoted to alumnae news. This step has been taken for several reasons, but mainly in answer to alumnae's calls for news about the college, as well as information about other alumnae. In this way, too, the undergraduate students may keep apace with activities of the alumnae.

The alumnae office will be anxious to know what its readers think of this new method. Communications will be gratefully received. If the monthly news carried in the Flambeau meets the approval of the alumnae, this means of keeping the alumnae informed may be continued indefinitely.

Alumnae Follow Varied Careers

Letters Show Activities Of FSCW Grads

Extracts taken from letters of F.S.C.W. alumnae written to the alumnae office reveal the many interesting activities engaged in by graduates of the college who are scattered throughout the country.

Of interest to the 1935 graduates is a letter from Mildred Boss of that class who holds a fellowship in the school of retailing of New York university. "I fully intended to write you long before now," Mildred writes, "but the pace of the big city has kept me on the go ever since I arrived. New York university is some school, but as yet I cannot bring myself to think nearly as much of it as I do of Florida State. To me, this is not going to school at all—classes in the morning, working all afternoon, and then trying to study at night, with never a spare moment in which to really live. It just means keeping on your toes every minute and being able to 'take it' at all times—no matter what the 'it' may be.

"There are seventy-six in the class doing store service work and two research fellows. Thirty-seven states and forty-eight colleges are represented in the group, including Canada and Alaska. This class was selected from over 250 applicants and includes some mighty fine young people. We are working in twenty-two stores in New York City, Brooklyn, and Newark New Jersey.

"I'm one of the fifteen placed at Macy's, the world's largest store, and at present I'm learning just what goes on behind the scenes in a typical department store. I'm in the engraving section of the stationery department, and although it means working under tension and strain at all times, I'm enjoying it, also taking advantage of the opportunity to learn a lot.

"A week ago Tuesday I ran into Elise Kendall, '34, on the employees' balcony where she was checking a parcel. She is working in the book department there. She, Emilie Beatty, '34, and Mary Elizabeth Cooley, '35, are living together at King's College club, near Columbia.

"Wednesday, Melvyne Wahnish, '35, walked up to the counter and casually asked to be waited on next. She is living at International House at Columbia, where Dorothy Brenner, sister of Amy Brenner '34, and I called on her Sunday. Then on Thursday Babs (Emilie Beatty '34) came up and fairly screamed, 'Why, Boss, you old so-and-so, how long have you been here?' (You know Babs and how she could say something like that.) She is doing dress designing for some dress manufacturer, but was on a four-day vacation due to a strike among the garment workers at the plant.

"Elizabeth Stout '35, had lunch with me one day about three weeks ago. She was on her way to Washington and has since written that she is selling in the gift and pottery department of Willard and Lothrop's, one of their finer department stores. I expect to visit her some week-end when I can find the time to do so."

A letter from Mrs. John W. Chapman, mother of Carrie Ethelyn (Shorty) Chapman '28, states that "Shorty" was employed two years in the laboratory at the Massachusetts General hospital: entered Tufts Medical school, Boston, September 1930, graduated with the M. D. degree in June, 1934, served her internship at the State infirmary at Tewksburg where she is now serving as one of the resident physicians.

Ann Hendry of the class of '35 writes from Cottondale where she

HOMECOMING INVITATION EXTENDED TO PARENTS AND ALUMNAE BY DR. CONRADI

Homecoming is one of the most inspirational occasions on our college compus. Fothers and mothers and alumnae know that they are always welcome here at the college, hnt for this annual home-coming I wish to extend to yon all a special welcome. Your loyalty and cooperation and good-will toward the ideals of the college is an inspiration to every one here on the campus, including faculty and students and all other officials of the college, for this loyalty expressed in terms of life is the best evidence that the college is succeeding as a builder of life.

All experience will express itself in terms of life, and education from the kindergarten through the university is only enriched experience which will express itself in terms of life; yes—real education will express itself in the finer human touch which in its essence is the love of God expressed in every-day life. So here is the choicest special welcome to you all—the most cordial greetings await you November 27-30.

EDWARD CONRADI, President.

Alumnae Office to Instigate Search For 300 Old Grads

Laura Strunk Leslie Solicits Assistance in Solving Mysterious Disappearance of Former Florida State Students

A search for the whereabouts of some 300 graduates of Florida State College for Women, who over a period of five years have gradually disappeared leaving no address, was begun here today when Mrs. R. E. Leslie, alumnae secretary, gave to the press the names of the missing alumnae.

Co-operation of all alumnae and college students was asked by Mrs. Leslie in finding the "lost alumnae of Florida State College for Women." "We need to know where our alumnae are located," Mrs. Leslie said, "in order that we might inform them from time to time of the growth and advancement of the college, and the activities of the alumnae association. We also like to have the correct addresses of our alumnae on file for frequently we have calls from their friends in various parts of the country asking for such information as their married name, occupation, address, and family."

In giving the list of "lost alumnae" to the press, Mrs. Leslie asked that any alumna or student knowing the correct address of any of the "missing" communicate with her at once at the alumnae office.

Among the alumnae whose names have been placed on the missing list are: Melba Mathison, Lillie Bates (Mrs. Frank Coles) '06, America Pillans (Mrs. J. R. Durrance) '08, Estelle Bullock '09, Mrs. Rhylla Adams Baily '10, Marcella McLean (Mrs. S M. Matthews) '10, Margaret Burkhardt '12, Anne Bouchelle '13, Alberta Arnold (Mrs. H. H. Hogan), Claire Brodnax, Ruby Byrd (Mrs. C. L. Hardwick), Sue Hunter (Mrs. R. E. Fairbanks), all of the class of 1914: Laura Chapman, Lude Fryer, and Geneva Moseley (Mrs. Wakefield Ramsdell), of the class of 1915; Hazel Hough '16; Elizabeth Clayton, Enna G. Hothan (Mrs. Enna H. Tomb), Beatrix McMasters (Mrs. E. M. James), Mary Emily Wilcox, and Miss Mattie Mae Williford, of the class of 1917: Myrtle Alexander, Mary Emily Babcock (Mrs. N. M. Hopkins), Dorothy Davies (Mrs. E. B. Gladson), and Lillian Thomason (Mrs. O. D. Settle Is Head of Homecoming

To Fete Alumnae at Camp; Odd-Even Games And Demonstrations

A number of innovations in the Homecoming calendar of this year are being planned by the college Homecoming committee, headed by Miss Mary Settle, instructor in physical education.

One of the outstanding changes in the routine of previous years is the issuing of tickets for the Odd and Even demonstrations. Due to the increased enrollment of the college and the limited seating capacity of the auditorium it is necessary to request that everyone wishing to attend one or both of these annual performances have a ticket. Alumnae will receive their tickets at the various registration tables.

In view of the fact that in the past years alumnae returning for the Thanksgiving festivities have been unable to obtain seats for the events on the program, seats will be reserved for them at both of the demonstrations and at the games.

In order to enable alumnae to meet each other and exchange experiences a "Meet the Alumnae" has been planned which will take place in the college gymnasium following the games. This will take the place of the water pageant formerly held in the college swimming pool. The plans for this feature are not as yet complete, but it promises to be most interesting.

In past years one of the main events on the alumnae Homecoming calendar was the Alumnae luncheon at one of the tea rooms. This year this luncheon is being replaced by an informal faculty-alumnae get-together at Camp Flastacowo Friday afternoon. This will enable faculty members and alumnae to renew acquaintances and visit together. Transportation will be furnished for all alumnae wishing to go.

Alumnae are asked to come prepared to stay through Saturday if possible, as many events, including a dance in the college gymnasium, are being planned for the week-end.

As the program for Homecoming is still in a tentative state, alumnae returning for the festivities are requested to get a copy of the completed program immediately upon their arrival from one of the registration tables which will be placed in the alumnae office, Bryan hall, the Administration building, and the gymnasium.

One hundred Thanksgiving dinner tickets for alumnae will go on sale November 15 in the alumnae office. Alumnae wishing to have dinner in the dining hall are requested to write for their reservations before November 12.

The tentative program for Homecoming now stands as follows:

Wednesday, November 27:
7:00 a. m.—Color rush.
8:15 p. m.—Demonstration.
Thursday, November 28:
8.30 a. m.—Y.W.C.A. service in auditorium.
10·00 a. m.—Athletic events.
12:00 m. —"Meet our Alumnae" in gym.
2·00 p. m.—Thanksgiving dinner.
3:30 p. m.—After-dinner coffee in Bryan hall

Open house in sorority houses and dormitories during the evening.

Richardson Urges Alumnae To Make Contributions To Library

To Our Alumnae:

We hear much nowadays of preserving records of Florida history. It is high time that definite steps were being taken in Florida to keep such records in Florida, and especially in fireproof buildings. Records are of many kinds: letters, diaries, newspapers, maps, books, pamphlets, government publications of all kinds, magazines, pictures, etc. Often these are burned or thrown away because they seem only dust-catchers and of no value. Alumnae of Florida State College may have some of these things, yet they may never have thought of giving them to the college library. This open letter to the alumnae, wherever they may be, is an urgent invitation to give records of whatever kind you have or can get to your Alma Mater.

From alumnae the library has already received much. Besides class gifts of books and furniture, the following have been given and are both interesting and valuable: Key West newspaper, 1838; diplomas of the college, 1885 and 1905; copies of the Flambeau, 1915, 1921, 1922 and 1923; volumes of the Talisman (predecessor to the Distaff); pictures of College avenue before 1915, a College Government association handbook of 1821-1922; the speech of the Hon. N. P. Bryan delivered Sept. 27, 1906, upon the occasion of the opening of the University of Florida; a number of bills of sale at the Port of St. Marks; a time book of El Destino plantation, and a Florida Times-Union, 1690 (one issue.)

Such are examples of what you may have or find. They are of value to the college if not to you May we have them? There are surely others of the alumnae who have something to add to the above gifts.

In March, 1935, the University of North Carolina began a "loyalty contest" among its alumnae, this loyalty to be manifested by gifts to the university. Among the dozen needs listed was $10,000.00 for a browsing room for the library. Florida State college has a lovely browsing room, furnished throughout by the classes of 1929 and 1932 and filled with delightful books given by alumnae and the Carnegie corporation of New York. In this we are fortunate.

In September this year a friend of the University of Michigan gave $5,000,000.00 to the university. Such huge gifts as this are beyond most of us but let us remember that it does not take a big gift to be an important gift and a valuable addition to the library. The old college catalogue, the stray copy of the Talisman, or an old book or newspaper may be of much value to students at the college and to others who come to use the library.

The class of 1935 at Pennsylvania State college gave $4,500.00 to start an endowment with which to buy books for the library of the college. No one of us may have such a sum to give but just one book, one pamphlet, one either about Florida or some other part of the country may enrich the resources of Florida State College for Women.

Throughout the country a movement has been afoot for several years among some colleges and their alumnae which as developed into what is now known as "Friends of the Library" Princeton university, the University of North Carolina and several others are receiving many gifts of money, books, magazines, newspapers, etc., from their alumnae. As yet our alumnae have not organized as friends of the library. Organization is not necessary to be a friend to the library. Look in your attic, your storeroom bookcase or safety box; find the old record you would like to give and see preserved, and give it to Florida State college library for safekeeping Alumnae probably have more to give than they realize.

More than a few people in Florida have collections of one sort and another which they hope to see preserved. There are still scattered here and there many valuable books and papers on Florida A service which alumnae can render is to keep their "ears to the ground" for news of Florida material or other valuable records, notify the library of such, or better still, get and give such to the college. These records should be kept in the state, yet every year other institutions have men who come to Florida and take away this material for libraries far removed from Florida. Our library is equipped to take care of whatever you have to give. It values your contribution to the college and your effort to preserve records of our state's history.—Louise Richardson, librarian.

Alumnae Office Records Births

Births of a number of "FSCW babies" have been recorded in the alumnae office during the summer and fall months. Among the babies is a set of twins born to Mrs. L. G. Thomas (Ruth Gray, '28) of Madison Barracks, Sackeyt Harbor, New York, on March 15, 1935.

Other F.S.C.W. alumnae for whom births have been recorded are as follows:

Mrs. Jess Smith (Sallie Folsom, '24) of Haines City, a daughter, September 12, 1934. Sallie also has a son who was born December 24, 1932.

Mrs. W. K. Mitchell (Mary E. Haslinger '29) of Gainesville, a daughter, Mary Elizabeth, March 30, 1935.

Mrs. Russell B. Coover (Jocis Lee Maddrey, '26), Apt. 103 No. 15, 33th St., Irvington, N. J., a daughter, Elaine Roberta, April 23, 1935.

Mrs. Harold W Gould (Carol Crouch '29), a son, Robert Clark Gould, January 7 1935.

Mrs. M. W. Cressler (Hazel Dyer '22), 1040 Lark St., Jacksonville, a daughter, Martha Ann, December 10, 1934.

Mrs. Marshall M. DeWitt (Jeannette Butts '29) of Delray Beach, a son, William Manley DeWitt, September 12, 1935.

Mrs. Maude Adams Powell (Maude Adams '23) of Brewster, a daughter, Mildred Janet, August 20, 1934.

Mrs. Norman Vissering (Nancy Cotter '29) of Babson Park, a son, Norman Harry, June 25, 1935. Nancy's daughter, Elizabeth Louise, celebrated her third birthday on May 25.

Mrs. S. Gracen Smith (Maxine Buford '31), 1211 E. Concord St., Orlando, a second son, Joe Rivers Smith, October 18, 1934. Maxine's first son, Gracen Smith, Jr., was born May 6, 1933.

Mrs. T. H. Wallis (Clara Johnson, '24) of Ocala, a daughter, September 1935.

Mrs. Oscar Lee DuBose (Frances Woodward, '20) of Vero Beach, a third child, James Fred DuBose, May 20, 1934. Frances' other children are Robert, born December 21, 1927, and Elizabeth who was born December 16, 1923.

Mrs. James E. Adkison (Frances Hubert, '33) of LaBelle, a daughter, Mary Leila, September 20, 1934.

Mrs. W. P. Jernigan (Amanda Folsom, '25) of Canal Point, a daughter, Mary Eleanor, December 18, 1934 William Henry Jernigan was born October 30, 1931.

Mrs. William Harper Davidson, (Alice Cullen, '28), 1131 Obispo Ave., Coral Gables, a son, William Harper Davidson, Jr., September 11, 1934. Miriam Alice Davidson was born March 3, 1931.

Mrs. John S Clardy (Frances Christian '23) 1552 S. W., 2nd St., Miami, a daughter, Jane Clardy, February 26, 1935.

Mrs. J. Willard Smith (Lola Belle Skipper, '26) of Williston, a son, James Willard Smith, Jr., October 8, 1932.

Mrs. J. Dan English (Alice Malakowsky, '30) of Alva, a son, James Daniel, September 15, 1935.

Homecoming to Be Celebrated

Ninth Annual Gathering Of Alumnae Will Be November 27-30

Florida State College for Women will observe its ninth annual homecoming for alumnae and parents of students, November 27-30, according to a recent announcement from President Edward Conradi. Miss Mary Settle, instructor in physical education and former F. S. C. W. student leader, was named by President Conradi as general chairman of this year's homecoming celebration.

The general committee directly in charge of homecoming includes three sub-committees consisting of seven members of the college faculty, five Tallahassee alumnae, and four representatives of the student body. Heads of these committees appointed by Dr. Conradi are: Miss Rowena Longmire, associate professor of English and chairman of the faculty committee on co-operation with the alumnae, the faculty committee; Miss Florence Tryon, critic teacher and instructor in education, the alumnae committee, and Miss Dorothy Leach of Tampa, the student committee consisting of representatives from Mortar Board, senior honorary society.

In addition, a state-at-large committee, headed by Miss Anna Mae Sikes of Tallahassee, vice-president of the Alumnae association, and comprised of 50 alumnae leaders throughout the state has been appointed by Mrs. E. L. Beeson of Groveland, alumnae president.

Members of the faculty committee chosen to assist with the program include: Miss Rowena Longmire, chairman; Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of students: Miss Flavia Gleason, State home demonstration agent; Miss Louise Richardson, college librarian; Miss Ruth Schornherst, instructor in botany; Miss Anna Mae Tracy, dietitian and associate professor of institution economics, and Mrs. R. E. Leslie, alumnae secretary.

Tallahassee alumnae committee: Miss Florence Tryon, chairman, Miss Helen Smith, Miss Mary Schornherst, Mrs. A. L. West, and Mrs. Pearl Hentz Beverly.

Student committee: Miss Dorothy Leach, Tampa, chairman; Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, Ft. Lauderdale: Miss Sarah Krentzman, Milton, and Miss Gertrude Kuhn, Bartow.

State-at-large alumnae committee: Florida State College alumnae club representatives: Mrs. J. W. McCollum, Mrs. Burton Ames, Gainesville, Alachua county club; Miss Elizabeth Tribble, Ft. Lauderdale, Broward county club; Mrs. C. H. Summers, Jr., Lakeland, Polk county club: Miss Dorothy Feinberg, Quincy, Gadsden county club; Miss Antoinette Guentner, Lake Worth, Palm Beach county club: Miss Maud McCall, Clearwater club; Mrs. Alto Adams, Ft. Pierce club Miss Mildred Greene, Jacksonville club: Mrs. Neil Knowles, Key West club: Mrs. Charles M. Fisher, Miami club: Miss Anne Battillo, New Smyrna club; Miss Arabella Joyner, Panama City club: Miss Marjorie Macwey, Pensacola club; Mrs. R. G. Williams, Sanford club; Miss Carleen Vinal, St. Petersburg Club; and Miss Margaret Boyle, Tampa club.

Florida State Salutes First Woman Diplomat

This week Florida honors one who is perhaps her most prominent daughter, with the presenting to Ruth Bryan Owen the first honorary degree of Doctor of Laws that its state college has ever given.

Assembled in formal convocation the faculty and student body of the college, and guests including the governor of the state, his cabinet, and many state leaders, heard Mrs. Owen speak on her colorful life as minister to Denmark, before she received the degree.

"Because you have always held the torch of human endeavor in the front line of progress . . .," Dr. Condrai began the ceremony of bestowal, enumerating in his presentation address Mrs. Owen's manifold activities as a writer, lecturer, educator, government official, and a citizen.

Students here will long remember America's first woman diplomat, not only for her services as congresswoman from this state, not only for her generously conceived and carried out "good citizenship" tours which she gave to hundreds of Florida's high school students, but also for her former visits to our campus, while the memory of our earlier glimpses at first hand of so distinguished a Floridian is now supplemented and made lasting by this recognition of her brilliant devotion to affairs of public interest and import, as we have witnessed the conferring of her degree.

Pep versus Purpose Class versus College

College spirit at Florida State College for Women finds no expression in football, or in cheering oneself hoarse on an inter-collegiate field. College spirit here is built upon class unity—more truly than that of any college which finds outlet for its bubbling-over "pep" on the athletic field. Expression of pride in our own college—the strength—the spontaneity of that expression, depends upon the material of its foundation, not upon spectacular exhibition.

With the possible exception of opinion in the freshman class, feeling is more or less prevalent on campus that our "spirit" is not all that it should be. In an institution such as ours, where the typical concept of college life as the rah-rah age does not apply, lack of college pride can undoubtedly be traced to non-cooperation among the classes. The present very gradual but none the less evident movement for abolition of some of F. S. C.'s 'outworn' customs, such as Fealty, Torch Night, and their ceremonial like is not of necessity significant of loss of contact or absence of cooperative feeling among the classes.

However now while the school year is yet young is the time to take inventory of attitudes. October and November are outstanding months in the college year for promotion of projects by the classes as groups. If our ceremonies are outworn, the spirit underlying them is by no means obsolete. Rather, let us say that in eliminating the display of the uniting of the classes, we are recognizing the bigness of the college life. We are broadening our horizons—catching a glimpse of the whole rather than units of that whole. Class pride and responsibility to our sister classes have become secondary to the possession of a genuine college spirit.

Is Peace Obtained By War-Time Methods?

Two weeks ago a call went out to the universities, colleges, and high schools of the United States asking them to participate in a nation-wide mobilization against war.

National organizations issuing this call to their branch clubs were the Young Men's Christian association, the Young Women's Christian association, the Student League for Industrial Democracy, the National Student league, Committee on Militarism in Education, the American League Against War and Fascism, the Interseminary movement (Middle Atlantic division), the American Youth congress, the Intercollegiate council, and the National Student Federation of America. The resolutions which all students were asked to incorporate into their opposition-to-war statements are as follows:

"To support by every means at our disposal genuine neutrality legislation to prevent entanglement of the United States in war—no loans, credits, munitions, or secondary war materials to belligerents; to work for the demilitarization of our colleges and schools especially by assuring the passage of the Nye-Kvale bill to make the R. O. T. C. optional instead of compulsory; to insist on opportunities in the curriculum and out for relating our education to these crucial problems; and to refuse to support the government of the United States in any war is may undertake."

The Florida State college YWCA promptly put its veto on the whole mobilization idea and declared that it did not support the resolutions as set forth, being particularly in disapproval of the last one.

Various students in official student-body positions likewise did not hesitate to make known their opposition to the mobilization program, saying that to them it appeared a rather childish way in which to show the local student-body's desire for peace.

The local forum of the NSFA, which had also received a call to enter the movement, presented the program suggested by its national headquarters at its meeting Wednesday night and although attendance at this meeting was small and no vote on the feeling of the group was taken the open discussion on the matter showed quite definitely that the group present did not consider parades or other mobilization acts as being very effective in procuring peace.

Many of those present were able to point to the ridiculous mistakes made by schools taking part in the strike of last April 12. It was pointed out that although many of these demonstrations were well-planned others ended in riots.

The peace movement this year has taken on a little less of the soap-box atmosphere and all peace programs are supposed to be sponsored by a faculty-student committee with student speakers predominating in the meetings held. But the plans also call for a parade through the locality where each college is situated.

How many students will sanction the entire movement by joining such peace parades? And how many will be able to look that last clause of the resolutions squarely in the face and say "I will NOT support the United States in any war it may undertake?" American ideals and traditions are too deeply inbred to be crossed out by a mere resolution.

If the concensus of opinion on this campus, therefore, be in opposition to mobilization, shall we necessarily ignore the whole peace movement? It has been suggested that the student speakers who made talks on peace at the last meeting of NSFA be asked along with other speakers to address the entire student body at a regular convocation program.

—Hazel Bowman.

At Ohio State university when students were queried as to the most desirable qualities girls should possess the upperclass women demanded next to good family, good morals. The freshmen, however, voted good morals into fourteenth place putting good social traits as the most desirable qualities and offensive personal habits, the worst. At least we see that college training does something to us!

CONVERSATION AT MIDNIGHT
By [illegible]
Har[illegible]35

Conflicting religious, political and social ideas of noteworthy types of men in American life today are revealed in these fourteen poems from a sequence featured in the current Harpers.

Miss Millay tells us the poetry is merely conversation that arises naturally among men at a stag party, but we find the "mere conversation" is of those things we so seldom talk about.

Brilliantly sketched are the priest who asks men not to leave Jesus out of religion, the young man tormented by love, the social and material-minded stock broker who wants culture, the young communist who cannot withhold his impatience for change and his hatred of capitalists, the sensitive mystic Latin who is willing to lend someone his coat but not to share it with the mob, and the young portrait painter who, envying the priest's faith, wonders if the individual is master or only a cog of the wheel.

Miss Millay neither moralizes nor reaches any conclusions. She merely records these characters and ideas as she sees them in life in the manner, as one campus professor has said, of Chaucer.

NOTES ON BEING A WIDOW
By Marjory Gane Harkness
Atlantic Monthly, November, 1935

In describing her own reactions on becoming a widow, Mrs. Harkness reveals her determination not to become like nearly all other widows, that is, self-important with the title of widow, and lapsing into a bore to society in refusing to endure "aloneness."

The psychological change comes when the widow begins to realize she can no longer impart every little thing to her husband. And to impart is woman's pressing need, Mrs Harkness adds. It is like starting to lean on one's right arm and suddenly remembering it is gone.

The writer resents the way people start talking of the deceased as an historical saint the minute after the coffin is lowered. She says she liked to talk about her husband's faults and opinions just as though he were sitting in the group, but friends became hushed and solemn at the mention of his name and expected her to, also.

Mrs. Harkness advises widows not to wait too long "getting their bearings," and thereby falling into self-pity or retrospect. While there is some flexibility left, let her take "aloneness and learn its ways," the writer says, as she herself is attempting to do. Eventually there will be not a palace but "a homely hut or a remodeled cottage of her own contriving, where, though there may be solitude, there will be at least a tiny hearth and a cup of tea."

THE DECLINE OF OUR PROLETARIAT
By L. M. Hussey
American History, November, 1935

Communism has become fashionable, especially among adolescent intellectuals and half-educated club women, Hussey declares, because would-be communists think the proletariat is increasing.

They continue to think the time will come when protelariat will rise up and master the capitalistic regime while on the contrary, figures indicate, Hussey writes, that the proletariat is definitely on the wane.

The percentage of unskilled workmen between 1910 and 1930 has declined, Hussey says, while the percentage of people handling products and giving professional services slightly increased.

Machinery has brought about none of the simple direct consequences Marx predicted, according to Hussey, without bringing unforeseen complications also. If current dole-takers of the New Deal administration do not pass, we might consider them a sort of special proletariat. However employment will return he concludes, and remove a greater number from the ranks of unskilled workers so that the decline of the proletariat will move faster and faster.

Two Florida Artists Hold Exhibition Here

Four paintings done by Florida artists under the direction of Mrs. Walter Pliny Fuller of St. Petersburg who is director of the Florida Art Project a division of the FERA, will make up the exhibit in the art browsing room in the Administration building this Friday.

Remembered From Spring, an oil painting of a farm landscape was done by Buford Mecklin from Milton, Florida. Three paintings by James T. Morris of St. Augustine are also to be included. One of these House Grouping, is an oil painting of a number of frame houses in a group.

Spirit of the Week . . . . By Adams

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

By CLOTILDE O'ROURKE

LATEST reports from official circles state that French and British army, navy, and air leaders are planning full war-time co-operation in the Mediterranean against Italy.

In the meanwhile, the League of Nations boycott is slowly tightening as twenty-nine nations agreed this week to buy nothing from the Fascist state. By a slow grinding process of isolation the League hopes to reduce Mussolini's capacity to wage war on Ethiopia and force him to sue for peace. Thirty-nine countries have agreed to apply an arms embargo and thirty-two have pledged their readiness to apply financial sanctions.

In a message to the League committee on co-ordination, the United States declared its official approval of the League's efforts to enforce peace but declined to be made a direct party to them.

IN THE meantime, Il Duce has placed Italy on a six-month diet as a first step in his fight against the sanctions. A measure which will go into effect Monday restricts the sale of meats so as to reduce the necessity of imports. Sales will be forbidden on Tuesdays and limited on Wednesdays. Restaurants may not serve more than one meat or fish at any meal.

Mussolini's decision to act before economic sanctions have been imposed is interpreted as a settled determination to oppose them.

ON MONDAY, Italy celebrated the thirteenth anniversary of the Fascist march on Rome. It is reported that Italy saluted the fourteenth year of the regime "with a war-like spirit and flags unfurled." Il Duce took the opportunity to denounce the League's boycott as "an odious injustice." "Italy," he declared "will long remember such actions and, in the future be able to distinguish between friend and foe."

GREAT BRITAIN recently issued invitations to the United States, France, Italy and Japan to a naval conference in London on December 2. The Washington and London naval treaties expire December 31, 1936 and something must be done if unlimited construction is not to follow. If the new conference makes any progress, Germany and Russia will be called in.

Naval authorities here and abroad predict that reduction of armaments will be an unlikely outcome of the conference due to a recent degeneration in international relations and the threat of war. At present the United States is building or has appropriated money for eighty-four warships, Great Britain has plans for fifty, Germany for forty-eight, France forty-two, Japan forty, and Italy thirty-three.

The conference has a weighty problem to cope with and many aims to reconcile, if it is to be successful.

THE disturbance caused by Carlton Nichols, jr., 8, when he refused to salute the flag has taken on serious developments. The Massachusetts supreme court is in session this week to decide whether a student in a public school may be expelled for refusal to salute the national ensign. The decision will apply not only to young Nichols but also to a controversy in several sections of the state where children of a religious sect known as Jehovah's Witnesses have declined on religious grounds to salute the flag and have been expelled for their refusal.

The petition to the supreme court demanding reinstatement of young Nichols also refers to the twenty-five dollar fine imposed on the boy's father and Edward Holten James, Concord lawyer who likewise refused to salute the flag at the opening exercises of the Breed school in Lynn on September 30.

THE most important political date so far as Washington is concerned is November 3. On that day Father Coughlin returns to radio. Paul Mallon, columnist, reports that "politicos from both parties will have their ears almost glued to the microphone to hear whether the radio priest is going to be pro or anti-New Deal."

"Present indications are that he has come back on the Roosevelt bandwagon."

"Whatever he says, he is going to tell it to a lot more people this winter"—meaning that Caughlin has extended his radio network across the Mississippi to include stations in Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, Denver and San Francisco.

THE supreme court has a new device for keeping the audience awake during sessions. Two attendants at flanking the bench of the justices. Whenever anyone falls asleep in the audience they look at each other, arise, go over to the culprit and nudge him. The experiment was made on a government attorney the other day who responded with a surprised "umf" which momentarily disturbed the dignity of the attendants as well as everyone else.

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

THE ETHIOPIAN WAR—AN EXCELLENT PROJECT

Mussolini is to be commended. Nobody else would think of a war to settle the problems Il Duce has.

A war in Ethiopia doesn't amount to much. If the Italians should win, their loot would be a bit of fertile African land and a coastal strip of doubtful value. But while they are losing—now there's the point.

Italy is over-populated, struggling to get along in restricted territory. Not that additional land in Ethiopia would alleviate the condition so much—but a war certainly will.

There's nothing like a good war to reduce the population without any harmful psychological opposition. A famine or plague, for instance, would be effective but they would depress the remaining natives. Birth control, of course, would conflict with their moral ideas, infanticide likewise. But a war—ah, that's the idea. Fill 'em with the ideals of imperialism, make 'em think they'll all be heroes. Then send them into the deserts and mountains where their demise won't be unpleasant for the home folks.

It's expensive, but its effective. And the peasants don't mind spending the money when they can be heroes through it. When the slaughter is over the Italians will chalk up a few more records of their valor in history. And news of Italy will be world news.

Yes, it's magnificent. Old Jonathan Swift, who proposed making roasts of the excess children of over-populated Ireland, was only a piker compared with Mussolini.—Michigan State News.

SOCRATS RECOGNIZED IT—AND THEY CALLED HIM A DEFILER OF YOUTH'

American universities are swinging back into the routine of formal education amid the reverberations from recent attacks on academic freedom. At Chicago there was the legislative investigation of 'Red' teaching. And at Omaha there was the suicide of President Sealock following his dismissal, after a controversy with officials of the Nebraska Power and Light company.

The president of the power company, it seems, took offense at the teachings of the professors. President Sealock had maintained that it is necessary for a university to discuss current economic phenomena. "A university," says President Coffman, "never leads a crusade for anything except the right to learn." President Hutchins of Chicago says a university exists only to find and communicate truth.

It is often difficult to define truth, but it seems clear that a university, to give students the opportunity to learn the truth, must explore both sides to any question, must discuss half-truths and even falsehood. Socrates recognized this fact, discussed communism, and was caled a defiler of youth. So today are some universities called defilers of youth.

Samuel Capen, of the University of Buffalo, has said that one of the duties of a university is to interpret and advance the fundamental purposes and ideas of the existing social order. That does not mean rigidly adhering to the status quo. It means educating students in the spirit of the state, which in democracy, is open-mindedness, freedom of inquiry and discussion. That is the way progress occurs in a democracy.

American universities, then, are performing one of their true functions when they teach "Americanism," which properly means the freedom to think and speak for the common good, not blind conformity to an established pattern of thinking.

Those that would trammel free discussion in American universities and thus seek to protect the constitution by violating the first article in its bill of rights are therefore invading the prerogative of students to learn of universities to teach truth and further the spirit of Americanism. The university is one of the chief agencies protecting democracy, and the price of democracy is freedom of discussion.—Minn. Daily.

Campuside Adds Unique Pets To Rare Menagerie

Refined Lizards Provide Constant Amusement For Students

Two rather distinctive "pets" have been added to F.S.C.W.'s "zoo" of gingham dogs, calico cats, pink elephants, deer mice, and scotties. Campuside, an off-campus house, is the proud possessor of two refined members of the lizard family. Not having been able to ascertain the exact status of their pets in the lizard family, the girls at Campuside call them simply "Henry" and "Oscar."

Henry was the first to make his appearance about a week ago. Oscar, whom the girls declare is a very "timid soul," was finally coaxed out into the open a couple of days later. When Henry first came scaling up the wire which encloses the porch used for a smoking-room, he was a lovely shade of green but since that time he has changed colors quite frequently. He is by far the friendliest of the two and can be seen chasing flies and crawling up and down the screen practically all the time. Reserved Oscar is either a trifle scared or just doesn't care to associate with college girls. He is rarely seen, and when he does appear he is quite careful to stay aloof from both Henry and the girls.

Henry and Oscar afford the girls quite a bit of pleasure. The girls declare that they had rather see Henry puff up and blow at them than to see a circus. Henry has taken quite a liking to cigarette smoke and will slip along comfortably if someone blows smoke at him, but Oscar immediately starts for other parts at the mere suggestion of a cigarette.

Both "lizards" seem to have become very attached to the girls and the porch at Campuside,—at any rate, they're still there!

Delta Zeta Stars to Shine for Pledges at First Night

A Hollywood premiere "First Night" will be the theme of the moving picture party with which the pledges of the Delta Zeta sorority will entertain the pledges of the other sororities on campus in their chapter house on west College avenue tonight at 9:30 o'clock

The rooms of the house will be decorated to represent a theater with stars studding the ceiling. A microphone into which the celebraties will speak to their "publics" will be set up in one part of the room.

A prize will be awarded by a committee of five judges for the best costume as the guests have been requested to come dressed as movie stars.

A Jimmie Durante contest will be held in which the participants will be blindfolded and led to a picture of that star on whom they are to pin a nose.

During the evening the hostesses will provide other entertainment. Hasel Hendry, dressed as Myrna Loy, will give several piano selections. Helen Burns Jones, representing Irene Dunne, will sing "You Are My Lucky Star," and "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." Margery Jones will give a recitation dressed as Zasu Pitts.

Following the games and contests the guests will be served from a novel bar by soda jerkers. Refreshments will include punch and cookies.

Hostesses for this affair will be Edith Atkinson, Emily Bush, Helen Burns Jones, Margery Jones, and Hazel Hendry.

Beta Phi Alpha Will Observe Hallowe'en

Members and friends of Beta Phi Alpha sorority will be entertained with a Hallowe'en party, Saturday night at 8:30. The house will be appropriately decorated in Hallowe'en colors. The evening's program will consist of games, dancing, bobbing for apples, and other contests. Refreshments of doughnuts and coffee will be served.

Architect Goes To Conventions

Mendenhall Sets National Project in Motion

Mr. H. G. Mendenhall, college architect, returned on Sunday, from a two weeks trip during which he attended three fall meetings of engineering societies in Birmingham, Alabama, and Columbus, Ohio.

The first meeting attended in Birmingham was thet of the American Society of Civil Engineers, of which Mr. Mendenhall is a past director, having been a contact man for the engineering college at the University of Florida, a board member of the society, and a director of this district which reperesents ten southern states. There is an examining board from thirty-five states, each board having a national council. "Quite outstanding in the meeting, which was the most interesting of its kind in the country,' said Mr. Mendenhall, 'were the lectures by Dr. Arthur Morgan, of Tennessee University, and Dr. Dyer of Vanderbilt, important to me because they represented the reclaiming of the entire Tennessee Valley, on the part of Dr. Morgan, and the steel industries of the Birmingham district, who are desirous of putting a railroad through the Tennessee Valley.

The second meeting, in Columbus, Ohio, was thet of the National Council of State Boards of Engineering Examiners, at which Mr. Mendenhall contacted engineers and professors of engineering of the principal universities of twenty-five states. The major discussion at the national council was Mr. Mendenhall's presentation of a report and recommendation of reciprocal procedure of the states for operation of a national bureau of engineering registration, due to the failure of individual registration bureaus for engineers of each state. Mr. Mendenhall has offered a solution to the situation. "I appointed a committee from several states and with their aid I accumulated a vast amount of information. The committees recommendations were accepted and the procedure adopted by all the engineers of the nation. It remains to be seen if this project will work successfully.

In regard to campus improvements, Mr. Mendenhall, being in charge of all architectural projects, states that the "white-way system" of the campus is being increased. "Thirty new lights will be added, extending in one direction from Gilchrist to Call street by way of the gymnasium and in the other direction from Jennie Murphree to Call street by way of the demonstration school." The installation is being started Thursday, October 31, and will take about three weeks.

"While in Marianna the other day I saw Mrs Middlebrooks. She is the only member of our graduating class I have seen since coming tu Cottondale. In case you don't remember who she was, her name used to be Rachel McKinnon. Her husband is connected with the Industrial school there."

Clementine Newman '32 who received the master's degree from Syracuse university this past June is now head of Wales hall, Stephens college, Columbia, Missouri. She writes: "Did you know that Emma Spencer '28, is teaching in the physical education department here at Stephens? We were greatly surprised and pleased to find ourselves on the same campus. I'm getting a great deal of pleasure out of my work. In some ways it's rather nerve-racking to be responsible for a hundred and fifty girls—but in others it's a sort of exciting adventure, with the unexpected always rushing around corners into you."

A recent post card received from Adamary Anderson '30, states, "Arrived September 13 to teach in Chistobal high school, Canal Zone."

From New York comes a letter from Helen Frances Langsloy '28 (Mrs. L. H. Amundsen). Helen says, "Well, as you see, I'm a long, long way from dear old Tally. I did regret leaving Florida deeply, too, but being the wife of a college instructor is as roaming a 'duty' as that of a minister, I think. Nevertheless, we like it up here. Adelphi college where my husband is teaching, is one dream of beauty, and ranks high scholastically. I'm a substitute secretary to one of the editors for Doubleday, Doran and company here, and is the work interesting. One gets to know so very much of the little curious incidents in the lives of such authors as Sinclair Lewis, Selma Lagerlof, Ray Stannard Baker, etc., etc., endlessly."

Church Groups Plan Activities

Parties, Council Meetings To Be on Program

On the calendar of the religious groups for the coming week are found parties, council meetings, a leadership training course, and a week-end trip to camp.

Dr. David Briggs will lead the Presbyterian young people's group in a leadership training course, beginning Thursday night at 7:30, the theme of which will be "New Trails for Christian Teachers."

A party of Episcopal students have planned a week-end trip to Camp Flastacowo. They will leave Saturday afternoon, returning early Monday morning.

After-dinner coffee will be served at Ruge hall, Friday evening at 7:30 for Episcopal students and their friends.

Miss Winnie Lee Davis has recently returned from a conference at the University of Mississippi in Oxford, Miss. This conference was the tenth of its kind to be held. Seventeen colleges were represented, with a total delegation of one hundred and thirty-eight. The program opened with a banquet Friday evening, impromptu entertainment following the banquet. Saturday morning Dr. Leroy Leonkei, guest speaker from Emory University, addressed the group, carrying out the general theme of the conference, "Christian Students in Action." Interest groups of one and one-half hour periods were held. Miss Davis was leader of two of these groups on the topic "Shgring the Christian Experience." The conference was closed Sunday morning with a sermon by Dr. J. L. Decell.

The local Epworth league and college group will be entertained with a Halloween party Friday night at 6:15. Immediately following the party, an important council meeting will be held.

Miss Katherine McGarry, assisted by Clotilde O'Rourke, will lead the Newman club meeting Sunday night. The topic for discussion will be "sterilization." At this time, plans will be made for the Federation of Catholic clubs convention, which will be held here in Tallahassee next spring.

Classical Honorary To Conduct Essay Contest

A contest is being conducted in all the high schools of Florida by the Florida State college chapter of Eta Sigma Phi, national classical honorary, in connection with its celebration of the bimillenium of Horace.

The contest, according to Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, president of the chapter, is divided into two groups. The ninth and tenth grade students are to submit papers, 500 to 800 words in length, on the subject "Horace, the Poet." Eleventh and twelfth grade students will submit metrical versions of Horace's ode "Fons Bandusiae."

In each division the student submitting the best work is to be awarded a plaque. The winner will be announced at the meeting of the Florida Classical association, which is to convene on this campus the week-end of December 6, 7, and 8.

Mary Etta said that bulletins giving the rules of the contest have been sent to all high schools in the state and the entries are due here November 23.

Charlotte Kinzie Heads German Club This Year; Study Plan Formulated

Officers of Der Deutsche Verein, German club, were elected at a meeting of that group held Tuesday night.

They are Charlotte Kinsie, president; Betty Beach, vice-president; Virginia Northcutt, secretary, and Mary Carson, treasurer.

Future meetings, unless otherwise announced will be held the first and third Tuesdays of every month at 5:30 o'clock according to the president.

Plans for a study of German cities and famous writers, artists, musicians, and legends connected with these cities were formulated at this meeting.

Members of the club are invited to become better acquainted with the new officers at a German "sing" next Tuesday night at 6:00 o'clock in Mr. Owen Sellers' studio.

Four Are Initiated By Classical Honor Group

The four students who were tapped last month by Eta Sigma Phi, national classical honorary, were initiated Monday night. The new members are Julia Vanderipe, Mary Kathryn Gibson, Valerie Stubbs, and Mary Marshall.

After the initiation ceremony, held at the home of Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, the members of the fraternity enjoyed a social hour.

The meeting was attended by the members of Eta Sigma Phi, two graduate members, the iniates, and the members of the classics faculty. Those present included Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, Lillian Turlington, Rebecca Keith, Jessilee Lumpkin, Helenmary Fritsch, Margaret Gaillard, Miss Edith West, Miss Gladys Freed, Dr. Olivia Dorman, and the four initiates.

Dorman and Andrews To Speak on Closing Day Of Orientation Course

Talks by Dean Olivia N. Dorman and Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews at the freshman class meeting at 11:30 Saturday morning, November 2, will bring to a close the freshman orientation course which was inaugurated this year to aid the new student in her adjustment to campus life.

Dr. Andrews, director of personnel, will speak on "Vocational Guidance," discussing the various vocations open to women and the preparation necessary to enter them. Dean Dorman will present a general survey of the complete orientation period. Her talk will connect and summarize the various matters discussed at the former meetings.

Sue Whitaker, freshman class advisor, presented Dean Margaret Sandels, head of the School of Home Economics, to last Saturday's meeting. Dean Sandels' speech emphasized the part good manners should play in the life of the college student. Miss Louise Richardson, head of the college library, discussed business manners. Miss Helen Everett, formerly an undergraduate at Florida State College and now an assistant in the home economics department, spoke on the manners of the student in the college dining room, at the same meeting.

Medical Aptitude Test Will Be Given by Dodd As Normal Requirement

The medical aptitude test will be given in Dr. William G. Dodd's office on Friday, December 6, beginning at 2:30 and lasting for about an hour and a half. All pre-medical students interested in this test should see Dr. Dodd as soon as possible, so he will know how many tests to order.

"The attention of all applicants should be called to the fact that the test is now one of the normal requirements for admission to a medical school, and that if they plan to enter a medical school in 1936 they should arrange to take the test on the date indicated above. It is not necessary that all pre-medical requirements be completed at the time the test is taken if the requirements will be completed in time for entrance to medical school in the fall of 1936. For obvious reasons, the test can be given only once a year," said Dr. Dodd.

"Last year the tests were taken by 10,569 students of 617 colleges, and were used by approximately 90 per cent of the approved medical schools of the United Stat as a factor in the selection of their students. According to th medical schools these have prove very helpful." Last year five students here at Florida State Co lege took this test.

FSCW Receives Approval From District Meet

Student Training Course In Dietetics is Given Highest Honors

GROUP REELECTS TRACY TO SERVE

College One of Only Two In Country Offering This Subject

The American Dietic association has given its official stamp of approval to the student dietitian training in administrative food work offered by Florida State college, the first educational institution in the South to receive this honor.

This information was reported by Miss Anna May Tracy, college dietitian, on her return from Cleveland, where she attended the annual convention of the American Dietetic association, at which the approval wee given.

Training for Positions

This college is one of two in the entire country which offers such a course, the other being the University of Washington. The Woman's Educational and Industrial union at Boston also offers this training.

The student dietitian training offered at Florida State college to home economics graduates is comparable to the internehip which medical graduates are required to take upon completing their academic work. The training course covers a nine-month period of practical experience in the college dining room and upon completion students are immediately eligible for membership in the American Dietitian association and for positions.

Sixteen Graduates

Since the course was installed in this college, Miss Tracy said, 16 persons have completed their work and now hold dietary positions in college food units, commercial restaurants and in department store dining rooms in various parts of the country.

The majority of students who have taken the training work have come from other universities. Among the institutions represented here at different times have been the University of Minnesota, the University of Illinois, Iowa State college, Battle Creek college and the University of Georgia. Now enrolled in the course are graduates of Battle Creek college, the University of Georgia and Iowa State college.

Sandels Also Attends

Dr. Margaret Rector Sandels, dean of the school of home economics, also attended the convention. Miss Mary Lis Gill, a Florida State college graduate, who is now dietitian at Duval county hospital at Jacksonville, was the only other person from Florida in attendance. At the convention a paper by Dr. Jennie Tilt, professor of physiological chemistry and nutrition, was read.

Miss Tracy, also associate professor of institution economics.

Patterson, Barrs Are Pep Leaders

Seniors to Sponsor Glee Club Presentations

At e meeting of the senior class, held last night in 203 Ad. building, Pat Patterson and Katherine Barrs were unanimously elected class cheer leaders. Anne Mizell, of the sophomore class, is the other Even cheer leader, having been elected by her class at a meeting held earlier in the year.

The seniors voted to eponsor presentation, this year, of the Mercer and Emory glee clubs. They also decided to sponsor the Florida debating club. The dates for these presentations were not decided and will be announced later.

Among other business discussed were plans for Homecoming. It was decided that reserved seats would be set aside for alumnae at Even Demonstration. A motion was made and passed that Even night out will be held following Odd Demonstration this year and not following Even Demonstration a has been the custom in the past

It was also decided that the seniors will attend Convocation throughout the rest of the year wearing their caps and gowns. The meeting then adjourned.

Speech Clinic For Stutterers Opens Tuesday

Seniors in Department To Sponsor Classes In Voice Culture

Do you stutter? Do you stammer? Do you get your tongue twisted when you try to tell your best friend about that thrilling date? Do you talk in a high pitched voice? Do you talk with a nasal twang? Do you "jitter" around and say uh, uh, uh, when you get on your feet to talk? Do you do any or all of these things? If so come and get a new voice!

You can't buy it with money. You can't get it on a lottery, but you can find it at the speech clinic, which is being sponsored by the class in Problems in Speech made up of seniors in the speech department.

The Speech Clinic is to be opened Tuesday, November 19, 1935, on the top floor of the history building, room 104, at 5:30 p. m.

In case you have a conflict at this hour and should like a conference at a later date, you may sign your name and address on the bulletin board on the lower floor of the administration building

Artist Series Begins Friday

Guiomar Novaes, Pianist, To Present Concert Program Here

Guiomar Novaes, noted Brazilian pianist, will play at the first artist series concert of the year next Friday night in the college auditorium.

Senora Novaes originally came to this country under the sponsorship of Jose Carlos Rodriguez, who was at the time owner and publisher of the Brazilian newspaper, Jornol do Commercio. She gave two successful concerts in New York, then toured the United States for the entire season and returned after that annually to the states She takes an active part in the public affairs of her country, and often addresses clubs and speaks over the radio.

Guiomar Novaes was born in Sao Joao da Boa Vista, in Brazil. A child prodigy, at four she was playing marches for her little friends in the kindergarten; a year later she started studying music, and at seven made her first public appearance followed by a tour of her native country.

Her fame spread, the government became interested, and the child was sent to Paris. She was admitted to the Paris Conservatoire, winning first honors from among 388 contestants. For two years she worked with Isidor Philipp after which she was awarded the Premier Prix du Conservatoire.

At sixteen she made her debut as a mature artist. Engaged by the leading orchestras of Europe, she was an immediate success. Recitals in London, Paris, Berlin, Munich, Milan and Switzerland followed—a whirlwind and triumphant tour.

Her debut in this country was an immediate sensation, and the opinion of a critic in the New York Times was, "Not every generation hears a Guiomar Novaes." Her American tours have been a succession of brilliant spectacles. Every one marvels at her individual interpretations and the dexterity of her flawless, effortless, lovable, friendly and charming, relaxed technic.

She has always been accompanied on her tours by a member of her family: by her mother, until her death a few years ago, and then by one of her brothers, Gastao. He was with her on one or two tours and then returned to study medicine in Brazil, where today he is an eminent physician. Since 1922, after her marriage to the well-known architect - engineer Octavio Pinto, she has always been accompanied by her husband. He is also a musician and considers music his avocation. He is composer of several works which Mme. Noaves sometimes includes on her programs.

The place of woman in Brazil and the growing feminist movement in South America were discussed by Guiomar Novaes at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, where she was the guest of honor of the Advertising Women's club of that city In her address Mme. Novaes said:

"Although I personally have no political ambitions—my music and my family are my two careers—I believe in women in poli-

Holiday Here Is Celebrated In Many Ways

Camp Flastacowo to Draw Those Having a Yen For Nature

LITERARY MINDS WELCOME QUIET

Arrival Today of First Armistice Packages Is Expected

With the coming of Armistice, the first real holiday of the present term of school, vacation plans are being discussed on the campus.

Those girls who are going home are in the foreground as far as discussions go, but what do those who are staying here intend to do?

Many Go to Camp

Many stay-here's are going out to Camp Flastacowo to absorb the "colossalness" of nature and to enjoy the fact that they won't have to come back to campus just as the cowhide furniture is beginning to lose its sting. The camp will be full and—pecans to anybody who prays for cold weather.

There will be a number of practically empty sorority houses, and hospitable home-fire feeders have been heard inviting slews of dormitory intimates over to cheer things up.

"Bring plenty of sheets and things," they say, "everybody's away." That's another reason why it's pretty good to be etaying.

First Boxes Arrive

A staggering number of packages timed for arrival today are scheduled to be enjoyed in dimly-lighted rooms while a soul baring game of truth and consequences is in progress. Some might prefer to enjoy them out in Belgium while floating about on wings of song in good-'nough imitation of the Mills brothers.

This holiday is a fine time for those of literary-minds to do that short story, or give that long-hoarded book a whirl.

Nothing like a good old game of tennis to take off a few pounds before Christmas, or maybe a swim or a walk around Tally just to keep in practice.

A dinner downtown with one all prettied up in one's winter'e best is a perfect lift for the morale. The after-dinner coffee brings forth confidences, and one is apt to linger pleasantly, forgetting scholastic demands on one'e time.

On Friday afternoon a visit to the fortune-teller is followed, perhaps, with a long pause in Bennett'e to speculate about the blonde stranger

There are a number of erstwhile students who will don shorts and tops and spread the old patchwork quilt on the ground behind Gilchrist and say brazenly to the pale November sun "Do your worst!"

Withal, a pleasant and peaceful week-end, with no after-effects it is hoped that bicarbonate of soda won't do away with.

Red Cross Drive Aided by Corps

Tombaugh Leads Group In Soliciting Funds

A membership drive for the Red Cross was begun with a meeting of the Life Saving corps Tuesday evening, when final plans were made.

"Due to the two recent hurricanes in Florida, the Red Cross has been spending a great deal of money on this state alone," said Miss Betty Washburn, of the physical education department, in urging cooperation in the drive "Therefore it does not seem inopportune at this time to ask you to join."

The membership drive is being sponsored by the Life Saving corps, under the direction of Jane Tombaugh, president.

A.A.U.P. to Meet Tuesday

The Omicron Nu and American Association of University Professors, of which Dr. David H. Briggs is president, will meet Tuesday evening, 7:30 o'clock, November 11, in the chemistry lecture room.

All Home Economics students are urged to attend.

Cuban University Student Would Find Florida State "Different"

College Life in Havana, Lacking Social Contacts Of American Campus, Has Compensations, Says Visiting Senorita

"College life here is very different from that in Cuba," said Senorita Concha Richard, of Havana, Cuba, as she compared our university customs to those of her homeland. Miss Richard is here in Tallahassee representing the Cuban government in the work of the Rockefeller foundation for the study of malaria.

"In the University of Havana," says the senorita, "there is no such thing as campus life. There are no dormitories or fraternity houses. The students who live in Havana reside with their families while attending the university; those from outside the city live with families near the university."

Although they have no fraternities, Cuban students do have "associations"—the Association of Lawyers, the Association of Nurses, etc., which take the place of fraternities and sororities to a large extent. These organizations own houses and carry on an active social life, consisting especially of benefit dances and performances to raise money for athletics.

It would seem that there could be very few rules under such conditions, and Miss Richard says that this is the case. Here, she said, you get up according to the rule, you study according to rules, you eat by rules, you sleep by rules, when you go home you leave with rules. In the Universidad de Cuba it is not that way. The students do as they please outside the college; the only requirement is that they attend classes. If they are absent over twice, they cannot take the examination. (These are not the exact words of Miss Richard. Her exact words were spoken in Spanish while the interviewer sat on the edge of her chair and tried to keep up with her text-book knowledge of the language.)

"In the university," said Miss Richard, "money is always needed for athletics. There is no appropriation made by the government for sports; all funds must be obtained by the student..." There is a very lively interest in sports, which are the same as in our schools—football, baseball, track, and all the others.

Since the university is a co-educational school, amusements are quite important in the life of the students. The principal ones are dancing and moving pictures.

"We Cubans know lots of your movie stars," she added, "including Kay Francis, Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Robert Montgom-

Church Groups Hold Meetings

Methodist Girls to Hold Session With Group From University

One of the main features on the religious calendar for this week is a joint meeting of the Tallahassee and Gainesville Methodist student councils to be held at the Methodist student house this week-end, according to Miss Winnie Mae Davis, student secretary.

Open house will be held tonight and will be followed tomorrow morning by a fellowship breakfast at 8:00 for council members. At 3:00 Saturday afternoon officers of both councils will give a brief resume of their work in a joint meeting and plans and ideas for future work will be discussed at this time.

A play will be presented at the student house Saturday evening, at 8:00 and will be followed by a recreational program. The theme of the Sunday morning program will be "Peace." At this time, Dr. Raymond Bellamy will talk on "War or World Brotherhood?" The Sunday morning sermon will close the meeting.

Episcopal confirmation classes will be held from 6 until 6:30 on Tuesday afternoon. Confirmation is scheduled for November 24. Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell will continue her discussion of "The Study of the Bible" at the Episcopal church, Sunday morning at ten o'clock.

After-dinner coffee will be served at Ruge hall, Friday evening at 7:30.

A Rally day program will be presented at the Presbyterian church Sunday morning. At this time, a special prayer service for world peace will be conducted.

Sunday evening the Presbyterian young people will conduct the church service. A play carrying

Relations Club Plans Program

Miss Young, S. P. Sashoff Among Those Asked To Speak Soon

At a meeting of the International Relations club held Monday night programs were planned for all meetings before Christmas.

Miss Sadie Young, professor of economics, will give a talk on the possibility of peace from the point of view of the economist at the Augusta Conradi theatre November 18 at 7:30 o'clock.

S. P. Sashoff, professor of electrical engineering at University of Florida, will speak December 9 on "Europe—1935."

Mr. Sashoff spent the summer traveling in Europe. He has been faculty adviser of the International Relations club in Gainesville for several years.

The public is cordially invited to hear these speakers, according to Clarissa Knight, president.

Plans for a student drive in order to finance the project of a foreign student on campus will be formulated at a meeting to be held in December for this purpose. Doris Istead will lead a discussion on Russia at a meeting of the club December 2.

Clotilde O'Rourke opened the last meeting with a discussion of Hitler, the man, a short biography giving the life and personality of Hitler, and the events in his life that have made him dictator of Germany.

Caroline Adams discussed internal Germany, the economic, military, and political orders in Germany at the present time.

Mauvis Laussier pointed out the salient points in Germany'e foreign policy, showing the various problems and sore spots that have come up along the German border. Grace Mary Webster lead a short discussion of Germany following the talks by the members of the club.

Armistice, Thrilling To Students Of 1918, Is Still "Big Weekend"

Celebrations Begun with a Five o'Clock "Fire Drill" Today Mean New Clothes and a Taste Of Mother's Cooking

The Armistice holiday may be just another week-end of bus trips, football games, dances, and gala times to the 1935 Florida State college student, but the femina perfecta of seventeen years ago celebrated it in a far different way.

About 5 o'clock in the morning on Nov. 11, 1918, several hundred sleeping girls were rudely awakened from their slumbers by the clanging of the fire alarm. In spite of the lapse of years the college girl's attitude toward fire drills was much the same in those days as it is now—"just as I was getting to sleep"—"And on the coldest night.——" As they stood in the night air, sleepy and disgusted Miss Rose Denham, director of Jennie Murphree Hall, announced to them that the news of the signing of the Armistice had just been received.

And then the fire really did break out. Huge bonfires were built, patriotic songs were sung, and epeeches were made. The whole town of Tallahassee was agog with the newe. For once there were no restrictions on town-going!

But seventeen years are a long time and the excitement of the day was worn off long hence. Today the 1935 sister of the 1918 college girl merely sighs with relief to think that "quarterlies" are over at last and makes a flying trip home to buy new clothes and have mother make her favorite dessert!

Another Step Taken To Set Up Standards

Three Additional Student Members Elected On Budget Committee

TO INVESTIGATE AND PRORATE FEE

Each Organization Will Give Itemized List Of Expenditures

At a meeting of the college council held yesterday in the office of Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of students, a second step was taken towards setting up more honorable standards on campus.

Last year it was suggested to the council that a committee on uniform classroom procedure and publicity of definitions of honor be created, its duties being to investigate conduct in all phases of campus life and to decide the exact meaning of honorable conduct in relation to the class room.

Yesterday it was voted that the committee be established and the chairman of judiciary be made a permanent member of the committee, as well as chairman. Then she, in conjunction with Dean Dorman, chairman of the college council, will select from the student body and the faculty, thirty members which will comprise this committee.

Students on Budget Committee

At the same meeting three additional student members were elected to serve on the budget committee, which was created last year. They include: Grace Wicks, senior; Jeannette Annin, and Anna Glenn, juniors. Other members of this committee, which consists of four faculty members and five student members, are: Evelyn Kennard, chairman; Audrey Smith, chairman of auditing committee; Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students, ex-officio; Mr. J. G. Kellum, business manager, ex-officio; Dr. Venila Shores, from the faculty committee on student affairs, and Miss Anna May Tracy, from the faculty at large.

No member of this committee can be directly connected with any of the organizations receiving a portion of the fee which is to be prorated.

Duties of Group

The duties of this committee are to survey activities covered by the student activity fee, to prorate this fee, to approve budgets, and to receive the report of the auditing committee.

Next week, according to Evelyn Kennard, chairman, there have been arranged a series of hearings at which the head of each organization will submit a completely itemized budget, prepared with the aid of the faculty adviser. Each budget will be accompanied by a written statement justifying request for higher rate of proration, if this is desired, and

Students Not To Attend Premiere

Opening of "So Red The Rose" is Nov. 14

Students will not be given late permission to see "So Red the Rose," at the premiere showing to be held Thursday night, according to Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of students. Because of a recent announcement that the picture would play at the State theatre for a run of four days immediately following the premiere showing and since there are reserve seats for this showing it would be impossible to accommodate many of the girls.

This picture, which is a romantic drama of the Old South, is opening simultaneously November 14 in 11 cities which were the state capitals of the original Confederate states. This showing marks the first time in the history of the film company that a world premiere is to be presented in more than one city.

Ceremonies for the premiere performance are planned in each of the cities for the evening of the premieres, with governors of all the states being invited to attend. At the State theatre as a epecial attraction along with the picture will be the appearance of the "University of Florida Clubmen Orchestra."

Faculty Aids Welfare Drive

Leon County Association Enlists Employes Of College

The Leon County Welfare association, the one centralized relief agency for Tallahassee and Leon county, will close its annual charity drive tomorrow according to an official announcement. The drive began last Monday in connection with the National Red Cross organization.

Dr. Harold F. Richards, head of the college physics department, and Miss Sallie Nicholson, manager of the college bookstore, have been appointed by the County Welfare association to organize the drive among the employees of the Florida State College for Women. During this week efforts are being made to enlist the sympathetic aid of every member of the faculty and of all other college employees who spend nine months of every year in Leon county.

"Prospects," said Dr. Richards, "are encouraging. Indications lead us to believe thet the employees of Florida State College will maintain and may even better their past records for public-spiritedness.

"With few exceptions, the faculty members fully recognize their obligations to help relieve human misery in Florida No group in the city or county goes farther in the direction of wise and sound giving than the faculty, officers, and other employees of the college."

Since the federal government is now entirely out of direct relief work and is aiding only able-bodied, employable people, cases of food shortage, sickness, orphanage, and other such calamities in Leon county must be taken care of by the County Welfare association, which corresponds to the community chest organizations in counties with larger populations.

Citizens of Leon county believe, according to Dr. Richards, that the methods of the County Welfare association are obviously better than attempts by individuals to dispense charity themselves. By donating yearly subscriptions to a centralized agency charity-givers avoid overlapping and impositions which would otherwise result.

Assisting Dr. Richards and Miss Nicholson in the welfare drive among the employees of the Florida State College for Women are: Dr. Herman Kurz, professor of Botany; Dr. Ezda May Deviney, assistant professor of zoology; Dr. Hugh Lee Waskom, associate professor psychology; Miss Isabel McKinnell, instructor in chemistry, Miss Louise Richardson, librarian and professor of library science, Mr. Walter Ruel Cowles, professor of theory and director of orchestra; Miss Lucy Lester, associate professor of French; Miss Helen Thrush, instructor in art; Mrs. Whichard of the Rockefeller Foundation for malarial research; Mr. J. P. Love, superintendent of the college farm and dairy; Miss Florence R. Tryon, critic teacher and instructor in education; and Miss Margaret Brinson, stenographer and assistant in Bryan hall office.

Educator Visits Here; Demonstration School Management is Praised

Professor H. H Punke, instructor of education at the Georgia Woman's college, visited here Friday as a guest of Dr. Nathaniel Salley, dean of education.

While here Professor Punke inspected the education department, the sociology department and the Demonstration school, commenting favorably on the management and arrangement of the Demonstration school, according to Dean Salley.

Professor Punke was a colleague of Dean Salley at Peabody where they made a study of racial relations this past summer.

Bus Horns and Farewells Blend as Florida's Fairest Depart

DOLLS USED TO COUNT OFF DAYS

Plans for Departure Are Punctuated by Woes Of Exam-Takers

By EVELYN FISHER

Bus horns toot, the air rings with shrieked farewells and the halls of the college resound hollowly to the steps of the remaining few, as approximately two-thirds of the student body leave the college gates today for a holiday week-end extending through Monday.

Dining room conversations of the past week have been indicative of the peculiar atmospheric tension that accompanies an approaching vacation heralded by the added pressure of quarterlies. Rapturous prophecies of "this time four days from now" and "only three more days now" have been mixed with the familiar wails of exam-takers.

Moans Accompany Exams

There is the ever-present and murder-inspiring moan of the "A" student who comes in wailing about the horrible exam that she has just flunked. Not to be forgotten in this category is the young lady who has paid no attention whatsoever in class, handed in her parallel late every time, never answered a question, and still feels that "Dr. So-and-So really gave us an awfully unfair test." Perhaps the supreme pest, though, is the pert little person who waxes philosophical about this time and comforts all the unfortunate, ordinary, hair-tearing individuals around her by assuring them that, after all, "grades aren't everything."

Students Go Home

In these portentious days the supreme question, despite the persistence of the absorbing matter of exams seems to be, Where are you going Armistice? Those fortunate enough to be making a trip to "home sweet home" take this opportunity to smirk contentedly while they relate in detail all the things that they are going to do when they get there. The less fortunate usually express their envy in wistful terms and burden the leave-taker with numerous and difficult-to-remember messages to take to someone they know.

Some Students Remain

In the group of those remaining there are a few stoics who refuse to show any regret on being left behind. Indifferently they remark casually about the good food that the dining room serves in the presence of a few, of the long hours of slumber that they expect to enjoy, and of the Elysium peace that will pervade the college as these noisy and worldly seekers after excitement leave for more distant climes.

In her antictpation of vacations as in other things the college girl must necessarily display her originality. This is illustrated in the many devices that she uses to count off the days before an impending holiday. None of the

Bohumir Kryl To Appear Tuesday

Symphony Concerts to Be Given at Leon High

Tallahassee is to have as a visitor this week Bohumir Kryl, who is recognized by critics as the world's greatest cornet virtuoso. Kryl and his symphony band will appear in concerts Tuesday afternoon and Tuesday night in the Leon High school auditorium.

Kryl, a Bohemian, was for a number of years the solo cornetist in Sousa's band. He is now conducting his own band, which is on its thirty-first annual concert tour.

The artist and his band are coming here at the invitation of Johannes P. Koscleiny, director of the Capital City band.

Three other artists are to appear on the program. Josephina Kryl White, violinist; Neil Kinnard, soprano soloist, and Ruth Templeman, harpist, who will assist at the concerts.

Sale of concert tickets to college students is being handled by Hazel Bowman.

Professors' Pet Peeves

Grade-Gripers and Book-Droppers, Professional Painters and Trembling Trios—Banes Of Our Instructors

There exists upon this campus a strong being who, in the eyes o the students, is possessed with fantastical powers, playful moods, tyrannical whims and magical abilities This being—the college professor'

In the class room, on the campus, these unique men face a sea of women daily. Surprisingly enough there are comparatively few who have decided grievances against woman-kind.

In spite of the heroic proportion allotted to them, however they do have some "pet peeves" which have been magnified by their students to gigantic and mythological proportions.

Some of the gentlemen were tactfully reticent in presenting for public observation their views on women, but several, in no indefinite terms made known the banes of their existences.

One professor has horrific nightmares in which the "I'll-pin-you-down-to-definite-terms" students pursue him with notebooks in hand, pulling on his coat-tails with constant and excruciating questions as to their grades, exams, what to remember when and hy

Another professor holds "grade gripers" in abhorrence. He might say with Emily Dickinson, in her poem

A grade is made
when it is made
Some say
I say
They just begin to gripe
That day.

Flamboyant make-up heads the list of things that should be taboo for the college girl, according to another professor, while another thinks that girls with scarlet fingernails should be abolished or removed to some very distant and very deserted island.

Book-droppers and letter-rustlers form another group of class room pests for one professor. This same gentleman thinks there should be a law against the official "weepers" of a sorority doing a Niagara Falls act over the professor in an attempt to get a neophyte's grade raised from D to a C

One professor was very happy at having an opportunity to proclaim to the world his abhorrence of the inevitable "trembling-trios" who attempt the popular songs—in an undertone—during a lecture. This professor also made known the fact that his indignation reaches the height of its "indignability" when girls smirk and giggle while he is lecturing.

Several of the professors mentioned the fact that it is very disconcerting to attempt a lecture while girls are nonchalantly powdering noses and rouging lips.

Another general complaint was that against girls who, the second that the bell rings, take a joyful leap from their chairs and make a wild dash for the door. The result is usually, that about six or eight girls get there at the same time, thus causing an unpleasant disturbance for the professor, who is, nine times out of ten, still lecturing.

However, in spite of all these grievances, some professors are extarordinarily liberal in their attitudes towards class room behavior. Some even say that they don't mind gum-chewing — not gum-popping — in their classes, while a small majority indicated that they deeply sympathize with those students affected by sleep-o-mania, and that such students may slumber peacefully in their classes without fear of their dreams being disturbed.

Flowers Announces Guest Arrangements

During homecoming students may have guests in the residence halls from Tuesday night through Friday night, according to Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls.

Arrangements must be made for guests with the director or the hall in which the guests are to be entertained. No children under the age of 14 may spend the night in the residence halls Miss Flowers asks that the guests be registered so that they may be found if they are wanted.

No men may be taken to the students' rooms except by the consent of the director of the hall.

was reappointed on the executive committee of the American Dietetic association during the convention. She was also elected to serve on the nominating committee and she presided over the meeting of the administrative section this year. The next convention will be at Boston some time in October.

Further representation was given this college when Miss Tracy presented a gavel, made of Florida cedar by Dr. Raymond Bellamy, professor of sociology, to the convention president, Miss Laura Comstock The gavel was used at all the meetings.

Many noted speakers addressed the convention delegates who numbered about 700 persons, Miss Tracy said. Among them were Dr. Faith Williams, chief of the cost of living division, bureau of labor statistics: Dr William P. Murphy, Boston, nationally known for his use of liver and liver extract in treating and curing anemia, and Dr. F. Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical association, who spoke on "Foods, Fad and Fallacies."

Vitamins have gasoline as a rival for the pay check of the fellow in the smaller income bracket of $500 a year, it was seen in a report by Dr. Williams at the convention. Of 10,000 families examined in the lower income bracket, it was found that 33 to 36 per cent of their expenditures went for food: 25 to 29 per cent for housing: 619 to 12.7 per cent for transportation: 10 to 12 per cent for clothing, and 2.5 per cent for cosmetics and the barber, Dr. Williams said.

Orchestra Opens At Florida High

Student Orchestra Opens a Season This Week

The student orchestra conducted by Mr. O. F Sellers furnished the music for the convocation of the Demonstration school Monday afternoon at which the results of the recently held Hallowe'en Carnival were announced.

The orchestra played for its first time Monday afternoon using "March Militaire" by Schubert and the high school song, Florida High, as its main selections. The members of the orchestra are Lillyan Cason, pianist; Mary Margaret Pichard, Frances Pichard, Theron Owen, and Harry Middlebrooks, violinists, Davidson Philips, trumpet; Ben Ervine, baritone, Betty Ann Taylor, bass: Paschal Duggar, saxophone: Gene Owen and Edwin Kellum, clarinets, and Weldron Pfluge, cello.

Forty dollars profit was made by the school at the Hallowe'en Carnival held October 31. This money will be used for the upkeep of the student council which is now planning a constructive program for the coming year. One of the first things to be bought with this money is to be a new flag.

There will be no convocation Monday, November 11, because the school is to be closed for a holiday. However, on the following Monday Miss Florence Tryon's class is to be in charge of the chapel which is to be composed mainly of Education Week activities.

Perhaps the most unique device of all is a miniature clothes line on which paper dolls representing the days of the month are strung As the time advances the paper dolls are pulled along the line to the other end. Shouts of joy accompanied the passing of the last paper doll this morning, as the first vacation week-end of the year approached.

Student From North Looks At Our South

Dixie Accent Strange And Civil War Taboo In Conversation

The problems of a northern student who attends a southern college, begin with lessons in pronunciation and end with a silent agreement that the Civil War, as a topic of conversation, is taboo.

The pronounciations used by the North and the South make almost two languages, derived from English, instead of one. Tomatoes rime with potatoes now, and only in excited moments, does the word, "corking" slip out. "Down-street" and "downtown" have become "up-town," and "over there" is "yonder." People no longer "chortle" but "chuckle," and "wait on" a person not "for him."

"Cute little lemons" are really limes, and sweet potato souffle might be pumpkin souffle. Avocado pears look like green mush, but have a delicate taste. No amount of chewing will enable a sugar cane stalk to be consumed but the juice is very good.

If a northerner has retained his dislike of rice, grits, okra, rutabaga, yams, and turnip greens, he will return from the dining room with a hollow look of hunger on his face and gratitude in his heart that eggs are a universal food.

If a Yankee comes South and stays, the prefix "damn" is added to his title of Yankee. If he stays too long, a second, stronger prefix is added.

Snakes are objects of immediate interest instead of hazy notions of India snake-charmers, and green reptiles. For, here, a singing locust may be a singing rattle-snake that patronizes the same golf course.

Only long hours of practicing side kicks, back kicks, front kicks, and combinations of each, will ever make a northerner as adept in this art of dancing with a southerner.

A speaking acquaintance with cockroaches is quite ordinary, and elongated bugs, made up of legs only, crawl on the walls

The famous southern hospitality traditional waffles and fried chicken, are not merely myths, but very realistic and enjoyable

The Civil War during the first part of a northerner's visit to the south, is fought over again, vigorously. The battle-ground is anywhere the subject is brought up and the amunition consists of bullet-like words After several weeks under heavy fire, the matter is arbitrarily decided by a complete silence between the North and the South on this one subject.

Guiomar Novaes ranks indisputably with the greatest pianists of this age The American public accepted Novaes with abiding joy in the utter simplicity of her art A long series of successes in this country both in recital and with orchestra followed her debut Leading critics of music have written of Novaes, "Breadth and virility of style and a richness of coloring remindful of Carreno." And also, "There were miracles of beauty in the recital—miracles of illusion. A recital of such beauty that every student in New York should have been there to hear how a piano should sound."

Quarter Grades To Be Released Soon

First quarter grades will come out the middle or the latter part of next week, according to S R. Doyle, registrar.

The list of students on academic probation will be issued at the same time, while the approbation list will not be made known until later, Mr. Doyle said.

Florida Football Game Compete for Honors In Six-Man Tilt Thursday

The Red and White six-man football teams of the Florida High school played an exciting game Thursday afternoon the Red team winning with a score of 15 to 18.

Those players composing the White team were: Linzy, captain, Kendrick Culley, Baker, Roesch and Gray Those on the Red team were: Phillips, captain, Skipper, Ervine, Richey, Diffenbaugh and Boone. The utility players were Whitaker, Ervine, Hawes, Duke, Dean, Dunaway and Pluge Ward Fletcher acted as head linesman; "Sonny Boy" Jones as the referee, and O. S. Harrison as umpire.

Six-man football is a regulation football played with six players on a side. The main football rules govern six-man football except those that conflict with the articles that are formulated reducing the size of the team and making adjustments for this reduction The purpose of the game is to make football available to a wider range of boys and young men than is now the case.

Dr. Andrews to Speak Tomorrow at Camp Byrd National Youth Scheme

Tomorrow Dr Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel, will speak at Camp Byrd, in Avon Park, Florida, on the general subject of preparation for life.

A recently established project of the National Youth administration, Camp Byrd is a camp for girls from the age of 18 to 35. Its enrollment at present includes 76 girls, ranging from the sixth to the twelfth grades in scholarship. Although their opportunities have been limited by the depression, many of these girls, according to Dr. Andrews, are clever, intelligent and attractive

Those registered in the camp will receive training of a practical and cultural nature, including business training, instruction in the arts and crafts, hygiene, home economics, and various school subjects.

Yale Allows Students To Accept Federal Aid

NEW HAVEN, Conn., (ACP)—Yale has reversed its attitude of last year and will accept federal aid for its needy graduate and professional students, with 102 students slated for NYA jobs paying up to $40 a month, it was announced here last week

The work will consist chiefly of research investigations in specialized fields. The reason for refusal of aid last year was said to be the fact that at that time the maximum amount offered was $15 a month. This prevented the student from seeking other employment.

Little Willie Shares Honors With Millionaire Noble of Tallahasse

Lafayette, Murat Graves Provide Portion Of City's History

Dogs and people share honors in equal dignity in the Tallahassee cemetary for beside the tombs of princes and millionaires the Episcopal cemetary on Park avenue contains a stone which reads: "Our pet, dearly beloved, Fannie, faithful and loving, and our first pet, Little Willie, 1909-1921." These two dogs were owned by Mrs. Van Ness Bowman, originally from Lexington, Massachusetts. Mrs. Bowman bought a lot and payed Mr. J. A. Culley, undertaker, twenty-five dollars to bury the dogs.

There is also a full-fledged prince and princess buried here. The story goes that the year in which Tallahassee became the capital, in 1826, Lafayette visited America and for his services in the Revolutionary War was voted by Congress two hundred thousand dollars cash and a township that might be selected anywhere from the public lands of the United States. He chose the township to the northeast of the new capital of Florida, a part of which lies within the present city limits of Tallahassee The general was never able to carry out his plans for a great French colony, but numbers of his countrymen were attracted to Florida through this grant.

One who was already in Florida and who was drawn to the new capital about this time was Prince Achille Murat, son of the King of Naples and of Caroline Bonaparte In Tallahassee, Colonel Murat, as he preferred to be called, met and married Katherine Dangerfield Grey, daughter of Colonel Bird Willis of Virginia, a marriage which united the nephew of Napoleon and the grandniece of Washington. The beauty of the princess and the eccentricities and accomplishments of the prince will never depart from Tallahassee tradition.

His monument has the following inscription: "Departed this life April 18, 1847 Charles Louis Napoleon Archille Murat, son of the King of Naples and Caroline Murat, aged 47 This monument is dedicated by his wife in perpetual memory of her love"

In the front yard of the Episcopal church on Monroe str there is another tombstone wh carries with it an interesting sto Buried there are Hardy Br Groom, his wife, and three ch dren, all of whom perished in wreck of the steamboat "Home on the night of the 9th of Oc ber, 1837. ollege Woman of Today is Seen As Independent and Honest Individual de of Dress Considered Important in Outward Classification of Modern Co-ed, Who Knows Her Own Mind

B ELEANOR JENKINS

Who is the college girl of to- ? The college woman of fifty ars ago blazed a trail through ntried country. The college girl today follows a well beaten th which three generations of iversity women havo made into ad highway.

The ways and means of cata- guing a college girl are wide and aried Probably the most dis- nctive and quite likely the most portant outward classification college women is their manner dress It is a generally accept- d fact that most students prefer their Monday-to-Friday othes a comfortable pair of ox- rds and the conventional skirt and sweater. On Saturdays and ndays, however, very smart opies of Adrian, Patou and hers may be seen on the campus. hen the college girl dresses for e outside world, she is quite areful of her appearance, from e peak of her smart little hat ted over one eye or haloing her ce to those very smart and chic atching shoes.

However, that is not always ue Some students wear their tside clothes even on school- s. Then there are those stu- who wear their Monday-to- riday clothes on Saturdays and ndays

Generally speaking though, the erage college girl is indifferent to her appearance during the week. Her make-up is very slight if any. Her hair is not always combed and waved as carefully as on week-ends Her fingernails show signs of a not too recent manicure. However there are some students with whom this theory does not hold They are the ones who cause envy in their classmates by appearing in class looking as if they had just stepped out of a fashion magazine advertisement.

There are 1745 students at F S. C W and there are just as many behavior patterns, to use a well known psychology expression. Still with all the differences there is a general type of girl from each class that may be pictured. From the freshman class comes the student who is well-dressed wide-eyed, eager-looking, displaying a sparrow-like curiosity, tho in the main she is an unusually cheerful-looking individual.

The sophomores are generally conceded to be the most sophisticated and well-dressed members of the student body. They know quite a lot too. Ask anyone of them, they are very modest. It won't be long before the wide range of their intelligence will be noted It is remarkable what one year of college can teach one.

The juniors are in a class by themselves Wavering on the edge of the higher estate, they are torn between an attitude of dignity and a natural happy-go-lucky air Most members of this lass are quite versatile, having quite a few responsibilities They have the happy facility for seeing everything with a very optimistic point of view

For the senior there is no optimism She is resigned to her fate With the weight of three years of college life to her credit she essays the dignity rightly due her class and station, bearing hardships of meals without cream and piles of parallel reading with the patience that might well shock a saint

Combining the pictures of the four college students one may get a fairly good view of the college girl as she appears from the outside.

The college woman has ideas and views that perhaps sound a bit startling to those who opened the way to college life three generations ago Regardless of whether her hair be long or short, curl or straight whether she is a smoker or non-smoker whether she wears socks or hose red fingernail polish or natural polish, there are certain fundamental aims which characterize all college women though a few adhere to these aims more strictly than others There are some ideals that all students stand for.

The college woman today considers health an important factor in her happiness She has high principles of honesty and sincerity She is very open-minded in every respect discussing all questions with little prejudice and much frankness Her greatest desire is to be economically secure and independent making her own money and standing on her own feet

The college girl of today knows where she is going and on which train she is going to travel Her only cry is "enlargement", she wants a large and full life inside and outside of school.

Are you a college woman?

A cigaret factory is being built in Persia Capacity of the new plant will roll 12 000 000 cigarets daily.

Badminton Is New Game Here

Gordon Explains Rulings On Popular Sport To Students

Badminton, an English game, has recently been added to the extra-curricular activities sponsored by the physical education department according to an announcement made this week by Miss Katherine Montgomery, director of physical education.

The game of badminton is similar to lawn-tennis, according to the accepted rules. It is played with racquets similar to tennis racquets but having smaller and thinner handles. The ball, or shuttle-cock, of hard rubber is in the shape of a small hemisphere with feathers crowning one half of it.

Badminton may be played by 'o or four people. The court used is smaller than the tennis court and varies in size with the number of players. For singles the court is long and narrow, while for doubles the court becomes short and wide. A net is drawn across the center five feet from the ground while service lines are drawn six and one-half feet on each side of the net. A line down center forms the four courts.

The game is played in innings, and scoring is by points gained when the opponents fail to return the shuttle-cock, send it out of the court, or allow it to touch the ground. The score for the singles game is eleven points and for the doubles game is fifteen points.

The side beginning the game by serving the shuttle-cock from the right-hand court over the service line into the opposite diagonal court has only one server in the first inning, but after the first round both partners are allowed to serve. After the serve the players can move anywhere on the court.

Badminton is a much quicker game than lawn tennis and has become quite popular in recent years, according to Miss Montgomery.

Instruction in this game is being given on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday afternoons at 5 30, and on Friday afternoon at 4 30 by Josephine Gordon.

State Supervisor Will Visit Tallahassee For Education Observance

Education week will be observed at the Demonstration school next week with a mass meeting of parent-teacher associations of this city, according to an announcement of Dr N. M. Salley, dean of the school of education.

Mrs. Kathleen W. Covey, of Jacksonville, state supervisor of parent education with the Works Progress administration, will address the meeting which will be held at 8 15 Tuesday night in the Augusta Conradi theatre Her subject will be "Parent Education

Mrs. Covey is the former president of the Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Members of the parent-teacher association of the Demonstration school, Caroline Brevard, and Sealey Memorial schools, and members of the classes in methods and practice teaching are asked to attend An invitation will also be issued to the service clubs of Tallahassee, Dean Salley stated, and to all parents in the city who are interested in creating a "better understanding between home and school."

Library Display Shows Anderson's Mermaid, Unusual Danish Pieces

Among the displays at the library this week are some postcard pictures and pottery lent by Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell. These objects are souvenirs of her travels abroad. Especially interesting among them is a copy of Hans Christian Anderson's Mermaid Statue of which Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen spoke. This statue was put up by Denmark as a monument to Anderson and is very symbolic to the people of Denmark.

In the collection is a hand painted and handmade lace apron, and also two pottery wall plaques and a bright colored embroidered center piece lent by Winifred Hansen, of Tallahassee, whose mother and father are Danes.

In keeping with this Denmark display is a book by Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen entitled Leaves from a Greenland Diary, which she autographed on her last visit here. The inscription reads, "To the Florida State College for Women with the warm greetings of an alumna and friend"

That "zipper" fastener was invented by Whitcomb Judson in 1893, but Gideon Sundback later improved and patented it.

Mrs. Owen Made Doctor of Laws

America's only woman diplomat and one of Florida's most famous citizens was honored when the Florida State College for Women at Tallahassee conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws on Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, U. S. minister to Denmark. Dr. Edward Conradi (right), president of the college, is shown bestowing the LL.D. certificate on Mrs. Owen.

Head Gardener Tells of Pictorial Deutschland of Thirty Years Ago

Describes Clear Skinned Girls and Town Of Boyhood Days

By MARGARET DUNCAN

"I like the girls better the way they are now than when I first came here," said Mr Julius Steinfuhrer, head gardener of Florida State College for Women, as we sat talking in the afternoon sun—Mr. Steinfuhrer sitting on a tub of sand and I on a wooden crate Around us was the busy hum of the college garden with girls gathering flowers and chattering noisily

A number of the girls clad in shorts and polo shirts brought forth another comment from Mr. Steinfuhrer: "I like to see girls dress that way. It allows the sunshine to get to their bodies and keeps them healthy The girls look better than they did when I came here in 1905 That was about the time they first started rolling their stockings down I thought surely they would never get any freedom—bundled up in all those clothes However, they weren't half as bundled up as the German girls of that day. You should have seen the bathing suits they wore in Germany! No speck of skin could be seen. Men and women even bathed in different bath houses, the girls taking their bath in the morning and the men in the evening.

"How do we compare with the German girls?" I asked.

"Oh, girls are all girls," said Mr. Steinfuhrer "but one thing I do notice about girls over here is that their skin is not so pretty as that of German girls. Girls in the Old Country have much color. They do not have to use any—what do you call it?—paint?'

Mr Steinfuhrer has not been back to Germany since he first came to America. Mecklenburg, the little village where he was born, is a very beautiful place, says the gardener. "It is very, very old,' he added, 'having been in existence long before the Thirty Year's War. During that period the town was almost wiped out—only one out of every ten inhabitants was left alive.

"Mecklenburg is built like no other city I have ever seen. It is round—like a ring. Old fortifications surround the entire town. At the edge of the village is a big stone wall which is surrounded by three dirt walks with ditches between. On the top of the walls are walks, which makes it look like a park all around the town. There are four entrances, one at each of the compass points These entrances through the stone wall can be closed by ancient gates.

"Everything in Mecklenburg is old. The church was built long before the United States was ever discovered. It is so large that all the churches in Tallahassee could be put inside it.

"I had an adventure in that old church once when I was a boy The basement, in early years, had been used as a burial place for aristocrats. It was very, very dry down there, and in the course of centuries the bodies mummified. One day one of my playmates and I sneaked down there to play. We found one of the vaults open and looked at one of the mummies My friend picked up the skin of the arm and it stretched like rubber. We hurriedly scampered away from that place."

Mr Steinfuhrer went to school at Koestrite. "There were large nurseries there," he said, "where we raised roses for the Russian counts and dukes. Miles and miles of standard roses we raised Each year we had to buy new plants, for the climate was so hard on them. Germany is a very cold country If it were not for the gulf stream there would be ice in Germany twelve months a year Southern Germany is colder than northern Germany as it is farther from the gulf stream.

"The twilights in Germany are very different from those in the United States In the winter the sun goes down at two o'clock in the afternoon and rises at nine that night. In the summer the twilight is so long that it never gets dark in northern Germany."

A puzzled expression must have crept into my face as Mr Steinfuhrer hastened to ask this question: "Did you realize that New York is even with Rome Italy? And just think how far north of Italy Germany is"

"One of the estates where I worked before I came to America," continued Mr Steinfuhrer, "belonged to a duke The gardens surrounding his house were as big as this whole campus. In Germany, the land owners are the millionaires. The duke kept as many as twelve and thirteen coach horses, beside his own riding horses and those used on the farm. The big ballroom in the duke's house was all decorated with yellow silk. Ach—it was a lovely place."

With a start I looked at my watch—fifteen minutes after six, and dinner served at six-thirty. I jumped up from my seat on the crate, and asked Mr. Steinfuhrer if I might come back and hear some more about Germany sometime.

"Sure," said Mr. Steinfuhrer, "I like to have the girls come and visit the garden."

"Auf Wiedersehen," I called as I ran down a path between two rows of greens.

"Auf Wiedersehen," called back Mr. Steinfuhrer.

Colored Maid In Fatal Accident

Worked Here 7 Years; Died Thursday Noon

Viola Gallon, colored office maid in Reynolds hall for seven years, died yesterday at noon, as a result of injuries she received in an automobile accident four weeks ago. Funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon at 2 30.

She is survived by two people working on campus, her husband, Bowlyn Gallon, janitor in the administration building, and her brother, Henry Buchanan, the janitor in the library.

Viola, Bowlyn and three other members of the family were returning from a trip to Bainbridge, Georgia, where they visited relatives when the accident occurred. A mule walked in front of the car, causing it to be turned on its side in a ditch. No one in the car but Viola received major injuries. Viola was pinned under the car, and her chest was crushed by the weight. She was taken to the A and M, hospital for treatment. There she developed pneumonia and passed away yesterday

Viola had been in the service of the college for about ten years. She was Bryan office maid before she was transferred to Reynolds. Miss Mamie Andrews, house director of Reynolds, said, "Viola was of a sweet-natured, lovable disposition I could always depend on her." Her loss is felt deeply by both social directors and students.

Panhellenic President To Represent College At National Congress

Dorothy Leach, president of the Panhellenic association, has been chosen to represent Florida State College as a delegate at the meeting of the National Panhellenic congress, December 4, at Edgewater Park, Mississippi. She was elected at the monthly meeting of the association Monday night.

The national meeting will be held at the Edgewater Park hotel and will be attended by sorority women from all over the country. The congress will convene only the one day, Miss Leach said.

Urged to take part in the annual homecoming celebration of the college Thanksgiving, the association made plans for individual sorority programs. These entertainments which will be in the form of skits or other informal programs will be given at the sorority houses Thanksgiving day from 5 o'clock in the afternoon to 10:15 o'clock that night.

Faculty Go to Rollins' Semicentennial Meeting

Dr Edward Conradi, president of the Florida State College for Women, accompanied by Dr Venila Shores, Dr Shores' mother, Mrs. Alla L. Shores; Miss Kemper Moore, dramatic director, and Miss Louise Conradi, representing the Florida State College for Women, were among the representatives of 100 colleges and universities at the Rollins College semi-centennial held last week-end.

An interesting and entertaining program was held during the occasion marking the turning of a half a century of the college.

Dr Jennie Tilt accompanied this group to Winter Park where she attended a board meeting of the American Association of University Women.

College Laundry Process Is Efficient and Money-Saving

Three Years of Collegiate Dirt Washed Away By This Service

By JEWEL TURNER

The hot hissing of steam, the stenching smell of soapsuds and chlorine and the endless buzzing of washing machines and ironers—this, in brief, is the story of the college laundry situated on the lower floor of the gym.

Started three years ago, the laundry operates at a price two-thirds lower than a commercial laundry. It is not a money-making proposition All profits that are made after the wages have been paid go into the buying of new machinery and materials that are necessary to make a good job of the laundrying process. The machinery now in use was bought with the profits, on a three to five year paying plan.

Since the laundry is not trying to make money it is able to pay its workers better salaries than commercial laundries and therefore the service is of higher quality There are usually about thirty people employed, but on Thursday and Friday this number decreases as there is not as much work to be done. The busiest days are on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. The laundry operates only five and one-half days a week.

Soiled clothes reach the laundry after they have been taken by the students to the laundry offices which are located in Jennie Murphree and Bryan halls. Students place their names on individual laundry tickets carefully checked with the items they place in care of the laundry From these offices a large laundry truck twice a day collects them and takes them to the laundry itself.

When they advance this far each student's laundry is again checked and the name of the student is usually stamped on the hem or some other part of the garment. Now the clothes are sorted All flat work goes in one pile, bathing suits, towels and blankets make up another heap Other clothes which are made of finer materials are put aside until the flat pieces are washed.

After the clothes have been carefully sorted they are placed in a washer for one hour. Here they are threshed about in a solution of soap, soda, water and chlorine. When the hour is completed the clothes are transfered to a ringer which takes out the water by centrifical force.

Pillow cases, sheets, and all of the flat work is then shaken out and put on a presser which takes out every wrinkle. Two of the helpers put the flat work on the machine and two others fold the pieces carefully as they come out on the opposite side.

All the dresses are ironed by hand There are twenty-four hand ironing boards for this work. When the dresses have been ironed they are placed on hangers furnished by the laundry. There are usually about sixteen thousand hangers used a year.

Besides the seven thousand pounds of soap used a week, the laundry buys about twelve thousand pounds of chlorine a year. This chlorine is sealed in rubber sacks so that it will not injure anyone.

Imported Japanese wax is used to seal the flatwork presser so that during the ironing process water will not leak through the rollers and ruin the machinery.

In the entire three years that the laundry has been operating there has not been one serious injury, according to A. L. Peevy, the head manager. The laundry has also saved the dining room sixteen thousand dollars a year with its flatwork service.

Red Cross Disaster Man Shows Motion Pictures

Motion pictures were presented before the Red Cross Life Saving corps in the Physical Education building Monday evening.

The pictures were show by Nelson Howard, Red Cross disaster worker from Washington, D. C., who recently completed his work in the Florida keys where he was called after the hurricane. Relief work pictures and pictures of swimming and diving meets were shown. The display included pictures of Katherine Rawls, nationally known swimmer who visited this college last year.

Helping the Frosh To Help Themselves

Today ends the first "quarter" of college life for the class of thirty-nine. Also ended is the first unit of a revised system of freshman orientation, by whose provisions the youngest class is given, throughout its first year at Florida State, opportunity to grow acquainted with the college as a whole, with its obligations and responsibilities as well as its chances for advancement.

Closely supervised by a freshman advisory council, freshmen have attended weekly class meetings at which they learned to know their school. A series of faculty discussions were the features of these assemblies. During the second quarter the orientation program will continue, with its object the fostering of acquaintance with the faculty. Meetings between freshmen and their teachers will be planned in the form of teas, hikes, sightseeing trips, and picnics, throughout the coming quarter.

The second semester will see the carrying out of the last provisions of the new program, under which the freshmen will be given opportunities to grow better acquainted with their own capabilities. Talents, gifts in any line, as well as personality and character traits will be given ample chance to show themselves as a rounded program of activity is pursued. Each girl will be asked to choose one extra-curricular project and to follow it out, whether it be dramatics, music, painting, writing, group organization or social activity.

So far plans for the last three quarters of the school year are in tentative form only. But as they take definite shape it is to be hoped that they will lay a concrete foundation for the orientation programs to come, as Florida State "rings in the new" in freshman orientation.

We Don't Believe in Marching

Today at 11 o'clock many colleges and universities are planning to join in a mobilization for peace program, which is sponsored by ten national student organizations including N. S. F. A. and Y. W. C. A.

However, Florida State College will not be among those participating. We too want peace, but we don't think it can be obtained by waving banners, parading, or any form of mass exhibition. Although this year all such demonstrations are supposed to be planned by joint faculty-student committees instead of the former "walking-out-of-class" type which has in the past received so much condemnation from college administrations, the theory underlying the whole program just doesn't jibe with our sense of values.

In this campaign against war the NSFA among other organizations has stated that it will support by every possible means genuine neutrality legislation to prevent entanglement of the U. S. in war; it will work for the demilitarization of colleges and schools especially by assuring the passage of the Nye-Kvale bill to make the R. O. T. C. optional instead of compulsory; and it will insist on opportunities in the curriculum and out for relating education to these crucial problems. This much of the program is certainly of a constructive nature.

The latter point, however, takes on a different tone. It reads as follows: "to refuse to support the government of the United States in any war it may undertake." We wonder if the students endorsing this movement have seriously considered what they are doing when they pledge themselves to support any such resolution. Commenting on this point, The Reveille, student newspaper at Louisiana State university, says that "for any student organization, whose members would probably be among the first to demand government aid if they found it necessary for protection, to attack that government, to strike at the very power which makes such protection possible, is a violation of all principles of honor and fair thinking."

Even though our college isn't taking part in the mobilization movement we do want to do our part in educating for peace. As a beginning, the next regular convocation period will be given over to the local NSFA forum committee, which will conduct a peace program—but no parades, no waving of banners, and no "soap-box" oratory. This is indeed the more scholarly, the more dignified, the more sensible way to show "peace sentiments" on our campus.

Splitting Hairs! Portrait of an "ism"

Our capital city at Washington was the scene of much heated dispute last week when the meaning of the amendment passed by the last session of Congress forbidding the teaching of communism in the schools was questioned. What they couldn't agree upon was whether the law meant that the word "communism" could not be mentioned, or whether the teachers could tell students about communism but not advocate it. American Legion officials hold to the former, while school officials defend the latter.

Dr. Frank Ballou, superintendent of schools for the District of Columbia, states the position of those who are in favor of a "factual" study of communism, contending that only by giving students information about political, economic and social matters can American schools combat the "insidious propaganda now menacing democracy." He declares himself opposed to instruction that aims at indoctrination of pupils in favor of communism. In this he has the backing of many leading educators throughout the country who believe that it is not the purpose of a university to teach any doctrine, whether it be communism, capitalism, individualism, collectivism, fundamentalism, or modernism.

President Conant of Harvard university has said that it will not suffice if each college or university has its own particular brand of doctrine. "Our colleges and universities must not only guarantee the right of free inquiry," he writes in a recent issue of the Atlantic Monthly, "but they must also see that the various points of view are represented so that a conflict of opinion really takes place . . . We must have our share of thoughtful rebels on our faculties."

At Chicago university, which was the scene of a Red investigation recently, the president, Robert M. Hutchins, thinks that a university exists only to find and to communicate the truth. The way to make students Red, he says, is to suppress them. According to this view, our legislators who pass laws which forbid the explanation of the term "communism" or any other "ism" are merely striking the match which lights their own fire.

It is undoubtedly true as has often been pointed out that when students are allowed to delve into any subject, when they are allowed to listen to both radical and conservative professors, when they are taught to weigh evidence logically and draw their own conclusions, it is highly improbable that they will be "taken in" by any form or variety or insidious propaganda. Students who are exposed to many different ideas and views and are allowed freedom of inquiry have every chance to become well-balanced and thoughtful individuals. Ignorance may be bliss, but if education is desirable the only sound foundation is knowledge—unlimited, unrestricted, and unprejudiced.

IS RADIO CENSORED?
By Henry Adams Bellows
H[illegible]

[illegible] and no, says Henry Bellows, who has now severed all connections with radio as a business, and seems in a fairly unbiased position to judge.

Physical laws necessitated the restriction of radio to some extent, he says, and consequently a federal radio commission was set up, of which he was a member. As broadcasting stations were crowding each other off the air the commission attempted to limit the number of radio stations by refusing to renew applications to those stations whose programs seemed to them "inferior."

However, no attempt was made to restrict anyone from talking about politics, religion or anything they pleased. Rumors of stations' cutting off speakers who were attacking the government were accounted by the local stations having to change to another hook-up to continue their regular program.

The threat of censorship which in reality is what exists, when the Federal Communications Commission, who have taken the place of the radio commission, can refuse to renew an application because of "inferior" programs) is worse than avowed censorship.

Broadcasters are now wary of any of their programs meeting with the commission's approval, he says, because the commission has never stated what its individual tastes are.

We must recognize it and call it by its right name. Bellows concludes "s[illegible] will be better able to deal with it when it comes between us and freedom."

THE RIGHT TO DIE
By Charlotte Perkins Gilman
Forum, November, 1935

This article was written in defense of suicide by a writer who took her own life last August.

She makes a plea that suicide be made legitimate for invalids who suffer constant pain from an incurable disease, as she did.

The power to give euthanasia should not be left to any individual, she suggests, but the Board of Health might appoint a committee to consult a case if the patient asks to be put out of his misery or if the physician thinks there is no hope.

There might be a small percentage of error in deciding the possibility of life, she says, but "the dragging burden of the hopelessly unfit could be lightened and used to improve better lives." Death is not an evil, she adds, when it comes as a course of nature and when it is administered legitimately.

THE TROUBLE WITH CAPITALISM IS THE CAPITALISTS
By Harold G Moulton
Fortune, November, 1935

The Brookings institution concludes from its four-year survey of economic conditions that the one way out is for capitalists to decrease prices.

By tables and graphs the chairman shows the United States has never produced to its capacity, that millions of families do not have what the government ranks the "necessities of life," and that supply has outstrided demand because the majority of people do not have enough purchasing power.

Total income must increase, he says, and as labor is not nationally organized to demand increase in wages, the increase must come by all enterprises lowering prices at the same time, but not wages. The masses may then provide themselves with the necessities of life, and thereby stimulate business to such an extent that ultimately we may produce to capacity and raise the standards of living.

The competitive system, if it keeps prices flexible as it is supposed to, offers the surest way out of economic ills. However, Dr. Moulton explains, in late years, capitalists have merged into monopolies to eliminate competition and they have consequently kept prices stable. Capitalism for the ultimate good of all depends on a free functioning of the price system.

SPYING ON THE JOBLESS
By Isidor Feinstein
New Republic, October 30, 1935

Civil liberty has even been further menaced these investigations reveal for those on relief during the Roosevelt administration, especially for relief-workers in New York City.

Contrary to Roosevelt's first stated policy and the chief relief administrator's orders, the New York police compiled a list of relief workers they deemed "Reds." Workers who sought in any way to organize were considered agitators and promptly dropped from the relief list. The relief administrator who did not know why they were dropped later lost his job.

Also General Johnson with his NRA would not recognize any organizational activity outside the American Federation of Labor the writer says, unless representatives brought to him signatures of all those planning to organize. Needless to say no signatures were presented.

Feinstein simply re-investigated the cases deemed Reds and describes them in this article.

HITLER surprised the world, and probably Il Duce too, this week when he announced to the League of Nations that he would allow in Germany no profiteering whatsoever on war materials. He said in his official communique that the Reichstag will investigate and stop all speculation on products which they are convinced are headed for Italy or Abyssinia. "Big gains do not constitute neutrality," said the spokesman in the Reichstag.

STATE election returns so far this week show a Republican swing in New Jersey and New York, while Kentucky remained Democratic. Roosevelt made little comment on the returns, but friends are quick to point out that while Republicans gained control of the assembly in New York the popular vote showed a majority of 400,000.

In contrast to our fierce campaigns and competition for office come reports from London on an election to be held November 14 for seats in the house of commons. Of the 615 seats for which holders are to be elected thirty-eight candidates are already elected by virtue of having no one who will oppose them!

Of 1,345 candidates for office sixty-five are women, including the well-known Viscountess Astor. Some doubt is expressed for the re-election of Ramsey McDonald as Lord President of the Council.

LEAGUE action this week fixed November 18 as the day on which the League world shall cut off all credits to and purchases from Italy of a score of key products and war materials. Following this decision Premier Laval and Sir Samuel Hoare, of Great Britain, gave "pep" talks on the necessity of loyalty in the enforcement of the sanctions. Meanwhile private negotiations among Great Britain, France and Italy go ahead vigorously in their search for a means of peaceful settlement, but to little avail so far. In Rome anti-British riots by students and other civilians are being staged on the streets.

It was reported in Paris, according to the New York Times, that at the London naval conference next month Italy will ask for the neutralization of the Strait of Gibraltar, a thing which would strain British-Italian relations even more dangerously.

CHINA announced a new monetary plan for the rehabilitation of her tottering monetary system this week. Her new program includes, the nationalization of silver, the restriction of bank note issues to three government owned banks, the stabilization of the Chinese dollar at its present level; and the legalization of bank notes for payment of all debts expressed in terms of silver. By the first provision all holders of silver must turn it in for legal tender notes.

There is also a report of a ten million pound loan by the British government to help China get back on her feet.

The Japanese are very much perturbed over the Chinese changes. They say that it shows a rejection of Chino-Japanese co-operation and reveals a British intention to control Chinese trade.

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

"FREEDOM OF THE AIR"

REVELATIONS concerning censorship of news and general information via the radio should give cause for much concern. Recently it was charged that the Federal Communications commission is censoring remarks over the air. It has been charged that the National Broadcasting company has entirely too much of a monopoly of what goes out on the air waves. Still more recently has been the allegation of the American Civil Liberties union about "censorship" over a Cincinnati station.

The fact that liberals are very rarely given time to express opinions on the air and the further and still more disconcerting fact that even "news" is being censored has given impetus to three resolutions introduced by Representative Byron Scott of California calling for:

1 As a condition of its license each station should set aside regular periods at desirable times of the day and evening for uncensored discussion on a non-profit basis of public, social, political and economic problems.

2 Would make it mandatory for every station representing a controversial issue to give a hearing to at least one opposing view.

3. Would free stations, though not speakers from legal liability for remarks on such programs.

4 Would compel stations to keep accurate and public records of all applications for time, indicating what was granted and what refused.

Of course, cognizance must be taken of the fact that there would be many difficulties of administration, but they would be no more difficult than those "faced by any honest open forum."

This drive for freedom of the air is exceedingly significant today since there appears to be a united front of broadcasters representing the acme of reactionary ideology.—The Bearcat.

MISSISSIPPI'S MONKEY LAW

ONE of the finest things the Mississippi legislature, now in session, could do would be to scratch from the statute books the law that forbids evolutionary theories to be taught in state supported schools.

The "monkey law" is a hang-over from the bitter dispute of several years ago when the church and its traditions assailed with bitter invectives the discovery of new scientific truth.

At the time the church felt that belief in evolution would destroy real religious faith would render null and void the Bible.

Today it is different. The church has discovered that the revelation of truth is not sacrilegious, that true religion and true science in no way conflict. The "monkey law" symbolizes the intolerant attitude that wilfully, blindly condemns without a sane, logical study of the facts.

Both Tennessee and Mississippi have their statute books cluttered up with this ridiculous ruling. In Tennessee, according to Judge Raulston, who presided over the famous Dayton trial ten years ago, schools "are disregarding the statute throughout the state." "It has never been taken seriously in Tennessee, and never will be," declares a Tennessee editor.

The same thing is true in some Mississippi schools; in others, the law is being scrupulously observed. Authorities even go so far in one Mississippi school as to take science books from students every session and tear out the pages dealing with evolution before returning them to their owners.

Lawmakers should recognize that science is probably more capable of arriving at truth in a strictly scientific field than they are. A really scientific mind would be the first to reject the theory of evolution if truth proved to be otherwise.

It is preposterous that the government of Mississippi should pass judgment on what is and what is not scientific truth to enact laws calculated to put the brakes on free thinking and investigation.

Almost all educational and religious leaders have turned

WHERE IS OUR SPIRIT?

Thanksgiving is fast approaching, but you would hardly know it if you are to judge by the amount of Odd and Even spirit that is being displayed. In past years, this friendly rivalry was fostered with pep and enthusiasm, but now it seems to be more and more on the wane. This is rather a pity, for the Odd-Even tradition is one of the few worthwhile ones remaining on the campus. It should mean to us what football does on other campuses. It is our one big chance to sing and shout and cheer, and show that we really have some school spirit.

The basketball and volleyball games are the highlights of the Homecoming celebration, but in order to make the teams go in and really feel that they have someone besides themselves interested in the outcome they need some enthusiastic evidence. This could be done by pep meetings; and everybody should turn out for them at one time or another! The songs should be learned—really learned—so that we could really put them over at the games. There is nothing so encouraging to the players as cheers to victory as if they were really meant.

Everyone noticed the spirit that was manifested in the dining room at Hallowe'en dinner when the whole student body chimed in on Garnet and Gold. We could do it again and for just as worthy a purpose at the Thanksgiving games.

Where is the Even spirit that will never die? What evidences are there of the glories that the Odds have won? Come on, everyone, let's have some really good pep meetings and put something into them!

Signed: Clotilde O'Rourke.

Two roommates in the dormitory have solved the problem getting up in the morning the Ring Tum Phi. Every before turning out the lights two boys put fifty cents in middle of the floor at a equidistant from the two beds. When the alarm clock goes off the morning, the one getting the money first keeps it. At Florida State, as broke as we are that would be a good way eliminate sleep entirely, because both persons would stay awake night with one eye on the clock. On second thought we'd have nothing to worry about, for where would we get the fifty cents?

Tree-Hees

I think that I shall never see
A thing as funny as a tree.
"A tree whose hungry mouth is pressed Against the earth's sweet flowing breast."
And while her mouth is anchored there
Should "lift her leafy arms in prayer."
The tree would stand upon her face,
And hoist her legs in empty space,
While baby robins sing tweet tweet,
Among the hair upon her feet.
From blueprints made by fools like me
'Twould hustle God to make a tree.

The Temple News tells us of the investigation of a De Pauw University professor to discover which sex handles the truth less carefully. Boys he says, start out by being more truthful than girls, but before long this procedure is reversed, and they become even more adept at lying than the girls. The boys reach their full falsehood telling power at high school age. Then, when they get to college they seem to have more regard for the truth. What college?

The Social Week

Students Plan Activities for Holiday Entertainment

Students who are not leaving the campus this week-end to visit their parents or friends are planning many activities to entertain themselves with during the holidays. These include, teas, trips to camp, hay rides, slumber parties and waffle breakfasts.

Among the groups entertaining this week-end is the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority. Tomorrow morning several members of this sorority are planning to enjcy a breakfast hike.

The girls will leave the campus about 6 o'clock and will hike out the Thomasville road to Rosalind Parker'e home. There they will enjoy an old-fashioned country breakfast.

On Sunday morning there will be a waffle breakfast given at the sorority house on West College street.

The affair will be extremely informal with waffles and coffee forming the main part of the menu.

The committee in charge of this affair includes Banks Wood, Clarice Sanchez, and Jean Harris.

Theta U. Hay-Ride

The members and pledges of Theta Upsilon who remain at school will be entertained with a hay-ride and steak-fry given by their patrons, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Carter, tomorrow night.

Among the girls who will attend this hay ride are Margaret Neff, Anne Donnell, Mary Louise Hoenshell, end Lorraine Gyles.

The members of the Delta Delta Delta sorority will entertain Sunday afternoon with an informal tea honoring friends.

The house will be decorated with fall flowers carrying out the informal motif. Hot tea and wafers will be served.

The members, pledges, and rushees of the Alpha Xi Delta sorority are planning to spend part of Armistice week-end at Camp Flastacowo. They will leave this afternoon and return late tomorrow

Canoeing, swimming, and other water eports will be enjoyed, as well as dancing and camp fire games

Cabinet to Entertain

Freshman Cabinet will entertain freshmen who remain here over the holidays with an all-day trip to camp Monday. The girls will leave from the back of Bryan hall early in the morning, returning in time for dinner.

Several students are planning to attend the bridge dedication at Apalachicola Monday

Some of the sororities are planning to entertain friends with pyjamas and slumber parties tomorrow night These wil be followed by breakfast at the houses Sunday morning.

Personal Mention

Mary Litschgi will visit with Jo Taylor in Atlanta this week-end.

Sara Tillman will have Jane Grey Stevens as her house guest in Tampa this week-end.

Adelaide Duval, an alumna from Ocala visited here at the Delta Delta Delta house last week end.

Among the girls who attended the Georgia-Florida football game in Jacksonville last week-end were Billy Hotard, Jewell Turner, Betty Peck, Janet Charles, Anne Kirkwright, Kathryn Barrs, Lucy Williams, and Margaret Ware.

Visiting at the Delta Delta Delta house during the week were Virginia Kee and Ella O'Neill, alumnae from Daytona Beach.

Miss Florence Tryon, of the Demonstration school, will visit in New Orleans this week-end.

Mrs. R. S. Garcia and Miss Elsie Coats from Daytona Beach will be guests at the Beta Phi Alpha house tomorrow.

Hazel Noe was pledged to the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority last week.

Dr. and Mrs. C. D. Ranney and Mr. and Mrs. H J. Davis will spend the week-end at the Alpha Chi Omega house with Margaret Ranney.

Mrs. Mary Church Baugher, an alumna of the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority, from West Palm Beach, was a visitor at the sorority house this week.

Shirley Pemberton and Dot Williams are going to Atlanta this week-end for the Georgia Tech-Auburn football game.

Clarice and Annia Laurie Sanchez will visit in Albany, Ga., this week-end as the guests of Mrs. Frank Jefferson, an alumna.

Groups of freshmen are being taken to camp Flastacowo for the day by the freshmen floor chairmen. The girls participate in canoeing, swimming, and other camp sports.

Miss Kay Warren will have as her guests for Armistice week-end her parents, and her sister Eleanor, an alumna, all of Jacksonville.

Louise Lassere from Fernandina is visiting at the Alpha Delta Pi house.

Directors of Halls To Be Relieved Of Week-end Duties

Directors of the residence halls on campus will be relieved of a portion of their duties during the Armistice holiday week-end, according to Miss Maude Flowers, residence hall director.

Dormitory offices will remain open as usual, but due to the fact that only a small number of students are remaining in the dormitories over the week-end the social directors will be relieved by student assistants. However, one director will be available in each office during the week-end.

PHI MU NATIONAL INSPECTOR IS TO BE HONORED WITH SORORITY COFFEE

Honoring Mrs. J. E. Redwine of Gainesville, Georgia, national inspector of the Phi Mu sorority, the members of the local Phi Mu chapter will entertain at an after-dinner coffee Wednesday night.

The lower floor of the house will be decorated effectively with deep shaded autumn flowers and leaves. Coffee and sandwiches will be served during the evening to the guests.

Membere of the faculty, alumnae, patrons, faculty advisers and patronesses will be invited to meet Mrs. Redwine at this time.

Mrs. Redwine makes her annual visit to the chapter next week. She will be a guest at the sorority house Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Hostesses at the after-dinner coffee, given in her honor will be Roberta Clifford, Janet Griffithe, Barbara Hendry, Lucy Houser, Jimmy Lee Malone, Marion Mason, Elizabeth Pierce, Mary Perry Pollock, Mary Frances Whisnant, Fair Milteer, Mabry Sumner, Caroline Barrett, Nancy Bryan, Joe Cunningham, Sophie Draughton, Pearl Gay, Peggy Gay, Peggy Gerald, Mary Ingle, Mary Jane Johnston, Ethel Jones, Jean Smith, Helen Stewart, Margaret Wilson and Marian Purviance.

STUDENTS LIVING IN UPPER REYNOLDS HONORED GUESTS AT FRIENDSHIP TEA

Members of the Kappa Delta, Sigma Sigma Sigma, and Delta Phi Epsilon sororities entertained last Sunday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock at the Kappa Delta house on Copeland street with another of the friendship teas sponsored by Pan-Hellenic.

The honor guests at this time were the students living on the upper floors of Reynolds hall.

The girls were met at the door and escorted to a receiving line composed of the presidents of the three sororities, Josephine King, Kappa Delta; Ruth Feinberg, Delta Phi Epsilon, and Marian Marsh, Sigma Sigma Sigma.

The decorations used throughout the house consisted of arrangements of autumn leaves.

During the afternoon tea and cookies were served with representatives of the three hostess sororities presiding at the tea table.

Sanctums of Florida State Girls Picture Aesthetic Side of Life

The casual observer while wandering about the dormitories sees many expressions of what might be called the aesthetic side of living. For though their means be limited the courage of college girls never wavers, and by the end of the first quarter most rooms present a colorful appearance. Far be it from us, however, to say what those colorful appearances might do to the experienced eye of the interior decorator.

Although her roommate complains that it makes her seasick, one girl, who is a sailor by heart, has created a nautical atmosphere in their room. There are pictures of all types of boats, some tossed about in storms, others in placid waters.

The most prized possessions of many girls are pictures of movie stars (males of the species almost always). By their pictures Clark Gable and Mickey Mouse are competing for first place, while Nelson Eddy ranks near the top of the list.

Not only have the Dionne quintuplets found a prominent place on the front page of newspapers, but also on the walls of the dormitories. They may be found in many rooms, in many different poses.

One owner, who is an art major, proudly displays her own work.

Few are the rooms in which is not a picture of the "boy friend," always occupying a prominent place. And none would be complete without some pictures of the family.

A senior, apologizing for a disreputable tropical scene, explained that she had acquired that picture as a freshman to help her through the winter.

A firm believer in the power of suggestion has placed the picture of a girl, bent over a book, just above her desk. She says it gives her moral support.

Perhaps the quizzical expression on a visitor's face was responsible for an explanation of some modernistic paintings. The owner explained that she didn't know what they were, but it was amusing to try to guess.

Then there is the typical college room adorned with pennants. Two girls are in heavy competition to see who can get the most pennants. Both are progressing very well.

Perhaps the most unusual room is the one with many Japanese prints. One feels on entering the room as though she has wandered into a foreign country.

YWCA Gives Hallowe'en Fete Friday Afternoon For Costumed Children

The recreation center sponsored by the Young Woman's Christian association gave a Hallowe'en party at the playground on Friday afternoon from 3:30 to 5:30. One hundred and twenty-five children were present, most of whom were in costume.

Contests were held to see "who was who," a prize being awarded to the child who was most difficult to recognise. There was also a prize awarded for the best costume.

After the contests there were games and marches to victrola music, following which the children were given lollypops decorated with Hallowe'an colors.

While the children ate the lollypops Peggy McMichael, in a cavalier costume, and Betty Scott in a gypsy costume, told stories.

The story-telling was followed by various sports, including baseball, football, dodge ball, jump rope, and sliding.

Assisting with the Hallowe'en entertainment were Myrtle Lowery, Katherine Gregory, Ella Arosarina, Sue Whitaker, Martha Jackson, Betty Hatch, and Virginia Northcutt.

Students May Attend Bridge Dedication, Dean Announces

Among the activities which are of interest to the students at Florida State College for Women this week-end will be the dedication of the Gorrie bridge at Apalachicola Monday.

An announcement has been made that students may attend this dedication, but juniors and seniors may attend only in groups. Sophomores and freshmen must have a regular college charepone, upperclassmen chaperonage being inadequate.

Students who are planning to attend this affair are Lucille Ham, Grace Wicks, Vivian Marshall, Ruth Lind, Janet Cook, Margie Weems and Elizabeth Spencer.

Education Department Sends Four to Meeting In Madison Yesterday

Members of the education department who attended the Suwannee River Education association meeting in Madison yesterday are Dr. Nathaniel Mc : Salley, dean of the school of education, Dr. David H. Briggs, supervisor of critical teaching at the demonstration school, Miss Margaret McCurdie, critic teacher and supervisor of English at the Demonstration school, and Miss Nita Pyburn, instructor in education.

At the general meeting Dean Salley talked on teacher training.

The Suwannee River Education association represents a district of the Florida Education association and includes those counties contiguous to the Suwannee river.

College Girl Philosophizes On "All-American Tragedies"

BY PATRICIA HAMILTON

Had Theodore Dreiser only known all the tragedies which go on during a college girl'e career, he might easily have written another book entitled "All-American Tragedies," and if this manuscript were to be hidden away to be treasured for posterity, and if it were to be some day dug up by those females who are to inhabit the world after us, it might be revealed that the tragedies of college careers are nothing new under the sun, nor will they change much in years to come.

The college girls of 1935 vary little in their ideas of tragedies, which include anything from finding the pocketbook deflated when the bill-boards feature such stars as Ja Crawford and glamorous Garbo, to such dire tragedies as straightening the room the day before the janitor comes to scrub, or entertaining a "blind" date, unaware of the sudden appearance of the "one and only" on his annual trip to Tallahassee.

This is, of course, not to mention such calamities as that of a girl finding a shiny red bump on the end of her nose the day before her sorority dance, or the junior-senior prom. And then there is always the girl whose main worries consist in trying to decide whose bid to go on, what late dates to give to whom, and how to avoid future mix-ups like the last time when "Jim came while Dick was still saying good-night.

The main tragedies of the academy co-ed of 1835, although unimportant and old-fashioned to us, were as distressing to them as ours are to us. Think of the alarm aroused when the tape measure ambraced more than twenty inches around the waistline, or the humiliation of having hair that was too thin and straggly to make a respectable braid! Which only leads us to conjure on the nature of the tragedies that will worry the co-eds of 2035! Perhaps they will be the same; perhaps they will be entirely different; perhaps their tragedies will include such fanciful errors as mistaking medicine pills for chocolate sundae pills or pressing the wrong button when they desire a store of knowledge for recitation But these disasters are not for us to worry about, for, no doubt, the girls of 2035 will merely have to press another button and all will be remedied.

Last Orientation Meet Held Saturday; Andrews And Dorman Make Talks

Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews and Dean Olivia N. Dorman spoke to the freshman class at the last orientation meeting held Saturday at 11:30 in the college auditorium.

Dr. Andrews, director of personnel, centered her talk on the academic work of the students and on the college as a preparation for an occupation.

Dean Dorman gave the history of Florida State College for Women, explained the traditions concerning Fealty and pointed out the changes made in this year's ceremony.

At the close of the meeting Dimples Turner, Mary Jane Johnson, and June Maule led the class in school songs and yells.

fessor, eight for an associate professor, and ten minutes for a full professor or dean. In that case we think turn-about should be fair play. An instructor should wait three minutes for a freshman, five minutes for a sophomore, eight minutes for a junior, and ten minutes for a senior. And as for our waiting ten minutes for a full professor or dean, almost any of us would wait half an hour to see these personages full.

Play-Nite For Grads Planned

Women's Athletic Board Announce Officials For Homecoming

The Women's Athletic board met last Wednesday night to discuss plans for homecoming.

Mary Miller was appointed chairman of Homecoming Play-Nite at the meeting. This Play-Nite will be conducted especially for the alumnae Plans for a Faculty Play-Nite on November 22 are also well under way, according to an announcement made by Rose Panowski.

Officials for the Odd-Even volley ball and basketball games, which will be played on Thanksgiving morning, were announced. Miss Grace Fox and Miss Katie Montgomery will officiate at the volleyball game; Miss Elizabeth Autrey, Miss Mary Settle, Miss Betty Washburn, and Miss Claire Redfield at the basketball game.

Class games, which always precede the Odd-Even games, will be played on Tuesday, November 12, and Thursday, November 14, from 4:30 to 6 o'clock. On Tuesday afternoon the volleyball and basketball game between the freshman and sophomore classes and the game between the junior and senior classes will be played. On Thursday afternoon the winner-loser games will be played. Officials for the volleyball games are to be Miss Fox and Miss Montgomery, while Miss Autrey, Miss Washburn, Miss Settle, and Miss Redfield will officiate at the basketball games

At the meeting Beth Daane announced the present plans of the Outing club which include the building of two outdoor fireplaces with grills at Camp Flastacowo, and the sponsoring of afterooon trips on Saturday to camp. These trips are for anyone who wishes to spend the afternoon at camp. The truck will leave Bryan hall at 1:30 and will return at 5:00 o'clock.

NAZIS-SPORTSMEN?

Jeremiah Mahoney, president of the AAU, has asked that the Olympic games be removed from Germany. If this cannot be complied with, he contends it is necessary that American athletes refuse to participate in order to demonstrate to the German people the attitude of the large number of true sportsmen in this country. Holding the Olympics in Germany, he maintains, would mean paying tribute to the crooked cross of Nazidom.

The views of this eminent sportsman are shared by many others equally as important. Bob Newhall and Heywood Broun, once a sports writer, concur. Religious publications such as the Catholic "Commonweal" and the Protestant "Christian Century," of course, oppose holding the games in a country where their co-religionists have been mistreated.

There is no necessity for entering a longwinded discussion of Nazi atrocities since Hitler's ascension into power. It is an incontrovertible fact that the rabid Nazis could not discontinue their race-baiting during the period of the games even if they wanted to. This would be selling out, in the eyes of their followers.

It is equally clear that no American athlete can participate in the games without compromising with the highest principles of sportsmanship. There are no alternatives.

EVER-CHANGING SOCIETY NEEDS ENTERPRISING SCHOOLS

Addressing the Southern California Regional conference of the Educational association, Dr. Goodwin T. Watson of Columbia university advanced the concept that while the economic depression from which we have recently emerged had its roots farther back than 1929, educators are just beginning to realize the duties of their profession at such a time. "Schools should now show enterprise and make their programs life-like if they are to affect the character of living in the future," says Dr. Watson.

But in a larger sense, youth has not waited for educators to recognize their problems, but rather have they accepted the challenge flung at them by the depression, united the proverbial apron strings and planted their feet squarely on the ground, striving to raise their voices above the chaotic whirlpool. In a sense, the various governmental projects came as an answer to the ambitious protests of its youth, who have proved that they will not fall by the wayside until someone decides to do something about it, but proceed without the pampering guidance which might have been characteristic of youth before the lesson taught by the recent economic catastrophe.

Now it is the duty of society to accept not only Dr. Watson's challenge to work together for building the character of youth, but to accept the challenge of youth, to plan a society which will justify its faith.—Junior Collegian.

Co-Eds Take the Stand

College Girls Are Cross-Questioned on Subject Of Money; Exhibits Include an Empty Bag and Show Stubs

By NAN O'SHAUGHNESSY

Many are the woes of the college girl but greatest of these—money. A college girl is facing her trial. The rear of the courtroom is crowded with an array of elderly people, wearing predatory expressions, clasping mangled checkbooks, and throwing spitballs. In the front rows are several young women of the college type, you know—corrugated finger wave, fraternity breastplate, and flat feet. These throw placating looks toward the back of the room and absently pat the plaintiff, one of their own kind who is wearing a righteous look and counting to a hundred by fives.

Exhibit A is an empty pocketbook.

Exhibit B is a wheel barrow full of theatre stubs, candy papers, cigarette packages, and a bulbous parcel labeled Miscellaneous.

They have her on the stand now and the rear guard is about to sling vile innuendoes. She says her allowance is fifty dollars a month. The front row faints to a man. She says it takes care of clothes, sorority dues, school supplies, cosmetics, laundry, soap, and amusements. She is able to save some of it. (An illy-concealed expression of disbelief from the rear). She is cross-questioned unmercifully and admits that she sees one movie a week, goes out to meals about three times a week, buys magazines and frequent freshment, has her hair done every week and goes to out-of-town hops when she has a bid, which amounts to about four times a year. She visits out-of-town friends and football games occasionally. And she still SAVES some? Certainly, about five to ten dollars each month. The judge is awakened by a glass of water in the face. The young lady adds that her average is of the A variety. Sudden clearing of throats in the collegiate section. The young lady is led from the stand and hurriedly gotten past photographers and reporters.

The next stooge states that her allowance is ten dollars a month. A sigh of understanding from the front row. She admits that cigarettes are her greatest expense. She says she doesn't smoke excessively, but is just a natural for "bummers." The "I'll Remember This" brigade forgets, and she is allowance-less by the middle of the month. She moves out weeping, accompanied by friends.

The next victim is a pretty wench handling fifteen dollars a month. She admits she is unable to save anything but finds this amount adequate for spending money. She has the usual expenses, but her greatest item is movies. She sees three a week regularly. She has not gotten very good grades, but she considers this inevitable with her strenuous play schedule. A middle-aged gentleman stands up in the back of the room and asks in a broken voice that she be detained. The judge fines him for contempt of court and escorts the lady to the door

Another offender is urged up She is the epitome of business-like correctness. She states clearly that she has five dollars a month and finds it ample. At this point she waves decorously to her beaming parents. She says she doesn't smoke, eat between meals, nor go to movies. She keeps an itemized budget, and taking it out begins to recite her expenditures since her last ice-cream soda. She is carried out noisily, but with great dispatch.

It is dinner time and the collegians on the front row begin to emit loud catcalls and hisses. The judge takes the subtle suggestion and adjourns the court. The C's pick up their flat feet and lope out, followed by puffing parents.

NSFA Sponsors Tour Of English Debating Teams

NEW YORK — (NSFA) — Debate teams representing Oxford and Cambridge universities have arrived for a five week tour of colleges under the auspices of the National Student Federation of America. The Oxford debaters will meet teams in midwestern colleges and the Cambridge men will tour in the New England and Middle Atlantic states.

Richard U. P. Kay-Shuttleworth and A. W. J. Greenwood are officers of the Oxford Union society and have been active in the Labor Youth movement. C. J. M. Alport and John Ryle are both law students and active in English politics. The most popular issues they will debate with American colleges are: (1) That the judiciary should have no power to override the decisions of the executive and the legislature; (2) That a written constitution is a hindrance rather than a safeguard to social progress.

Oxford's first contest will be with Duluth Junior college, Duluth, Minn., and Cambridge's first will be Allegheny college, Meadville, Pa.

Freshman Discovers She is Victim Of Rare Malady; She Has Thoughts

Finds Professor Considers Her Ailment a Virtue, "Chief Aim in Attending College is To Learn to Think," He Says

By EVELYN FISHER

Once upon a time there was a little freshman. She was only an ordinary little freshman, bewildered in her new surroundings, respectful to upper-classmen, and not too sure what it was all about. There was only one thing peculiar about this average specimen of the incoming hordes—once in awhile she thought. These occasions were rare but very perplexing to the little freshman. Sometimes a strange wave of unorthodox feeling swept over her as she studied and an ice water trickle of thought slid down among the brain cells of her cranial cavity. With all these little brain cells clicking she paused to look at the people around her and at these uncompromising tasks that she performed. They grew a little mishapen and distorted in the lucid crystal of these rare moments so that the little freshman began to have an Alice-in-Wonderland feeling. But these strange sensations passed quickly and she was not very much disturbed by them at first.

After a month of college life, however, the symptoms of this unusual malady seemed to increase and the little freshman became genuinely alarmed with what was wrong with her. At moments, she found her view of this uniform pattern around her seemed to enlarge and she could glimpse ever so faintly something that was vaguely disturbing This state of affairs continued until one day a professor told her class that the chief purpose of their college life was to teach them to think. Something clicked in the little freshman's mind. To think! The words seemed somehow familiar like the things one dreamed and dimly remembered. Suddenly the brain cells snapped and the swiftness of discovery, such as must come to any explorer as he sights land, swooped down upon the little freshman. That was what disturbed her. She thought! The professor droned on in his scholarly voice. It seemed that he considered this quality of which he spoke as a virtue. He even recommended it as beneficial to the student.

The freshman left his class a little dazed. Thinking was good for you and yet it upset you. How strange. She walked past the ivy-hung buildings with new fact-seeking eyes What did they stand for? Why should she be sitting in their dusty, desk-crowded rooms? Who were these people walking down the pine-bordered paths toward her? What did they expect from this place? Did they think?

The humdrum of classes murmured on while each day brought new things for the eyes of the little freshman and unheard of words to her ears. She looked and lisetned and after while she began to think about them. Out of the haze of themes dissected frogs, parallel readings and reports she began to think about those things she studied. All at once she began to question their value and to wonder about their usefulness to her. The words of speakers began to filter back into her mind. Dimly she began to understand what they had meant when they said, "You are here to learn how to learn!"

Now she began to be curious about the people around her. She examined minutely her neighbor in a fairly interesting lecture. That young lady was calmly employed in writing a letter over which she seemed to be taking a great deal of pains. This procedure was punctuated with yawns and innocent glances into the lecturer's face. The little freshman was not disturbed about her neighbors' actions since she had done the same thing once or twice; but she began to wonder why one should sit in a lecture to write letters and why one would lecture unheard There was no one who could answer such things for the freshman so she merely thought about it for awhile and forgot it.

With her newly acquired habit the little freshman began to watch the events of the college a little more closely. She saw the leaders of student affairs and their strivings to mould the student body's thought; but she also saw the glassy indifference of the vast majority of the students and heard the unmeditated words of slander of the other vast majority. She saw the leaders challenge this indifference and this slander only to have the majority remain inert or turn to other interests. She couldn't understand all this strange behavior so she only thought about it and wondered.

There were other things too that puzzled the little freshman. There were the students who sat behind her in an artists series and complained, quite audibly, that the Brahms waltz was not "hot" enough. There were the students who sat in front of her and said in lush-ripe voices "how marvelous" each time a selection was finished by the shining artists of the stage The freshman thought about these two opposites and she wondered, very impersonally, which was the worst. When she went to a lecture on contemporary conditions because she was genuinely interested in hearing it, there were only a dozen students there and that made her wonder too.

Grade slips came out in a flurry of excitement and the little freshman looked at those black lines on the thin white slip A, B, C, D, E, F. What did they mean? How could that unknown professor who talked to them three hours a week evaluate the quality or amount of work that she had done?

The year advanced and the freshman became more familiar with the ways of the college. She began to recognize the taboos of the place and to speak its language. Gradually she learned to recognize the genuine leaders from the sham ones, the genuine movements from the fads. At the end of the year there were yet a great many things that the little freshman did not understand. She thought that when she was a glittering sophomore perhaps she would understand all these things, but she wondered about that too.

The SURPRISE STORE

We can supply you with a complete outfit for the coming holidays; Everything from the latest Sport Suits to the newest Evening Gowns.

Mild and yet they Satisfy —how do you do that?

Well, to start with, we take tobacco from our own Southland — mild ripe tobacco with lots of natural flavor but no harshness or bitterness.

THEN AS A SECOND STEP—

We blend this home-grown tobacco with spicy, aromatic Turkish tobaccos from across the seas. These Turkish tobaccos, you may know, have a flavor and fragrance entirely different from our own.

AS A THIRD STEP—

These tobaccos are cross-blended — welded together — the best way we've found to get a more pleasing flavor and a better taste in a cigarette.

THAT'S WHY CHESTERFIELDS ARE MILD AND YET THEY SATISFY

Lecture Forum Series Opens Next Thursday

Langdon-Davies, Author, Scholar, Publicist, To Speak Here

YEAR'S PROGRAM NOW COMPLETED

Wide Variety of Subject Matter Chosen By Student Senate

The Honorable John Langdon-Davies, English author and scholar, will be the speaker at the first lecture forum to be held on Thursday November 21, according to an announcement made this week by Dr. Elizabeth O. Andrews, director of personnel. The subject of his lecture here selected by the student senate, is "Contrasts in the Art of Living."

Mr. Langdon-Davies, who arrived from London in October, has been described as a brilliant, fascinating, prophetic, younger English publicist, who does not regard himself as a scientist, but as an educator trying to put difficult subjects accurately into simple language for the layman to understand. Although he is fearless in his liberalism, Mr. Langdon-Davies is not a propagandist but a student of events, says Dr. Andrews. He is the author of books of as widely different a nature as The New Age of Faith, A Short History of Women, Man and His Universe, Dancing Catalans, and Man Comes of Age.

Learns New Subjects

While not lecturing or writing books, Mr. Langdon-Davies amuses himself in learning a new subject, listening to music, or living in a new country. During his life he has engaged in many professions and hobbies, having been at one time or another schoolmaster, stage manager, candidate for Parliament, publicity director for a movie company special correspondent to newspapers during the Spanish revolutions, student of modern and folk dancing, and anthropologist. However, rather than to submit to the chains of academic life, he prefers to remain free to live and study as he pleases.

Mr. Langdon-Davies has found a large following in colleges, teacher, and general audiences interested in current affairs and desiring a clear understanding of contemporary scientific thought.

The entire program of the lecture forum for the year is now complete. The program consists of seven other lectures to be given at intervals during the year. The next two lectures will be given on December 11 by Mildred Seydell, newspaperwoman, and on January 8, 1936, by Upton Close, the interpreter of the Orient. The subjects to be used by these two lecturers also chosen by the student senate, are "Satching Celebrities" for Miss Seydell, and "Who Are the Japanese," for Mr. Close.

The subjects for the other five programs have been arranged by the Daytona Beach forum. On February 12, Mr. Hubert C. Her-

Andrews Speaks To Girls' Camp

Director of Personnel Visits NYA Project

Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel, spoke last Sunday evening to the girls at Camp Byrd, Sebring, Florida, on the subject of "Our Possibilities."

Camp Byrd, which is under the National Youth administration, is for unemployed girls not in school. The camp was started as an experiment for two months, but may be continued under the project. Byrd lodge, which was originally used for a clubhouse and is now used for the camp, is located on a lake to which the girls have access.

There are about seventy-five girls between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five at Camp Byrd, according to Dr. Andrews, of which forty per cent are high school graduates The girls live and work in the large house that was once a clubhouse and are taught music, industrial arts, health, home management, hygiene, dramatics, and other school subjects. There are sixteen people in charge of their work.

Disturbed Maid Begs Librarian For Ibid Book

Damsel in Dire Distress Jolts Calm of Hall Of Knowledge

The reserve room is quiet. The tables are untidily scattered with books of all kinds and sizes, only the very top of a head being visible above each.

Knowledge is in the making.

The librarians are becoming drowsy, having exhausted the supply of odd jobs behind the desk. Aspiring students are so engrossed in Roman customs, the monks, or the psychology of the mind, that even breathing seems to be momentarily suspended.

In fact, the atmosphere is so tense that a cockroach might be heard walking across the floor.

A student assistant glances hopefully at the clock, and sighs with relief. In a few minutes she will have the pleasure of dropping a bomb into the silence by announcing closing time. She relishes the thought that it is her privilege to set off the charged atmosphere. She likes to see the startled jumps of those who are buried in the middle ages or lost in the realm of poetry.

Just as she puts the last card in place, rises, and prepares to make her announcement, a disheveled young maiden, apparently in distress, dashes up to the desk, thrusts her notebook forward, and pleads, "Please—I just have to have this book by Ibid."

NSFA Conducted Peace Program

Students Discuss Phases Of Subject Related To Our Own Age

A student-led convocation was held last Tuesday morning under the auspices of the local forum of NSFA. This convocation program was devoted to a discussion of peace and the part of students in attaining it and was given as a part of the peace movement being sponsored by the national headquarters of NSFA.

In opening the program, Mary Jeanne McKay, chairman of NSFA, stated that it was not necessarily the purpose of the speakers to present the viewe of the student-body but rather to present three general views on the subject of the attainment of peace.

The talks made had already been given at a meeting of NSFA two weeks ago and represented therefore the type of reports that precede each regular forum meeting.

Speakers and their subjects were: Clarissa Knight, who spoke on tendencies in world peace; Blanton Barrett, who spoke on peace through preparedness, and Hazel Bowman, who talked on peace through education.

Florida State Plans Details of Homecoming

Tentative Program Issued By Faculty Committee Under Longmire

DINNER TICKETS GO ON SALE TODAY

Several New Features Are Planned for Alumnae During Reunion

With less than two weeks remaining before the ninth annual homecoming for alumnae and parents of students of Florida State College for Women, the homecoming committee, headed by Miss Mary Settie, instructor in physical education, is making final preparations.

The tentative program for the festivities which begin Wednesday, November 27, and continue through Saturday, has been issued by Miss Rowena Longmire, chairman of the faculty committee chosen to assist with the program. Miss Longmire, associate professor of English, is chairman of the committee on cooperation with the alumnae, and chairman of the faculty committee.

Tickets on Sale Today

Tickets for the Thanksgiving dinner, Thursday, went on sale this morning, according to the homecoming committee, at the alumnae office. Seniors will purchase them from Lillian Turlington.

Practices for the Odd and Even demonstrations are being held and the inter-class games are anticipated as among the best in many years.

The homecoming celebration opens Wednesday, November 27, with the registration of alumnae, who may sign and receive identification badges in Bryan hall all day; in the Administration building before and after demonstration; the alumnae office all day; and, in the gymnasium Thursday only. The alumnae have been asked to wear these identification badges since these will admit them to reserved sections at the demonstration Wednesday and at the games Thursday.

Color rush will be held on Wednesday morning as is customary. That night either Even or Odd demonstration will be given, according to the results of the traditional drawing for the "lucky night." Even "night out" will follow Odd demonstration with Odd "night out" coming after Even demonstration.

Judge Davis to Speak

Judge Fred Davis will speak at the Thanksgiving service which will open the Thanksgiving day program and will be held in the Augusta Conradi theater. Later

Eminent Cornetist Presents Program in Leon Auditorium

Bohumir Kryl, Famous Musician, First Selected Sculpturing as Career; Thinks Coeds Easily Side-Tracked

"I enjoy my work more every day," says Bohumir Kryl, conductor and world-famous cornetist, who presented a varied concert program at the Leon High school auditorium Wednesday evening.

Mr. Kryl has been a famous figure among the country's bandmasters for a long time, and, according to the Los Angeles Times, is "the most remarkable cornetist in the world. He belongs to the virtuoso school of conductors and has succeeded in establishing technical discipline with his group of players. He now travels about the country with his own symphony band, which is comprised of an exceptional personnel of artists. The band contains forty instruments.

The organization, which is now entering upon its thirty-first consecutive season, has during this period given over twelve thousand concerts and traveled over one million miles.

"We appear annually in over a hundred colleges and universities. This year we have given concerts at one hundred and sixty-four different colleges and universities," said Mr. Kryl, "and we have traveled about 70,000 miles."

"And speaking of universities," continued Mr. Kryl, "why do you not combine your school here in Tallahassee with the University at Gainesville? It is not practical to have two separate schools. The boys and girls should be together. Then everyone would be happier. Yes?'

When asked about his early life, Mr. Kryl said, "I was born in Bohemia—now called Czechoslovakia. I did not first choose music as my career but sculpturing. I studied under my father who was a sculptor. I made many figures. I did several statues for Lew Wallace, the author of Ben Hur. I cut for him Ben Hur and the Prince of India.

"When I reached the age of twenty I changed suddenly—I decided to be a musician. After years of study I came to America—to Indianapolis. There one night, through the aid of a friend, it was arranged that the great Sousa should hear me play. The next morning I saw Sousa in the depot and he asked me to join his band. I gave up all my other duties and went with him. That was 39 years ago. For seven years I played in Sousa's band, and then organized the symphony band I now travel with."

To the question, "Do you think women can have as interesting careers as men?" Mr. Kryl said, "Yes, women can and do have as interesting careers as men, only

PIANIST TO PLAY HERE TONIGHT

Guiomar Novaes, noted Brazilian pianist, will present a concert in the college auditorium tonight as the first artist series program of the year. Her program will feature the works of many well known composers.

Two Weeks Art Exhibit Given

Display Contained Dolls Pottery and Other Student Work

An exhibit of work done by students of industrial arts was held during the past two weeks by the industrial arts department in its new location on the ground floor of the education building.

One of the display cabinets in which the exhibits were placed contained examples of various types of pottery, including primitive and early Staffordshire forms, the latter being exemplified in two toby jugs and a yellow pitcher with an enamel handle.

In addition to these were shown vases and small animal forms illustrating an intriguing variety of colors and glazes. In the same cabinet were scarfs made by students of weaving.

Attractively displayed in another cabinet was a group of puppets and dolls. With these were leaves from a book on the teaching of figure-drawing which was exhibited at a meeting of the Southeastern Arts association held in the spring of last ypar at Charleston, South Carolina.

Another exhibit is planned for the coming week. At this time the displays will consist chiefly of heads done in the modeling class and baskets constructed from native and imported materials.

Forthcoming projects for industrial arts students, according to Miss Emily Wilburn, assistant professor in the department, include work in metals, the making of basketware and pottery, and the study of weaving, bookmaking, and camp-crafts.

Students engaged in pottery work are at present studying the early English type, while those in weaving classes are using early American patterns. Classes in industrial arts 101 are occupied with a study of bookmaking and the origin and development of designing as applied to books. In this work many interesting books and original illuminated manuscripts are used to stimulate student appreciation of the subject.

Distaff Awards First Place to Short Story By Catherine L. Levey

Catharine Levey was awarded the five-dollar prize offered each quarter by the Distaff, college literary publication, for the best article appearing in the magazine, according to Sarah Krentzman, editor. The prize-winning article was a short story, "Crisis."

Hazel Bowman received honorable mention for her article, "Low Aim Is Crime."

The judges for this issue of the Distaff were: Dr. Guy L. Diffenbaugh, professor of English, Earl L. Vance, professor of journalism, and Dr. Christian Paul Heinlein, professor of experimental psychology.

The Distaff is again offering a five-dollar prize for the best piece of poetry published in it during the year.

Campus Groups Make Budgets

Committee Makes Start Toward Proration Tuesday Night

The first official work of the present budget committee began Tuesday night when several campus organizations presented itemized budgets for consideration in the proration of the student activity fund, according to Evelyn Kennard, chairman.

The committee, which was created last year, has as its major duties the proration of the student activity fee after a survey of the activities covered by this fund has been made, and the approving of budgets as presented by different organizations on the campus.

The student activity fund is made up of the fourteen-dollar fees paid at the beginning of each year by regularly enrolled students and is used to support several activities and organizations of campus-wide significance.

Among the organizations which have presented budgets to the committee and are requesting a part of the funds are the College Government association, the Women's Athletic association, the four college classes, the Young Women's Christian association, the Florida Flambeau, the Distaff, the Flastacowo, and the Day Students' organization.

Also requesting a part of the student activity fee are the costume committee, the budget being submitted by Miss Henrietta Sivyer, associate professor of textiles and clothing; and the auditorium and stage committee with Miss Kemper Moore, assistant professor of speech, submitting the budget.

Other activities supported by the student activity fund are the annual artists series and the various art exhibits which are brought to the campus thoroughout the year.

The budget committee, which is composed of four faculty members and five students, can have no member who is directly connected wtih any of the organizations receiving a portion of the fee.

Faculty members on the committee include Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students, ex-officio; Mr. J. G. Kellum, business manager, ex-officio; Dr. Venila L. Shores, representative of the faculty committee on student affairs; and, Miss Anna Mae Tracy, representative of the faculty at large.

Students on the committee are Evelyn Kennard, chairman; Audrey Smith, chairman of the auditing committee; Grace Wicks, senior; Anna Glen and Jeannette Annin, juniors.

AAUW Meets at Andrews

Covey Speaks On Importance Of P.T.A. Work

Ushers in Observance Of National Education Week Tuesday

VITAL QUESTIONS ARE CONSIDERED

Displays and Posters Of Books, Statistics Are In Library

Observance of National Education week began Tuesday night at Florida State College for Women when Mrs. Kathleen W. Covey, state supervisor of Parent-Teacher education with the WPA, gave a talk, "The Importance of Parent-Teacher Work," to an audience of the Florida high school P. T. A., the other two parent-teacher organizations in Tallahassee, and the education students of the college.

Mrs. Covey's talk centered around the newly-made progress in the field of adult education, and the aims of the congress of parents and teachers.

Although it has been in existence for many years, adult education has only become organized during the last thirty years. With the cooperation of professional workers and with the awakening of interest in the social sciences, it has made rapid advancement, according to the speaker.

National Congress Meets

To meet the insistent demands for organization the National Congress of mothers met for the first time in Washington in 1897 and stated the objectives which form the basis of adult education today.

They are: the promotion of conferences among parents on vital questions of child welfare; cooperation with the legislators for the best training for the young; the enlightening of motherhood; the improvement of conditions of mothers; and the formation of mothers' clubs.

Mrs. Covey also stressed the importance of local P. T. A. groups to the community as media of study whereby both parents and teachers can learn how to educate the community in respect to its responsibility to childhood.

In the past two years the government has taken an interest in parent education by means of the W. P. A. which has broad objectives in aiding the problem of the unemployment of teachers, and in reaching district groups through the P. T. A. according to Mrs. Covey.

Mrs. Ralph Hamlin, president of the Florida high school P. T. A. presided over the meeting while Dr. Edward Conradi, Dean Nathaniel Moss Salley of the School of Education, who introduced the speaker, and Dr R. B. Parsons, superintendent at the Demonstration school were among those seated on the stage.

Water Pageant Is on Program

Life Saving Corps Will Take Active Part

Plans for the water pageant to be presented on Thanksgiving are taking definite form, according to Marion Weeks, chairman of the pageant. The first practice was held last Tuesday evening.

This year the water pageant, which will include races, diving and specialties, is to carry out the idea of a welcome program for the alumnae and visitors.

Because the seating capacity is limited, only 300 tickets will be issued, according to Marion Lessey, who is in charge of selling tickets for the affair Students who have their relatives visiting them may purchase the tickets, but as the pageant is chiefly for the purpose of welcoming the homecoming alumnae, such sales will be limited.

Plans are being made by members of the Life Saving corps to take active part in the water pageant Thanksgiving day.

The membership drive for the Red Cross, which was begun last week and which is being sponsored by the Life Saving corps is still in progress, according to Jane Tombaugh, president.

The Life Saving corps has made plans to organize a swimming club in the near future.

Novaes Will Appear In Recital Tonight

Lockwood Will Appear Nov. 23

Talented Woman Organist Is Concert Artist And Professor

Charlotte Lockwood, noted woman organist, will offer an organ recital at the second artist series to be presented at the college auditorium, Saturday, November 23, at 8:15 p.m.

Miss Lockwood was born in Hartford, Conn., and spent her youth in North Carolina. She displayed such musical talent thet at the age of eleven she was already organist of the first Methodist church, at Reidsville, North Carolina.

After graduation from Salem college, she came to New York City as pupil of Dr. Clarence Dickinson and within two years won the degrees of Associate and Fellow member of the American Guild of Organists. Later Miss Lockwood studied in Paris with Charles Marie Widor and in May, 1931, received the master's degree in sacred music from Union Theological seminary, New York.

In 1932 Miss Lockwood traveled extensively abroad and studied under Professor Gunther Ramin, organist of the famous St. Thomas Church, Leipzig. She is at present organist and choir-director of Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Plainfield, N. J., and West End synagogue, New York, and is a member of the faculty of the School of Sacred Music, Union Theological seminary.

In the course of the last few years Miss Lockwood appeared in many recitals and was chosen as soloist at four national conventions of the N.A.O. and the Canadian college of organists, winning the highest praise from her audiences and the press. She is rightly considered one of the outstanding American organists, being not only a fine virtuoso but a splendid musician as well. She is known to be keenly sensitive to the desires of every kind of audience when arranging her programs.

Athletic Club Will Initiate

Ten 'Goats' End Probation Period at Camp

"F goats," students who have won their athletic letters and have been serving a period of probation for the past three monthe will be formally initiated into the "F" club at Camp Flastacowo this week-end.

The "F" club is the only honorary athletic organization on campus. F's are awarded to those girls who make class and Odd-Even teams in two major sports, winning thereby twenty-five athletic points. They must also maintain a scholastic average of C.

Goats who are to be initiated this week-end are: Marie Joffre, Sara Hethcox, Mary Ward Peterson, Martha Baker, Janet Cook, Aileen Robinson, Harriet Lawrence, Carol Parabee, Tessie Dvoskin, and Bertie Mackery.

Active members include: Mildred Emmelhainz, president, Hazel Viertel, Betty Ostund, Betty Aiken, Caroline Athon, Elise Barrett, Katherine Bood, Janice Borton, Viola Brooks, Audrey Cooper, Beth Daane, Louise Gehan, Doris Isted, Felicia West, Ceil Levy, Francis Lewis, Doris McKenzie, Martha Makemson, Dorothea Marsh, Margaret Maxwell, Mary Miller, Kathryn Pratt, Rose Panowski, Shirley Stevens, Marie Taylor, Jane Tombaugh, Wynn Tuten, Marion Weeks.

Dr. Conradi to Attend Meet of Control Board

President Edward G. Conradi will leave today for Gainesville where he will attend the monthly meeting of the state board of control.

President Conradi also received invitations this week to attend the inauguration of Arthur A. O'Leary as president of Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., and the Florida national exhibit in Rockefeller Center, New York, in December.

Brazil Pianist Features First Artist Series Concert of Year

PROGRAM STARTS AT 8:15 O'CLOCK

Critics Acclaim Her For Style and Quality Of Touch

Guiomar Novaes, Brazilian woman pianist, will appear tonight at 8:15 oclock at the college auditorium in the first program of the artist series for 1935-36.

Senora Novaes, who was considered a child prodigy at four when she played marches for her little friends in kindergarten, made her debut as a major artist at sixteen years of age.

Studies in Paris

She was sent to Paris to study by the Brazilian government and won first honors from among 386 contestants to be admitted to the Paris Conservatoire.

After her debut she was engaged by the leading orchestras of Europe and a triumphant tour followed with recitals in London, Paris, Berlin, Munich, Milan, and Switzerland.

Her debut in this country was an immediate sensation as evidenced by the opinion of a critic on the New York Times, "Not every generation hears a Guiomar Novaes."

She made two successful concerts in New York, then toured the United States for the entire season and has since returned annually to this country.

Active in Politics

Senora Novaes takes an active part in the public affairs of her country, and she has often addressed clubs and made talks over the radio. Although she has said that her family and her music are her two careers, she believes that women in politics can help the world to come a little sooner to the solution of its problems.

Leading critics of music have written of her, "Breadth and virility of style and a richness of beauty in the recital—miracles of illusion. A recital of such beauty that every student in New York should have heard how a piano should sound."

Program for Tonight

Novae's program tonight, which is like her New York recital, is divided into three parts:

I

Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in D major, Scarlatti Sonata in E major, Scarlatti; Sonata, opus III, (Maestose, Allegro con brio ed appassionato, Arietta con variazioni, Adagio melto semplice e cantabile).

II

Three Etudes, Chopin; Mazurka, Chopin; Polonaise in F sharp minor, opus 44, Chopin.

III

Sonata in D major, Ernesto Halffter;

Wedel is Honor Vespers Speaker

Specially Planned Music Program Will Also Be Presented

Rev. T. O. Wedel Ph.D. of New York, is to be the honored speaker of the Y. W. C. A. at a special vesper service Sunday evening at 7:30 in the college auditorium. His subject is to deal with religious work in the college student's life.

Dr. Wedel is connected with the National Church Mission house of the Episcopal church and is the national secretary of the church on college work.

An especially planned program is to take place when Jessie Mae Key will play several organ selections and a quartette composed of college girls will sing. Dorothy Bryan and Marjorie Jones are in charge of the program under the leadership of Mary Jeanne McKay, who will lead the services. The Relative Workers' council will also aid in presenting the service. Ushers for the occasion will be chosen from the members of the freshman class

Immediately following the service an open forum will be held in Ruge Hall for invited guests.

Rogers Gives Peace Speech

Paints War Scene; Love For Humanity is Only Hope for World

The regular monthly meeting of the Y. W. C. A. was held Thursday morning at 11:30 in the Augusta Conradi theater when Dr. William Hudson Rogers, English professor, addressed the meeting speaking on "World Peace." Dr. Rogers gave active service in France during the World war and painted a very realistic picture of the days of war in the his address.

Mercia Scott conducted the meeting at which Anne Norris led in the devotional exercise.

Dr. Rogers said war was a ridiculous thing and should be avoided if possible. People who fight in the war have as their motto, "kill as many as you can" without even knowing who they are killing. They have no personal grudge against their enemies; they only kill them because of selfishness and because of a spirit of revenge.

According to Dr. Rogers it is suicide for any nation to go to war. Thirteen billion men were lost in the last war as well as 186 billion dollars. This makes a total of 1,530 men killed daily, costing a sum of 121 million dollars per day, each individual amounting to the price of $8,365 to be killed. It is entirely unnecessary to go to war and to make such a sacrifice of human lives of men who have done nothing whatsoever to have to face a firing front, he said.

There is one chance for peace, he concluded, and that is an active love of humanity. If nations had love instead of jealousy for one another there would be no cause for war; they would think twice and balk at the thought of annihilating loved ones.

Hosea Presents Recital

Sara Hosea will present a speech recital on the evening of November 20, at 8:15 o'clock in the Augusta Conradi theatre.

Miss Hosea will read "Surpressed Desires" by Susan Glaspell. An invitation is extended to all students to attend the recital.

Drama Goes Backstage

Stage Hands at Florida State Again to Function In Behind-Scenery Melee Preceding Odd-Even Productions

As the season for Even-Odd demonstrations draws nearer and as speech students begin practising for the first little theater performance of the year, those mysterious persons commonly known as stage hands again come into prominence and can be seen scurrying about campus with bits of stage property in their arms.

How many people really realize, however, that the stage hand is just as important as the star of the show or that the whole success of the play under production depends just as much on well-rehearsed backstage parts as well as well-rehearsed stage parts?

The stage is a world of unreality where all sorts of wonderful and imposible things may happen but behind this fairyland is a scene of grim reality, a place of hurry and bustle where one minor slip or mishap may ruin the evening's performance.

The terse command "lights out," is hissed to the electrician who stands at a switch board most nearly resembling the instrument board of a trans-Atlantic liner in its many complexities. He pulls the master switch for the "house," switches on the "foots," sets the various stage lights, while through the heavy curtain comes the subdued murmur of expectancy from the audience.

"Curtain!" comes the sharp command and the stage hands heave as lustily among the forest of ropes controlling the "backs" and "drops" as do the seamen on a full rigged clipper ship scudding before a raging gale.

The play now goes on but the activity back-stage does not cease. The property man marshals his "props" on his "prop table," ready at hand the instant they are needed. The stage manager has his "sets" in readiness for lightning changes between acts. The electrician must remain constantly by his switch box to change the lighting effect when needed. By pressing a single button or pulling a single switch he can, like a magician, change rosy dawn to dewy eve, and glaring mid-day to mellow midnight.

The constant bustle never ceases. Actors wait anxiously in the wings for their cues. The old troopers, calm and serene, are ready to make their entrances in the best manner possible. The younger, less experienced actors nervously repeat their lines for the last time or eagerly peek through the peep hole in the "set" to watch the progress of the action. Someone giggles, whispers or scrapes a chair and an imperative "Shh!" is heard from the harassed director. Silence reigns again for a short while.

With the evolution of the drama the people back stage have changed also. In ancient China the property man was a person of little importance. He was dressed in black so no one would notice him and was permitted to wander about the stage during the action shifting a chair or straightening a drape. He also carried a cushion in order that the villain might expire gracefully but painlessly.

The woes of the stage manager have increased a hundred-fold since Shakespeare's time. In those days all the stage manager had to do was shift signs reading "This is a dismal wood" or "This is the Sultan's court" and his work was done. Now he has myriads of "set pieces," "cyclorams" and "drops" to contend with.

The electrician is the latest comer to the back stage family. However, he is rapidly becoming the most important personage behind scenes. The modern tendency is to have little scenery and to create the atmosphere by lighting effects. He must manipulate many "spots," "foots," "flood lights," "overheads" and side lights, and at times he also uses a complicated series of mirrors to gain the desired effect. His work is a nightmare fantasy of gelatin sides and fuse boxes.

The modern little theater movement has only slightly affected the back stage world. If anything, it has increased its complexities while narrowing its space. Numerous experiments with lights, scenery, and general effects are being carried out in the little theater. The property man, stage manager and electrician are just as busy, and the actors are just as nervous as they are at a regular-sized theater. There seems to be no rest in sight for these weary slaves of the drama since in theaters large and small their tasks are becoming more difficult every year.

servation of this National Education week, a special exhibit has been prepared in the library. Display shelves in the front of the library have been entirely devoted to books on education, vocational guidance, the educational system, the college system, and other specific phases of education.

A poster included in the display shows a number of important facts and statistics of the present day system of education, including the following: the public school enrollments from 1905 to 1935; costs for school services per day per child, the distribution of teachers according to salary received; school housing conditions; analysis of factors causing increase in school costs from 1914 to 1935, and school costs compared with government costs as a whole.

A table of educational pamphlets rounds out the exhibit which will remain on display through Saturday.

Bellamy to Act in "Moor Born"

Play Shows Influence Of Geographical Locale On Characters

The cast for the play "Moor Born," which is to be presented December 10, 13, and 14 by the speech department, includes a person who is one of the chief attractions of the play, Dr. Raymond Bellamy, professor of sociology. According to Miss Kemper Martin Moore, assistant professor of speech and director of the play, Dr. Bellamy is doing an excellent piece of dramatic work, and the students and speech department appreciate the interest he is taking in the play.

Members of the cast and the charters they portray are as follows: Dr. Raymond Bellamy, the Reverend Bronte; Ruth Mock, Anne Bronte; Emily Johnson, Charlotte Bronte; Betty Boggs, Emily Bronte; Sarah Hosea, Martha; Betty Peck, Tabby; and Joseph Cawthorn, Branwell Bronte.

The stage setting for "Moor Born" will attempt to create the them of the play in design. "Moor Born" was written by Dan Totheroh, an American dramatist. Totheroh believes that geographical situations influence people and their philosophies of life. "Moor Born" illustrates that idea, and so the stage setting will show the predomination of the moor, even though the scenes are played indoors.

Miss Helen A. Thrush, instructor in art, is in charge of the stage setting. Miss Thrush has appointed the following three groups of students to assist her: the property crew: Evelyn Kennard, manager, and Banks Wood, Emily Davis, Grtrude Parks; the light crew: Louise Schwaderer, manager, and Victoria Crisp, Louise Lingo, Vivian Marshall, Betty Sweet Smith; the stage crew: Margaret Kay Anderson, manager, and Sara Hosea, Frances M. Pemberton, Mary Frances Whisnant, Gwendolyn Adair, Claire-nell G'Steen, Natalie Ash, Evelyn Betty Hamilton, aCroline Oliver, Betty Peck, Betty Pierson, Bettie Routh.

The production staff from the speech department is as follows: for research, Helen Hammond, Frances Lingle, Betty Ettlinger, Betty ePck, and Louise Schwaderer; stage manager, Betty Sweet Smith; assistant stage manager, Leona Stimmel; for properties, Dorothy Hill and Betty Ettlinger.

Frances Lingle is business manager for the production. In charge of selling tickets are: Vivian Marshal, Dorothy Detrick, Barbara Wells, Lillian Burford, Jane Oray Stevens, Helen Walde and Beverly Brown.

Helen Hammond, chairman, Ida Larkin, and Bulieme Russell are in charge of all publicity for the production.

Florida State Plans Details of Homecoming

in the morning athletic events will hold sway. First come the Odd and Even volleyball game, next the freshmen hockey and soccer games, followed by the Even and Odd basketball game. Seats will be reserved on bleachers for parents and alumnae

Immediately following these events a new and special feature of homecoming will be staged at the gymnasium. Alumnae have been requested to go to the large gymnasimum and all parents and students will sit in the balcony of the large auditorium. This is being held in order to enable alumnae to meet each other and exchange experiences. After this there will be a swimming demonstration by the Life Saving corps, conducted in the pool.

At 2 o'clock Thanksgiving dinner will be served in the dining room, followed by after-dinner coffee for parents and alumnae in Gilchrist parlor, with Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students, Miss Maude Flowers, director of the residence halls, and all social and house directors as hostesses. The home management house will entertain with an "at home." Other special entertainment in honor of parents and alumnae will be given at the sorority houses and at Reynolds and Jennie Murphree residence halls.

Tour Will Be Given

Friday morning parents may take a tour of the campus under the direction of guides who will met them in Bryan hall. There will also be an alumnae institute that morning, with Mrs. E. L. Beeson, president of the Alumnae association, presiding. Miss Louise Richardson, college librarian, has invited alumnae to the browsing room of the library to take part in an informal discussion about recent books.

The executive council of the alumnae will meet in the alumnae office that afternoon.

Another new feature of homecoming is the trip to Camp Flastacowo by alumnae and faculty. They will meet in front of Bryan hall Friday afternoon. Tickets for the trip may be purchased from Pearl Beverly at the business office or from Florence Tryon. Play-nite will be held in honor of parents and alumnae Friday night in the gymnasium.

Saturday morning will feature the Mortar board reunion breakfast at Mrs. Richard's home, transportation to be available from Bryan hall. Announcements of class meetings through the day will be posted on the alumnae bulletin board

The homecoming festivities will come to a close Saturday night in the gymnasium with a formal dance. Alumnae have been asked to wear their badges to this affair also.

THANKSGIVING DINNER ARRANGEMENTS

Reserved Tables for Thanksgiving Dinner

Tables may be reserved for all students wanting them.

Students not wanting to sit with any particular group will be placed by the dietitian in charge of the dining hall. Leave your name at the dining hall desk if you want us to place you.

Reserved table lists may be left at the dining hall desk on and after Nov. 18, beginning at 6 p. m.

Tables will be assigned by the dining hall management. Preference in assignment will be given to tables having guests.

Guest tickets must accompany the list of names for the reserved tables.

Assignments will be made AFTER LISTS HAVE BEEN CHECKED FOR DUPLICATE NAMES.

You will save yourself and us a great deal of work if you will check your lists carefully before handing in. See that your group has not been asked to sit elsewhere before you file your list of names. IF YOUR LIST IS NOT ACCURATELY MADE OUT IT WILL BE RETURNED TO YOU.

After all lists have been checked, the table assignments will be posted on the bulletin board, main door, dining hall arcade.

Vacancies at reserved tables will be charged for at the rate of .50c each. We do this in order to use all available space in the dining hall and so take care of all guests that want to be with us.

All arrangements for tables will be handled by Mrs. White.

Food Orders For Thanksgiving Week-End

All food orders for Thursday and Friday, Nov. 28 and 29, must be filed by Tuesday, Nov. 26.

All Thursday food orders must be called for at the storeroom by 5:30 p. m. Storeroom closed after 5.30 p. m.

College Dietitian.

Campus "Knit-Wits" Indulge Purling Mania at Odd Times

At Bridge, in Convocation, in Lectures, Even In Theater Do These Modern Arachnes Ply Their Useful Art

"Knit two, purl two, knit two, purl two."

These words may be heard, chanted in a monotonous undertone by students aspiring to become skilled in the ancient art of knitting, at almost any time and any place on the campus of Florida State College for Women.

The achievement of this accomplishment might be compared to a contagious disease, and without a doubt it is contagious. Who started the constantly growing group of knitters on the campus no one knows, but certainly one never sees a girl anymore who simply sits and stares into space.

Vari-colored bags of all shapes and sizes are the inseparable companions of these students now. In the wild dash to the smoking rooms after lunch to smoke a cigarette before a 1:30 class, the needles, ball of yarn and bit of skirt, sweater or scarf go along to have a few more stitches added.

In convocation, in bridge games when one is fortunate enough to be "dummy," in the dining room between courses and even in some lecture classes when the professor is either very agreeable or blessedly near-sighted, girls are seen frantically knitting their yarns into colorful, stylish garments.

One student last week was so enthralled with this "new game" that she knitted furiously, and expertly too, in a darkened theatre paying strict attention to the film at the same time.

Less skilled students puzzle more laboriously over their directions for knitting than over a grammar lesson. Sometimes they become impatient and give up the terrible ordeal for a while, but never for long, because they can't bear to see a classmate or sorority sister excel in anything that seems simple enough for anyone to learn.

Not very long ago such an ancient, old-fashioned and useful way of spending "off" hours would have been scoffed at and ridiculed mercilessly. Perhaps today the younger generation is reverting to the pleasures and simple pastimes of grandmother's day.

Many students find that knitting or crocheting another vastly popular art, affords agreeable relaxation from the mental exertions and general nervous tension of the average school day. At the same time it eases the conscience since no time is wasted and something useful is actually accomplished. Other students knit because they take great self-satisfaction in fashioning something beautiful from the fruits of their own labors. They are proud of their accomplishment, and praise of their work is as refreshing and gratifying as a cool drink on a hot day.

A few students make a business of it. They work hard and rapidly to fill an order for someone who wants to wear the garment to church Sunday or to Gainesville next week-end. One gets no relaxation and little pleasure from this way of knitting, but the more orders filled, the more ice cream, picture shows, and cigarettes that can be had.

Religious Worker Will Speak Here

Presbyterian League Has Charge of Service

The Reverend Dr. T. O. Wedel, national secretary of college work for the Episcopal church, will be a guest on the campus of Florida State College for Women, Sunday and Monday when he will make a special visit to Tallahassee from his home in New York.

Dr. Wedel will speak at 10 o'clock Sunday morning at Ruge hall and students are urged to be present since his talk will be of special interest to them. He will preach a sermon at St. John's Episcopal church at the usual 11 o'clock service, and Sunday night he will be guest speaker at the Y. W. C. A. vesper service, which will be held in the large auditorium at 7:30 o'clock. Immediately following this an open forum will be held in Ruge hall for student religious leaders, at which time Dr. Wedel will discuss problems of interest to then.

Student conferences may be had with Dr. Wedol all day Monday. In the evening he will be the principle speaker at an informal meeting of the Religious Worker's council following a buffet supper at Ruge hall.

Among other social functions planned for the visitor is an after-dinner coffee Sunday afternoon to which members of the faculty, the Ruge hall committee, and presidents of the various Episcopal organizations in Tallahassee have been invited. Sunday evening preceding vespers service he will be the guest of the Episcopal student vestry at a supper in Ruga hall.

The Presbyterian student league will take charge of the church service Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Presbyterian church. The league service, which was scheduled for last Sunday evening, was postponed until this week. The service will be in the form of a play entitled "Christian Youth Building a New World." Those taking part will be Lela Gibbs, Rebecca Keith, Ruth Myrick, Marjorie Pain, Virginia Taylor, Cameron Thompson and Ted Wallace Appleyard.

they just don't talk about it so much. There are many famous women today. Women are coming to the front more every day.

"The trouble with girls is they are too easily side-tracked. Now take you college girls for example You prepare yourselves for a career, then suddenly you become attached to a young man and give it all up to marry him.

"Most girls want someone to take care of them for the rest of their lives. But if you are just going to be a parasite you will be a bore to a talented person.

"Women worry too much about their beauty. The men don't care. Women should put more time on doing worthwhile things. Beauty shines out through a great personality. You can be beautiful and still be great. So I say—go ahead with your career."

Fur Coat and Noisy Radiators Warning of Approaching Winter

Fall of Mercury Causes Rise of Concentration In Some Students While Others Answer Call Of the Wide Open Spaces

Although there are as yet no icicles on the fountain to gasp over and take pictures of, leaves are falling, fur coats are being strutted, and radiators are clanking to announce the arrival of winter.

While the mercury on the thermometer gradually falls, some student's grades will rise as the coziness and warmth of dormitory rooms provide an incentive to stay in and study, in peace and contentment. Why, in such an atmosphere even Shakespeare becomes a "regular fellow" and as we read English literature we feel we're working up real acquaintances with the "o' cronies" back in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Psychology, with all its talk about I. .'s and morons, becomes almost interesting and comprehensible when sitting snug by the radiator while the cold wind blows outside.

Cold weather, however, affects other students the opposite way. Some can't stand to be "cooped" inside when nature is providing crisp, invigorating weather to make the cheeks glow without the use of brush or rouge.

The cold weather even starts more freshman jokes. One freshman was setting her alarm clock for 5:30 when someone remarked that she certainly was industrious getting up so early to study. But the freshman corrected this statement saying she wanted to be sure to wake up and turn on the radiator. Poor freshman! she didn't know the radiators were automatic.

Another freshman thought there was a wood-pecker outside her window every morning at 5:30. Her curiosity got the best of her and imagine her surprise when she found that instead of a woodpecker it was simply the radiator clanking and puffing around getting warmed up. But still, this wasn't as good as the girl who was walking down town the other afternoon, and as she looked rather cold, Dr. Conradi stopped to pick her up, but she politely informed him that she didn't accept rides with gentlemen whom she did not know.

Three Concerts Listed For Music Department

Three musical programs will be presented during the month of December, according to Dean Ella Scoble Opperman of the school of music.

On Tuesday, Dec. 3, Miss Mary Esther Winslow of the college faculty will give a faculty recital.

On Dec. 12 the college orchestra will give a concert, with Director Walter Ruel Cowles conducting

The Glee Club of Florida State College for Women will present its annual Christmas program on Dec. 15.

Proposal Made Changing Rule

Continued Membership In WIASG Downed In Senate Meeting

At a meeting of the Senate Thursday morning a constitutional change was proposed so that permissions to go to college towns for the week end would not have to be handed in two days ahead of time.

Legislation already passed by executive council providing that the Chairman of the Budget Committee be a member of Senate, and that the Freshman Adviser be elected when the other members of the College Government association are elected, was voted on. This constitutional change will be posted, then the student body will vote for or against the measure.

The resignation of Monica Wiley as a Freshman Floor Chairman was accepted, and the appointment of a new adviser was put in the hands of Minna Dunn, Freshman Advisor, and Audrey Farmer, chairmen of Jennie Murphree.

W. I. A. S. G. membership was voted to be discontinued for Senate had already voted that there be no delegates sent to the convention and continued membership was thought to be an unnecessary expense.

Delegates to the N. S. F. A. Convention in December at Kansas City, it was decided, are to be elected for this special purpose. Announcements of the meeting will be made ahead of time so that those interested may attend. One junior and ona senior are to be sent to the convention.

Lucy G. Linn brought up a discussion of the Student Volunteer convention and a committee was nominated to investigate the merits of the convention. The members of the committee were Lucy G. Linn, Doris Mackensie, Martha Makemson, Anna Glen and Carol Parabee. Lucy was elected chairman of this committee by the members of the committee itself.

The next Senate meeting will b held nex Thursday morning for the purpose of voting on the proposed measure concerning permissions to spend the week-end in college towns.

Burlingame is Hostess At Psychology Seminar

The Psychology seminar held its first meeting of the year at the home of Miss Mildred Burlingame, professor of psychology, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

The discussion centered around a paper, "Some Aspects of a Motor Test," prepared by Mrs. Christine Scarborough, who is at present working for the master's degree in psychology.

Those attending the meeting were the professors of psychology, students majoring in psychology, and students taking six or more hours of psychology.

The seminar meets once a month in the homes of the faculty members to discuss questions proposed by its members.

AAUW to Hold Forum At Ruge Hall Next Friday

The American Association of University Women will hold a forum meeting at Ruge hall, Friday, November 22, at eight o'clock.

The Education committee with Dr. . zda Deviney, chairman, will be in charge of this meeting and Mrs. Herberta Leonardy will be the guest speaker Mrs. Leonardy who is Assistant Director of Division of Projects for Florida P. W. A., will speak on Educational Projects of the State P. W. A.

Students as well as the general public are most cordially invited, according to Dr. Ann Forbes Liddell, president.

Saturday Night Bath Discarted For Sanitation

College Farm and Dairy Use All Precautions For Cleanliness

The traditional Saturday night bath is out-of-date on the college farm, where the dairymen do not wait until Saturday night to give the cows a bath since sanitation is one of the major requirements of the farm.

In 1917 when the college farm was begun, the college owned very few cattle and hogs. In 1923, however, the pasture lands were improved, and later vegetables were produced on the farm for the use of the college.

In 1929 plans were made to put old farm lands in use, and 450 acres of land just southwest of the college were bought.

Since 1930, according to J. P Love, who is in charge of the farm, the dairymen had developed a herd of high grade cows and a herd of hogs, and the college farm had developed some very useful pastures with the aid of the CWA, FERA, the state road department, the county, and the city.

During the summer of 1935, 300 acres were added to the farm, and this land is now being grubbed and cleared as a PWA project. Hay, corn, and oats are raised on the farm.

In addition to this project, a complete dairy unit was finished this past summer, and put into use in September. This dairy, which is considered a model for the state, is valued at approximately $50,000, and is complete in every respect, including sanitary and other modern equipment. The milk is handled in a barn finished inside with tiling.

The milking room, in which are a cold storage plant and steam sterilizers, is of the same structure. The average amount of milk produced at present is 200 gallons a day.

Although the farms produce no vegetables for the college dining-hall at the present time, they produce all of the sweet milk and pork used by the college. A dozen men are ordinarily employed by the farm during the entire year, Mr. Love said, but this number is greatly increased at harvest time.

Hamm and Marshall Aid In Armistice Ceremony

Two students of Florida State College, Lucille Hamm and Vivian Marshall, took part in the dedication ceremony of John Gorrie bridge across Apalachicola bay on Armistice Day.

The girls presented Governor Dave Sholtz with a pair of gold shears to cut the silken ribbon. These shears rested on a satin pillow inscribed "Governor Dave Sholtz, Gorrie Bridge Opening, Apalachicola, Florida, 11, 11, '35."

Station WTAL Gives Local Amateur Hour

Guitars, Mournful Voices Plus Nasal Accents Compete at Mike

.Gong!

Ha! That's just a camoflage, for nary a gong—more's the pity —greeted a fearful contestant in this week's WTAL amateur night program, in which cowboy and hill billy vied for honors.

Almost invariably to the tune of a guitar, seemingly unhappy creatures poured forth—via the "mike"—to the open range or the mountain side, their songs of hope and despair. And some of them merely poured forth hope and despair, minus tha song!

Surely the eyes of a Hoosier would have overflown had he tuned in and heard the trembling treble voice mournfully singing "On a Farm Down in Indiana Way" and a cowboy, out of his native haunts, would have longed for the Red River valley, on hearing a changing masculine voice sing that song. It was especially tender when the singer broke into giggles at several points in the song.

That famous phantom, The Lady in Red, was a subject of conversation again at Amateur hour, when a member of our own college told her story on the piano.

When the program opened Wednesday night, it was very Dark on the Delta, but the moon came out before the program was over and a Tallahassee boy sang—hitting only ona flat note during the entire song—"I Wished on the Moon."

And there are embarrassing situations on amateur programs—f'rinstance when one's guitar gets out of tune or blows a fuse at the beginning of one's performance, and one is forced to change guitars and start all over again.

Then, too, when the audience is as amateurish as the amateur, glances giggles, and occasional guffaws greet the performer.

The cotton field atmosphere was brought into the program by a negro scene, evidently based on the Amos 'n Andy pattern.

Despite the zero weather in Tallahassee, it was just Springtime in the Rockies for an amateur contestant, and one swain, a frequenter of our own playnights, sang "Girl of My Dreams." Who was his inspiration?

And no program, amateur or otherwise, is complete without "Put on Your Old Grey Bonnet" to the tune of a guitar—

The most popular number on the program, if popularity is to be judged by applause, was a reading by an F. S. C. W. sophomore, in which she portrayed a "farmer boy" with a nasal accent —accent the accent!

As inferred above, there were times—loads of 'em—when there should have been a gong. Maybe they were just being tactful or maybe they didn't have a gong. Oh well, there's always our dinner bell.

Or we could attribute any weak spots on the program to fright—after several numbers knees probably gave way and the floor became a retiring place for the weary bones of many a contestant.

But it's all in fun, and it is fun —tune in next Wednesday night on WTAL at eight o'clock in order to hear the vibrations of the local talent over the ether waves.

Gym Instructor Finishes Small Ten Foot Canoe

Miss Elizabeth Autrey, assistant instructor in physical education, has completed the construction of a kayak, and is starting on another.

A kayak is a small canoe. The one Miss Autrey built is made of bass wood. It is ten feet long, weighs twenty pounds, and will hold two persons. It is propelled by a double-bladed paddle dipped on alternate sides.

"The kayak is not hard to construct by anyone who has any idea of woodcraft," Miss Autrey stated. The set is manufactured by the Mead Glider company in Chicago, and a blueprint accompanies the kit. It is only a matter of sawing the wood, tightening some screws, stretching the canvas over the skeleton framework, and painting in any design desired."

Because of its light weight, it is difficult to keep the kayak on a straight course It takes some practive before you can learn this, according to Miss Autrey.

New Handball Court Is Ready; Has Regulation Dimensions, Says Settle

The new handball court just south of the tennis courts is now complete and ready for use. It is expected that the court will be used to a great extent for handball, battleboard tennis games and for practicing tennis strokes, according to Miss Mary Settle, instructor in physical education.

It is the regulation American one-wall handball court, 20 feet wide and 34 feet long It has a short line according to regulations, 15 feet from the board and the service line is nine feet beyond the short line. Thirty-four feet from the wall is a long line marking farthest limits of the court.

Handball is played with a tennis ball or soft ball and singles or doubles may be arranged. A soft glove is used for the handball. Battleboard tennis is played much like tennis, Miss Settle said, and a regulation tennis racket is used. Miss Settle's swimming class will begin handball soon, she said.

Shall We Swear Our Teachers?

Today fourteen states including Florida have laws requiring teachers, in private as well as public schools, to take a loyalty oath, subjecting them to a procedure which if continued will ultimately reduce our school system to a cloistered, sheltered confine where ideas die before they are born.

Besides having a teachers' oath bill the state of Massachusetts has a law requiring pupils in public schools to salute the American flag once every five days and provides a penalty of five dollars a day on teachers whose pupils refuse to do so. An eight-year-old boy recently caused a serious disturbance and as a result was expelled from school for refusing to salute the flag because of religious scruples. The fate of this boy and four others from other sections of the state is now being decided by the Massachusetts supreme court, which is in session to consider the question of whether a student in a public school may be expelled for declining to salute the national ensign.

Only last week the City School board in New York decided that they would not give diplomas to local high school graduates who refused to sign a loyalty oath to state and national governments.

In the case of both pupils and teachers it is difficult to see how compulsory lip-service to the flag will make them more loyal, as proponents of the laws evidently think they will. Many leading educators of the country definitely oppose such indoctrinating measures on the basis that they trammel upon freedom of thought, and in many cases, religious freedom as well. As Mr. Kenneth Gould has recently written, "Loyalty oaths are an entering wedge in America for the kind of 'totalitarian' state which regiments to a single goose-step every school, every church, every concert hall, theatre, laboratory, or other cultural interest.'

A Harvard graduate writing for the Alumni bulletin says that no man should be employed as a teacher who does not speak the truth as he sees it and do what he believes to be right. He also thinks that the only time an oath will influence such a man is when it coerces him into some course inconsistent with the foregoing and that the effect of an oath, therefore, is to make a teacher into a liar and a mountebank.

Commenting upon the teachers' oath bill recently passed by the Massachusetts legislature, the Boston Transcript says that "America is doomed to generations of moral mediocrity and mental stagnation if its schools and colleges are forced to confine their teaching to what is politically 'safe.'"

It is to be hoped that cases resulting from such attempts to place academic freedom in shackles will reverberate throughout the United States until its citizens realize that in their attempts to stifle free expression they are undermining the basis for all progress by substituting propaganda for education.

"Browse"? Try and Do It!

Perhaps the most noticeable misnomer that daily greets the unsuspecting student eye is that found on the intriguing label of an upstairs door in the college library. The "browsing room" which the college catalogue proudly presents as a feature unique in the South is, in actuality, an almost useless appendage to the library, as it stands.

Little do the uninitiated dream what subtle mockery is contained in the large collection of favorites that line the walls of the room, the inviting easy chairs, soft lights, and other "browsing" facilities.

For here there can be no leisurely survey of materials at hand, no beginning a novel, no settling down to read whatever catches one's fancy—and there is much to catch it—without being ever-conscious of the impending "closing time!" interrupting in the relieved voice of the attendant. No one can "browse" under such a condition. The student who finds herself with a free afternoon or evening and in just the mood for a good book and a comfy chair, will, ten to one, find that this very afternoon is one of the times the library has chosen to keep the "browsing room" closed.

An obvious solution by which the "browsing room" can be made a pleasant place in which to spend free hours presents itself immediately to the mind of any student who is questioned on the matter. "If they'd leave the room open long enough at a time for me to enjoy myself, I'd love it," remarked a senior. "But we cannot employ enough attendants to do this," the library staff responds. Then dispense with the attendants entirely, we counter.

The privilege of "open stacks" is enjoyed on this campus. As long as this custom prevails, a guarded and unavailable browsing room is inconsistent with a policy which to all appearances, purports to allow the students an unusual freedom of access to the wide varieties that their library has to offer them.

We Fought For A Privilege We Don't Use

"What is the world coming to?"

Current opinion has it that this expression is one belonging exclusively to members of the older generation. It is curious that older people alone should be interested in the world of the future when it is the younger ones who will have to live in it. It would be fitting if the question were sometimes heard on our college campus. It can be used not only in relation to manners and morals, but also in relation to the influences which recent trends in business and politics will have on the world of tomorrow.

Before a situation can be questioned, however, there must be some knowledge of the subject behind it. This is probably the explanation of the indifference of our students to world happenings. The opinions on the campus concerning current events are largely a result of mob psychology. No one likes Mussolini because he is making war on the Ethiopians. The League of Nations is a fizzle for not doing something about it. So is the World Court (on general principles). Therefore, the United States should not join either one.

It is obvious that ideas thus expressed have no intelligent thought behind them. As for New Deal legislation and the effect it has had on business, public utilities, social welfare and the like, only students of economics and political science have an inkling of what it is all about, and that is hardly to their credit.

We women fought for years for a "say-so" in politics. Now that we have it we don't even choose to have an intelligent "say" much less a "say-so." This does not mean that we all have to become reformers or political orators, but we might at least maintain our self-respect by showing some interest in world happenings.

So far, we women have failed to understand that the headlines of a newspaper may ultimately affect our lives. We have some notion that business and politics are the concern of corporations and stock companies, or cities and states. The truth is that they affect people as individuals, women as well as men. They determine salary checks, taxes, education, and in the event of war—which is always possible—they will reach into the family circle itself.

Students on our campus have opportunities to become acquainted with current affairs through N. S. F. A. forums and bulletin board, International Relations club, and the lecture forum series that is sponsored by the college throughout the year. Then too, the newspapers and better magazines are at the disposal of everyone. Why not pick up one of them occasionally instead of a fashion magazine?

THE DECLINE OF THE PROFESSIONS
By Harold J. Laski
Harpers, November, 1935.

Doctors and lawyers and other professional persons have always been given social pre-eminence, says Laski, but no longer do they deserve it if they continue to subordinate their objective—the public good—to promote the ends of big business.

Laski would have the legal profession become a great corporation under government control with its members working for the public on a fixed salary at fixed charges. Not only would this eliminate the present insecurity of their positions, he says, but it would also eliminate our two-law system, that is, one law for the rich and one law for the poor.

In the case of doctors the change would not have to be so great, he adds, because doctors are already organized. We would only have to extend the idea of insurance for medical care to all members of society he contends in order to make the whole profession a public one.

Not only doctors and lawyers but teachers, journalists and others are driven to subordinate truth by pressure of privilege. In summing up, he says society "must expunge from its habits the privilege that is built upon economic power" and "organize all professions important to its daily life as to render them independent of the profit-making motive."

PAPER CROWN
Books Abroad, Autumn, 1935

Nominations for the Nobel prize by a hypothetical jury of critical and creative writers named by the editors of this international quarterly are interestingly presented in this symposium.

Maxim Gorki, Russian writer, receives the most votes including those of Judges Sinclair Lewis, George Jean Nathan, Erskine Caldwell and Angel Flores.

Theodore Dreiser is second with three votes for the Nobel prize, while Gide, the French novelist, Eugene O'Neill Franz Werfel, Austrian author of Musa Dagh, and Willa Catha each received two nominations.

The country most represented by the number of nominations was the United States. However, we must remember that the hypothetical judges are prominent writers and critics in the United States.

Many of the writer-judges prefaced their choice with statements to the fact that they did not approve of literary prizes or they did not think any individual or group was capable of making such a decision. Those who made decisions, however, gave reasons for them.

HUEY LONG
By George E. Sokolsky
Atlantic, November, 1935

Revenge on Roosevelt and the administration for personal reasons, yet a sincere wish to do something for the "poor white" classes from which he originated marked the incompatibility of Huey Long's political policies.

Sokolsky attempts to show us, with a few personal close-ups of Long, that he put on his "press character," that is, clowning and using crude language, whenever any press agents were around. His real success however, Sokolsky finds, lay in his serious sincerity with the lower classes whom he wished to help and did help to a noticeable degree.

Long would not have run for president, the writer says, but he was determined that Roosevelt or Hoover should not be re-elected. Rather would he turn five million votes to Upton Sinclair, Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, or others.

In conclusion Sokolsky asks the questions "Will Huey Long become the symbol of protest against the un-Jeffersonian activities of the administration?" "Will he become the inspiration for a Jeffersonian revolt against centralized government?"

PARENTS VERSUS NON-PARENTS
By Gilbert Seldes
Scribner's, November, 1935

Seldes thinks those who have children and those who do not have children inevitably will form two distinct classes in society.

The parents and the non-parents begin to argue now whether tax money should be used for schools or for roads, he says. Eventually the childless will argue for aeroplane fields when the parents will be wanting good roads for their children's cars.

Since non-parents do not have as many necessary expenditures as parents it is inevitable, Seldes says, that the time should come when there will be a sharp conflict in their interests.

Spirit of the Week . . . . By Adams

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

By GRACE MARY WEBSTER

THE annual convention of the American Bankers' association in New Orleans this week turned out to be a "free-for-all" between the friends and foes of the New Deal. The man who won out, Orval W. Adams of Salt Lake City, wants bankers to declare an embargo on government bonds to halt the "reckless spending" of federal funds. He won on the withdrawal of his opponent, "in the interests of peace and harmony"; his opponent had been nominated by the nomination committee. The nomination of Adams from the floor precipitated the first election fight in twelve years. Adams was elected second vice president and will not succeed to the presidency until 1937; nevertheless, his bitter opposition to the New Deal is an evil omen for Roosevelt.

The National president of the association urged that the emergency was over and that it was time for the government "to get out of business."

ITALY threatened withdrawal from the League of Nations this week under stress of the fast-approaching November 18, when the sanctions of 52 nations against Italy are to go into effect. Great Britain has remained adamant in her determination to carry them out to the last letter. The eyes of the world look to Germany and the United States questioningly. Germany this week placed an embargo on the export of principal raw products to any nation, the list resembling closely the list proposed by the 52 nations; officials explained that the only reason for this action was the internal condition of Germany. Nevertheless, last week the Reichstag promised to prevent any "profiteering" enterprises on war products. As for the United States, there is some sentiment for new laws allowing such embargoes to be passed at the next meeting of Congress in January.

WE'RE surprised at the newspaper which prints "all the news fit to print" for not drawing the line somewhere. Major Purviance was present at the Armistice celebration in Madison Square Park—hence the recalling of her distinction.

THE unsolved murder of a Japanese marine in Chapel has been the cause of some disturbance this week. Shanghai Chinese evacuated Chapei for the International Settlement in Shanghai following rumors of Japanese military action impending. On Armistice day a riot broke out in Shanghai, but International Settlement police quieted this. Meanwhile the problem is left to Sino-Japanese diplomacy.

G. O. P. Chairman Fletcher, commenting on last week's elections sees "the boondogglers on their way out." In general, however, the only indications to be taken from the elections is that Republican Philadelphia has rebuffed a Democratic bid for control; that Democratic Kentucky remains Democratic; and that the New York State Assembly returned to a normal Republican control, with a majority Democratic vote. So what? We might say that it shows a drift in northwestern United States from landslide spirit, to a healthier, more normal voting population.

Interesting in connection with this election are the results of a

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

CAN WE BE INDIFFERENT?

Very often, these days, and truthfully enough, we young people hear that we are living "in stirring times;" it seems that the trouble with most of us is that we are all too seldom stirred by them. Many among us, when by some miracle we do chance to think at all about great world problems ternational understanding, are such as peace and war and insingularly unaffected by what we discover. We hear of Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia, of Hitler's mobilization of his Nazis; and in our smugness and indifference the most that we say or feel is, "That is too bad—but what has that really to do with us?", and let it go at that. The viewpoint of far too many of us is a sort of glorified "So what?" attitude.

We honestly don't sanction war or attempts at it—at least we don't want us in one—but we seem all too willing to sit back, once a temporary flurry of excitement is over (if, indeed, we reach even that point) and forget all about everything in the international set-up not immediately affecting ourselves. But the fact is that if another great war does come it will be our generation which will be called upon to suffer, and die, in the battles. Isn't it, then, of vital importance that our generation, especially those of us who are receiving college educations and will be looked to for leadership, should do our utmost to establish an indestructible sentiment for peace in America, to seek to understand rather than ignore the aims and ideals of other nations, and to keep ourselves intelligently in touch with the problems of international importance?

The writer does not advocate a wild-eyed, unreasoning program of flag-waving and ineffectual shouting to the housetops about peace and war, but does maintain that this generation has a responsibility and an opportunity, in no wise negligible, to do something—something constructive—about current world affairs.

We cannot be complacent fatalists about this matter of war, accept with careless resignation the situation in the world today, and hope to avoid eventual calamity. A society can be no more progressive in government, no more effective than the people who compose it. Especially is this true in such a democracy as ours, where the every pulse of national sentiment, if it be significant, can be made to reverberate in Washington. If a sentiment for peace is not voiced, and voiced insistently, war propaganda will have an open field in which to work.

The generation of which our mothers and fathers are members became embroiled in a world catastrophe partly because it as a group didn't realize the danger in what was happening, did not undertake to exert a very strong pressure for peace and, worst of all, allowed "patriotic" hysteria to beat down whatever rational thinking was present. They can protest that they did not realize just what was happening until it was too late, that they had had no recent experience to teach them: our generation has no such alibi. We do know what can come as the result of ruthless imperialism and selfishness and tyranny; the recent war showed us all that strikingly and horribly enough. We have every opportunity to know, through the press and the radio and college classes, what is going on today along just such channels as those that led to and finally precipitated the wholesale massacre of 1914-1918. We cannot but feel, it seems, that had the majority of the older generation cared seriously enough and demanded enough and worked hard enough toward harmony and peace in the pre-war era, that peace might very conceivably have been achieved. Can we not, must we not, in the name of humanity, take a lesson from the blunders of twenty years ago and see to it that there shall be no repetition of the last war?

The road to peace lies not through the inertia of complacency and of a false sense of security on the part of the people, rather does it lie, we believe, through the cultivation on the part of the rising generation of a spirit which demands, and proposes firmly to establish in our world, those things which will lead to peace — understanding, fair dealing, cooperation, and justice among the nations. Very soon now, we will hold in our hands the reins of government and of social leadership; whatever path our civilization follows afterward will largely be up to us as a group. Let us begin, all of us, to care intensely about international affairs, to keep ourselves well informed, to make ours a voice potent with humanitarianism to the end that a world still suffering inexpressably from the last war may not again be subjected to the unnecessary, utterly stupid destruction of another. It is not an impossible task, this establishment of a sound peace, but it is most certainly improbable unless each of us takes an active interest as an intelligent citizen in its achievement. Let us not fail to accept the opportunity. — The Carolinian.

CALL TO ARMS

We have heard that such cliques as Odds and Evens are "nationalistic." That is ridiculous. Odd-Even rivalry is a time-honored tradition and stands for no more of a nationalistic movement than other traditions on this campus.

We, as one of the foremost women's colleges are supposed to have all the necessary requirements for that standard. Without a doubt we rank high in most of them, but how about our college spirit? Thanksgiving games are almost here, and it's time we asked ourselves a few questions. The games offer a challenge to the entire student body. We don't have inter-collegiate games and we realize what this means. Do you realize, however, the meaning behind inter-class games? Basketball and volley ball entail a great deal of spirit, a certain amount of sacrifice and a big amount of real work. The common conception of the student body is that the only thing involved is athletic ability. They sit back complacently and wait for the excitement of the big day.

Those teams are representing their classmates. They give their time and energy to those classmates. The least we can do as spectators is to cheer them with spirit and enthusiasm.

To have games you must have two sides. If you have two sides you have competition. If there is competition there is bound to be a certain feeling of rivalry. What does it matter whether they are called Black and White, Odds and Evens, or Thirty-one and Thirty-three? The rivalry between sides is friendly. Odds live with Evens all year without fatalities. Only at Thanksgiving does it make the slightest change. They race to put their colors up first, yet after Thanksgiving those colors are removed from sight and mind. There is certainly no ill-feeling between teams. They are just as anxious for an injured player on the opposite side as they are for their own teammates. It would be a mighty small character who would do otherwise and our fellow-students aren't small-minded.

There are probably some people who don't even know how the colors originated. Each side chose one of the school colors and added their own to that. The Odds chose the garnet and to make it an odd number chose two other colors, white and purple. The Evens chose the gold and added green. It is well to remember that after the games the colors merge once more into the garnet and gold of Florida State College for Women.

This article could go on indefinitely without touching you perhaps. It won't be long before you must respond to the challenge of Thanksgiving. Your response may mean the doom or the continuance of Odds and Evens. What are you going to do? Can you sit back with folded hands and be merely an onlooker? Or will you lend your whole-hearted coopera-

The Social Week

Many Students To Attend University Fall Frolics

Of interest to many students of Florida State College for Women this week-end are the Fall Frolics to be given in Gainesville.

The Florida-Sewanee game will be the main feature of attraction for the Frolics. Saturday night there will be a big dance in the gym, with tea and dinner dances following the game. Fraternity pop dances will be held Sunday.

STUDENTS ATTENDING

Young Will Speak On Economics and Peace

Miss Sadie Young, professor of economics, will talk on "World Economic Factors and Peace Programs" on November 18 at 7:30 in the Augusta Conradi theater.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to the public, according to Clarissa Knight, president of the International Relations club which is sponsoring the program.

Personal Mention

Mrs. T. R. Crevat, house mother for the Delta Zeta sorority, spent last week in Sylvester, Ga., where she attended the marriage of her daughter.

Mary Key will be a sponsor at the Florida-Suwanee game in Gainesville this week-end.

Margaret Anderson attended the wedding of Louise Swindell, a Sigma Kappa of 1932.

Marjorie and Anna Glenn are visiting in Tampa this week-end.

Mrs. F. W. Hosea will be here Monday to visit her daughters, Sara and Martha Hosea.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Spenser of North Carolina are visiting Elizabeth Spenser.

Mary Frank Price, Lydia Craig and Clara Stringfield will spend the week-end in Jacksonville.

Marjorie Helvenston of Atlanta is visiting at the Pi Beta Phi house this week.

Mary Virginia Warren, an alumnus, is spending the week-end at the Pi Beta Phi house en route to Tampa from the north.

Zeta Tau Alpha Will Entertain Visitor Next Week

Miss Marjorie Gasson, of Durham, North Carolina, field secretary of the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority, will visit the Beta Gamma chapter on this campus next week from Wednesday through Sunday.

Miss Glasson is also president of the Alpha province of Zeta Tau Alpha. She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Chi Delta Phi, and Theta Alpha Pi. The visit she will make to the chapter on this campus is one of 126 which she will make during the year to various campuses.

Naive Male Expresses His Opinion About Florida Woman's Stronghold

Femina Perfecta Causes Brother Jack Acute Indigestion

By ELLA BROOKS

What do the men who visit the girls at Florida State think of it? Probably no man ever visited here without enduring countless little trials and thinking—though they may not have expressed them—not exactly complimentary thoughts about our F. S. C.

Judging by the stiff actions, stilted speeches, red ears, and pained but polite expressions of the past visiting men, I have figured out just exactly what my brother Jack would do and say in similar situations. Jack is really a very frank person. Although he might come to see me "to look the place over,' he wouldn't bother to make nice remarks about the college to me. And those remarks would probably express every other visiting man's opinions of the college and the girls as well as his own. If Jack should come to see me, this is about what would happen:

"Well, Jack, what do you think of it?" I would ask after dragging him around all over campus, showing him all the buildings, and introducing him to all my friends.

"S'okay," Jack would mutter indifferently. "Where'd they get all the girls?"

That would be Jack's first expressed opinion of F. S. C. W., but he'd have more! I know Jack would really appreciate how a man must feel when he has to walk through the dining-room arcade stopping every six steps to meet someone else, and then walk into the dining-room and eat with seventeen hundred girls.

"Isn't there any where else we can eat after this?" Jack would ask just as soon as we were out of the door. "I like to meet all your friends 'n' all that, but I can't say I enjoy being stared at while I'm eating and having to answer questions between every other bite! Gives me indigestion! My ears'll never stop burning after that endless walk down the aisle to the table with all the girls just staring-up-a-storm! I never saw so many girls at one time in one place before in my life!"

"We could eat at the Sweet Shop, but I'd planned——," I would object.

"We'll eat at the Sweet Shop!" Jack would answer decisively. "D'you know, this campus is nice! I like the buildings and the way they're arranged. Looks convenient. Do you have classes in them all? And when do you study—if any?"

"Practically all the time,"——of course I would defend myself——, "but suppose we skip studying. Listen, let's go to the show and have dinner downtown tonight. I've been wanting to see the show ever since I heard it was going to be this week, and I'm broker than broke! I'd like to take the roommate along, too. We can——!"

"The way you girls chisel! Is it acquired or just your natural characteristics coming to the front? Okay, we'll go to the show and dinner—maybe I'll get a word in edgewise without so many girls around," Jack would give in grumblingly.

"Oh, wait! Here comes one of my teachers I want you to meet. Come on!" And, like every other college girl who has visitors from home, I would drag Jack along and introduce him to the teacher.

Conversations between students, visitors from home, and teachers never last very long because no one can ever think of much to say except the college girl who always chatters aimlessly along about home. Jack would be on his best behavior—as all visiting men seem to have to be—but he'd be more than glad when it ended.

"Golly, what a place! That makes at least fifty people you've chattered away to about me being your brother and where our home town was and why I came to see you and so on. It's getting monotonous! I've tried to look pleasant and interested for so long my face feels cracked! Let's go for a ride!" would be Jack's complaint.

"Have to get someone else to go with me—but you're my brother—I don't know. I'll have to find out," I would answer, forgetting rules as usual.

"Oh, rules again! Don't you think you'd better learn them better? Come on, we'll take the roommate just to be on the safe side, and heaven protect my pocketbook," Jack would agree.

As usual on our way up town we'd see ever so many girls plodding up that "awful hill," and Jack's comment on that would not only be truthful but would express every college girls' thoughts about it. "Don't you have any other way to walk to town? That's an awfully long, steep hill! Looks like you'd get thin after walking up it so much. Don't you feel superior riding up?"

Light-flash just simply wouldn't go over with Jack. This would doubtless be his opinion of that respectable, time-worn custom: "Eleven-thirty? My hat—what're they doing, making babies out of you? Bet you girls don't get many dates around here with this sort of thing! Guess I'll go home and try to feel natural again!"

No, Jack wouldn't stay here long, and I'm afraid he wouldn't come back. Of course I'd beg him to, but Jack—always frank—would say: "Not for me again, thank you! Once is enough! Hope you last till Christmas—see you then, and at home!"

More than likely every visiting man has thought the same things and hasn't had the nerve to say so—at least that's what I think every time I see a man's conspicuously red ears in the dining-room!

WHAT IS SPIRIT?

Each year as Thanksgiving approaches, we are exhorted to show the proper college spirit and hit the sawdust trail for the Odd-Even games and their attendant rites. Always, those who challenge us and attempt to spur us on, have chosen to consider cheering, yelling and generally making noise synonymous with college spirit. But, I wonder if this is true. Do we have no appreciation of cllege life as it is presented here or have we merely elected to express that much discussed spirit in a somewhat different way? After all college spirit is a reality, and Odd-Even games are nothing more than the means or structure for expressing that reality. Let us not confuse the essence with mere form. While the true meaning of many institutions is the same as that of many thousands of years ago, their structure has been radically altered to meet changed conditions. We do not interpret this as meaning that the spirit of them is no more.

Observation of college life, however meager or casual, will convince anyone who bemoans the good old days of Odd-Even rivalry that school spirit is not dead. If students care nothing for F. S. C. W. why do they come? Surely all of us are not here because of parental compulsion or sheer inability to think of anything else. Relatively few complaints and laments are heard about returning summer vacation and Christmas vacations. The number of last May's graduates who are seen around on week-ends also indicates a certain liking or affection for the college. I think that we may safely clear ourselves of the charge of lacking school spirit.

Perhaps the students of 1935-36 have a different concept of college spirit from that in vogue when traditions were begun. After all, would it not be more mature as well as valuable to express our college spirit in som eother way than yelling at games each Thanksgiving?

Signed: Laura Mathis.

Thanksgiving Meal Tickets Are on Sale

Tickets for Thanksgiving dinner went on sale this morning. Seniors may purchase tickets for parents or near relatives at the C. G. A. room from 8 to 8:30 o'clock and from 1 to 1:30 o'clock this afternoon, and from 7 to 7:45 tonight. Each senior may buy two as long as the 100 available last. If the purchaser finds that she will not be able to use the tickets, she has been asked to bring them back. These will in turn be sold to seniors on the waiting list. The price is eighty-five cents a ticket.

Alumnae tickets may be obtained from the alumnae office from 8 to 10 o'clock and from 2 to 5 o'clock today.

Two Vacations Face Students

The passing of Armistice week-end leaves only two more outstanding events on the college girl's calendar for the first half of this school year.

The mathematically-minded students have by now begun counting the twelve days left until Thanksgiving, the first of the two important breaks in the college routine. The various events scheduled for the holiday will begin Tuesday, November 26, and end the following Saturday.

Scarcely before the average student has had time enough after that to compose a letter for fare home, the Christmas vacation will be ushered in. Classes will be dismissed after morning classes Friday, December 20, and will not be resumed until January 6, 1936. This Christmas vacation period is several days longer than the December vacations have been for the last several years.

FRESHMAN CABINET MEMBERS PLAN TO HAVE BREAKFAST HIKE ON SATURDAY

Instead of its regular meeting on Wednesday afternoon the Y. W. C. A. freshman cabinet will add to its program by an early morning hike Saturday. The cabinet plans to hike toward the college dairy and on the way back to cook breakfast.

The meeting which will take place at this time will include a devotional service led by Sara Sealy and an address by Miss Adrienne Taylor, faculty advisor of the cabinet.

Five Students Tapped For Outstanding Work In Journalistic Field

Alpha Chi Alpha, journalism fraternity, recently tapped five students. This honorary recognizes students doing outstanding work on one of the college publications for a period covering more than one year.

Those tapped and their positions on publications are: Ruth Persons, editor of the Flambeau; Mary Bruce Patterson, business manager of the Flambeau; Hazel Bowman, news editor of the Flambeau; Martha Baker, feature editor of the Flambeau; and Grace Mary Webster, outside news editor of the Flambeau.

Old members of the organization are: Elaine Klepper, president; Gertrude Kuhn, vice-president; Althea Smith, scribe; Ethyle Mae Edwards, treasurer, and Marjorie Harris, secretary.

Odds Are High Scorers Winning Volleyball And Basketball This Week

Odd-Even class games were played Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

Evidences of the glories that the Odds may win were shown in the results of these class games. Tuesday aftenoon, the basketball games were played, and the freshmen beat the sophomores, while the juniors beat the seniors. Again on Wednesday, when the volleyball games were played, the Odd teams beat the Even teams. Winners and losers games were played Thursday afternoon.

Although these games are supposed to be indicative of the outcome of the games played on Homecoming, it is supposed that the Even teams will have a fair chance when they can choose players from both senior and sophomore classes.

Deviney Heads Biological Trip

First Expedition to Port Saint Joe is Held Over Weekend

The first biological expedition of the Florida State College for Women was conducted during Armistice week-end at Port Saint Joe, Florida, by Dr. Ezda May Deviney, assistant professor of zoology.

The expedition was composed of Marjorie Harris, Sarah Beth Davis, Harriet Foster, and Elizabeth Leach, members of the invertebrate zoology class, and Dr. Ezda May Deviney.

The party arrived soon after dark at their headquarters, a comfortable, modern, little cottage overlooking the gulf of Mexico about nine miles northwest of Port Saint Joe, Florida. Port Saint Joe was chosen as headquarters because of the variety of marine life found on its shores and because of its accessibility to places of biological interest.

Saturday morning was spent visiting the United States Bureau of Fisheries located a few miles northwest of Apalachicola at Indian Pass. The bureau was established in Florida last spring. Dr. Robert Smith, acquatic biologist and director of the bureau at Indian Pass, and his assistant, George Hiles, jr., are experimenting with gastropod Thais, which preys on the oyster. Dr. A. S. Pearse of Duke University and his assistant, Mr. Wharton, are at present making extensive studies of the oyster leach, stylochus inimicus.

During the afternoon the biologists toured a shrimp cannery and three fish and oyster houses. Mr. George Hiles, sr., owner of one of the fish and oyster houses a friend of Dr. Deviney's, had previously requested several fishermen to save all queer marine animals which they found on oyster bars or caught in their fish nets. Captain Costa Boozier and Pete Russell, two of the fishermen, brought in a great variety of interesting specimens and donated them to the expedition Among them are strange crabs, deep sea fish squid, mollusks, an electric ray and a small hammer-head shark.

Members of the expedition spent Sunday morning collecting on the beach at Saint Joseph's Bay. They found shells of 30 bivalved mollusca and 16 univalved mollusca, several marine annelides, and various crustacea during collecting trips.

During the next few weeks all specimens collected by the expedition and those donated by Captain Costa Boozier and Pete Russell will be identified, catalogued and placed on exhibition in the zoology laboratory.

Pyburn's Article On Values of Courses In Education is Printed

Miss Nita Pyburn, instructor in education at Florida State, has recently had an article, "Some Unrecognized Values of Courses in Education" published in The High School Quarterly a publication which is the official organ of the Southern commissions on accredited schools and colleges.

In her article Miss Pyburn stresses the necessity of adequate training for teachers and points out the socio-civic value of education both for children and for adults.

Taking a different slant on the field, the writer continues by showing that a knowledge of education is necessary to those outside the formal system of schools. She demonstrates her point by giving specific incidents in which the changing social order demands the knowledge of principles of teaching outside the formal school system

Miss Pyburn concludes her article by this remark: "The principles of education should be important to all who are responsible for the environment of the growing boy or girl"

College Student Practices Rigid Budget Economy

Girls Save for Week-end By Resisting Call Of the Movie

"No shows for me—I am going home next week-end." This remark is only one of a hundred that show that every college girl economizes in some way or another.

There is the girl who saves by allowing herself only two cigarettes a day. Another never goes near a tea room or drug store, all so that she can see the old home town for a few days.

Perhaps though there is no week-end in view for some when they save their money. There is one who thinks that the social contacts made in tearooms or at midnight supper parties are much more valuable than the ordinary show.

Most amazing of all is the girl who remarked that she did not economize for she had nothing with which to economize. We can not really class her with college girls for she has no sense of the joy one derives from saving a penny or so.

There is the girl who writes down an account of all that she spends. She says that it keeps her from spending too much because she hates to write and consequently thinks before she spends. She does say, however, that those times when she sits down to catch up on writing her accounts are rather long and painful.

The girl who remembers to tell her boy friend just when that good picture is on that she wants to see is practicing another means of economy. Yet in this case the girl sees the show, and does not spend the money either.

One girl has to buy a book, so her mother thinks, every other week. She does not have to practice that saving habit like the rest who can get along on the prescribed books for the same course.

Professors who suddenly decide that students need new books are the bane of economizers. When the tidy sum that the student has saved to spend in some delectable manner has to be spent on a book the student feels rather like a professor at whose pet joke no one has laughed.

Every Saturday a number of economizers gather in the washing rooms to do their laundry. This is one of the most popular ways of economizing, and there are few students who have not at some time or another seen the time when a show looked much nicer than a clean and starched bundle of clothes

Month after month the working girls worry the cashier in the college bank with that everlasting question, "Is the FERA payroll out yet?" Evidently no matter how much they economize and budget, the money seems to be gone before time for the next payroll.

Some people just do not economize. Their philosophy is that it will all be spent in the long run, so why worry? They are the ones who so often come around to see you toward the end of the month when an extra special show is on—one they would not miss for anything.

Classic Clubs to Fete Horatian Bimillenium

The Classical club and Eta Sigma Phi will hold a joint meeting Tuesday night at 7:30 in Broward club room. The program, which is to be in celebration of the Horatian Bimillenium, is being planned by Eta Sigma Phi.

According to Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, president of Eta Sigma Phi, an English version of Horace's Ninth Satire will be presented by the four members of the fraternity who were initiated two weeks ago

Mary Marshall, Mary Kathryn Gibson Julia Vanderipe, and Valeric Stubbs will take part in the Horatian play

Plea for Public Operation of All Industry is Made by Student Writer

Public is Today's Guinea Pig for Experiments Of Manufacturers

By CLAIRE WILLIAMS

Before the Wall street crash in 1929, America was used as an exemplary nation because of the rising standards of living and average possession and enjoyment, because of the swelling indicators of industry and finance, because of the belief that the security of rights and opportunities for every man was the result of our political philosophy that the government was the judge and not the participant in the game. Our march of national progress was the aggregate of individual attainment which is influenced by individual effort and ability. If individual judgment which governs confident ventures into business enterprise is to be fearless, it must be assured of a public opinion and a political atmosphere in which it has the assurance of equal opportunities so that there is a keen feeling of competition and the spirit of adventure without which there is no progress. President Hoover felt that if the government undertook to conduct business it would suppress initiative and invention, undermine any signs of leadership, and completely extinguish equality and opportunity. The next few years made it obvious that the president's views on liberalism were false and have led us not to more liberty, but to less liberty.

Since our history and traditions are different from those of other countries, our concept of the relations of government to its people is also different. Our political ideals were colored by the forced self-reliance on isolated communities when our frontier settlements were confronted by and had to explore the unknown. But today America has finished her pioneering by proof of her appraisals of progress as shown by her having passed over more than a century of railroad history and more than a half-century of using electricity. In our comparatively new land we have never had a centralized government of strong authority and so, when realistic America of 1929 studied the economic indicators of national attainment, the theories of future courses unexpectedly were incongruous with our expectations. Our opportunities for health, security, and enjoyment, and our advancing living standards were so suddenly severed that our capitalists could hardly believe it, and remained true to their old ideas where they had made their millions and either could not or would not face realities which demanded a change in political structure so that economic change would result.

Individual lives were significantly influenced by these economic indicators as shown by the leap of the national income, savings deposits, and life insurance in force in 1928 from those at the turn of the century. As a contrast to present conditions, it is the figures of the masses of people who do not have even the necessities, much less the luxuries, that are compiled. If the difference in having and not having is so great, certainly there is as great a difference in the principles behind the theories of two, far-different statuses and therefore the same principles can not be used continually after such change.

It is true that the philanthropy of large fortunes did much to support colleges and research laboratories as well as welfare and health work but at present there is an increasing enrollment at state-supported institutions where there are not only laboratories accessible to those desiring them but also relief money from the government which is paid to those who spend their time getting practical experience where otherwise they could have gone to college. As the necessity has arisen, the government has taken over and supported the majority of health and welfare work which is strong indication that eventually the medical men will be paid entirely by the state

Regulation of public services would not alone mean suspicious control but rather co-operation and stimulation. We have laid much stress on our natural resources as being the source of national wealth and individual prosperity and have had to overcome handicaps of transportation which the privately owned railroads have financed. But it has not been the initiative and leadership of the owners but their own selfish motives that made competition too active and as a consequence many of the private railroads have become insolvent. The fact that transportation costs have lowered is insignificant if we consider our well-being at the expense of some one else.

In the field of public utilities, for light and power service, there has been opposition by the privately owned corporations to municipal ownership of electric plants. In the post-war years it was only the larger power companies that could survive and realize any profit. Hence they capitalized in every possible way until municipal plants and other government enterprises proved the injustice of their profits.

In order to remain in business, many parts of industry and manufacture have sacrificed their standards of ethics and practices. From recent publication of experiments we have found out that the public today is really no more than a laboratory animal used to find out what will annihilate him and what will not. Trade associations and voluntary business organizations are supposed to provide the contact for a generous exchange of knowledge of proved practice but these clubs forget their function while trying to jealously guard their helpful secrets.

In view of these facts, the expansion and growth of all industry will be benefited when we obtain the policy of public operation and regulation.

Shores Speaks Of Marsh Talk

Dr. Conradi is Introduced First at Ceremony By Dr. Holt

Dr. Venila L. Shores, associate professor of history, returned from the Rollins' semi-centenial held the latter part of October, with a glowing account of the talk given by Dr. Daniel L. Marsh, president of Boston university.

Dr. Marsh who has an impressive number of degrees, including Ph.D., D.D., L.L.D., Litt D., L.H.D., spoke, Dr. Shores said, on "Education for True Patriotism." He arranged his discussion around some commandments which, he said, should be a guide for educational workers

The first one he said, should read, "Thou shelt teach the future generations never to put any except good men in office." "Thou shalt teach each new generation to make good laws for only by them social liberty may be maintained," was his second.

The third read, "Thou shalt teach the future generations to enforce the laws on all alike without fear or favor and to do it promptly for delay leads to propaganda." While the fourth said, "Thou shalt teach the future generations to reverance and obey all laws as the political religion of the nation."

According to Dr Marsh the fifth should be, "Thou shalt teach the future generations to think straight and clearly so that libtry will not be confused with license and mob noise" The sixth: "Thou shalt teach the future generations to appreciate solid attainments of national accomplishment."

In describing some of the interesting events of the celebration, Dr. Shores said that Dr. Conradi was the first of the college presidents to be introduced to Dr. Hamilton Holt, president of Rollins' college during the ceremony on Monday morning. The procession of educational people in their caps and gowns made a wonderful picture, Dr Shores said. The line would have extended from about the back of Gilchrist hall to the Administration biulding, she said, the Rollins' students in their grey gowns, the others in black with their different hoods. The only splash of vivid coloring was the gown worn by an instructor at Rollins, an English woman who donned a red robe, characteristic of that country. She carried her hat and wore a red velvet hood. There were two sisters from Catholic colleges who wore their white robes.

Dr. Shores, who was part of a group who attended from Florida State college, also represented her alma mater, Bates college, to which she will make a report.

Club Replaces Three Officers

Hoenshal, Manford, Gillies Selected to Occupy Home Ec Places

The first business meeting of the Home Economics club was held Tuesday night for the purpose of replacing three officers who were unable to return to Florida State college this year. Mary Louise Hoenshel was elected vice-president; Edith Manford, treasurer, and Jean Gillies, freshman representative.

Several prominent women in the field of home economics will speak before the club at various times during the year, according to Miss Edna Mae McIntosh, faculty sponsor. Miss Mary Rohakr home improvement specialist from Washington, was the first speaker this year.

Many social functions are being planned by the club, such as the annual Christmas party and banquet. Immediate plans are being made now for a campfire supper hike, Thursday, November 22, from 5 to 7:30.

All students who are majoring in home economics are eligible for membership to the club, which meets the second Tuesday of each month.

Rival Factions Vie In Annual War Of Play

Odd-Even Demonstrations Are Under Rehearsal Announce Chairmen

LUCKY NIGHT IS DRAWN BY EVENS

Committees, Casts, And Dancers Are Chosen For Each Play

Highlights of the week of Thanksgiving festivities are the Odd and Even demonstrations, to be given in the college auditorium on the two nights immediately preceding Thanksgiving day.

The dates for these performances, decided by an annual drawing held in convocation, were fixed this week, with Wednesday, by tradition the "lucky night," falling this year to the Evens.

Odds Present Mystery

Odd Demonstration, "An Odd Murder Mystery," will be presented on Tuesday evening, November 26.

As has been the custom in past years, the theme of the demonstration will be kept secret until the night of the performance. The purpose of the demonstration is to present the members of the odd basketball and volleyball teams who have been chosen to play in the Odd-Even games Thanksgiving.

Odd Dances

Those taking part in the dances are Jo Binion, Peggy McMichael, Beth Daane, Janet Lockwood, Lovina Spaulding, Carol Pooser, Roberta Diamond, Becky Ashton, Betty Lou Smith, Clarice Sanchez, Peggy Jackson, Freddie Frinck, Mary Ann Hart, Elizabeth Lounds, Elizabeth Ayala, Johanna Skagseth, Frances Thomas, and Martha Makemson.

An orchestra directed by Hazel Bowman will accompany the demonstration. The orchestra is composed of Martha Reddick, Annabelle Larsen, Marjorie Tillis, Betty Parker, and Yvette Breaux, violins; Sarah Tyler and Martha Wilderson, bass; Jean Crago, flute; Betsy Anderson, clarinet; Mrs. Helen Sellers, trumpet; Hazel Bowman, trombone; Louise D. Johnson, drums; and Virginia Long and Frances Forth, piano.

Kappa Delta Pi Taps 14 Members

Pledge Services Will Be Monday Evening

Kappa Delta Pi, national education honorary society, yesterday tapped six seniors and eight juniors for membershpi. They include Martha Frank Wildman, Lottie Ruth Howard, Agnes Reedy, Mary E. Lanehart, Dorothy Purse, Ruth Feinberg, Opal Langley, Sara Mikell, Faye Peterson, Sarah Myrvin Everett, Dorothy Crews, Hazel Sangster, Anna Von Dohlen, and Sylvia Guito.

Pledging service for these students will be held Monday, November 25, at 5:45 in Broward lounge, after which all members will eat dinner together in the college dining room at Kappa Delta Pi tables.

The new members were selected at the last meeting of the organization held Tuesday night in the board of control room. To be a member of the honorary it is necessary to be a junior or senior in the School of Education. The aim is to recognize qualities of leadership and outstanding promise as a teacher.

Other student members are Virginia Cornmartie, Anna Groover, Rebecca Keith, Ruth Persons, Alice Porter, Murae Reddick, and Nancy Wilkinson.

Collegiate Crowd Makes Way Toward Co-Ed Buying Mecca, The Crowded Ten Cent Store

Cosmetics Head Shopping List of Seekers Of Pulchritude

BY BILLIE HOATARD

Hurrying feet on a bitterly cold Saturday afternoon, shopping lists carefully planned, college girls bundled in coats and sweaters making their way towards that mecca of collegiate buying—the five and ten cent store.

Tall girls, short girls, fat and thin, girls who know what they are after and search for it in a thorough and business-like manner, girls who wander around with a roving eye and buy only when an inner voice tells them that the object before them is one that they will need—all these shove and push, babble incoherently, worming their way through the crowds that throng the aisles of Tallahassee's three ten cent stores.

Christmas Cards

The Christmas cards have just been put out for sale, and are hastily grabbed up by those only-thirty-one-more - shopping -days conscious girls. Yuletide verses are read, contemplated, and after due deliberation bought. The purchaser then holding to her hat, ducking under arms, setting her face in a determined expression, plows through the mob, and glances back with a triumphant expression to see that the narrow space which she has just vacated is being filled, not without perplexity and much involved intricacy, by two girls, each of which is a few feet wider than the desired opening at the counter.

Debate Over Cosmetics

The cosmetic counter comes in for its share of collegiate rushing, with powder being broken into to determine the exact shade, lipstick being spread on hands to see "if it's worth the price," rouge being looked at with a dubious expression and then put back, listerine and mum being wrapped and handed over to those with a popularity complex. Those on the second line of action wait patiently for those at the counter to make up their apparently unsettled minds, and then charge into position in a manner that would be a credit to a football team. Two freshmen emerge from this free-for-all, each with face powder in the box and none on the features for which it is intended, only to find that the second freshman prefers the shade that the first freshman has bought. So with a sigh and that resigned air that Florida State gives to her students, she braces herself for an attack to regain her position. Fifteen minutes later she leaves the store,

Tickets for Odd and Even demonstrations will be given out in front of the business office on Friday from 1:00 to 3:00 o'clock and Saturday from 9:00 to 12:00 o'clock. Students and faculty are asked to call for them at these times, according to Mary Kathryn Gibson and Ann Bailey, chairmen of programs and ushering committee.

Speaker Gives Talk Thursday

Langdon-Davies Lectures On "Contrasts in The Art of Living"

"In patterning our lives, we must learn to enjoy the good elements and see that none of these elements in our art of living are destroyed by the onrush of the new," said the Honorable John Langdon-Davies in an address last night on "Contrasts in the Art of Living" delivered before the student body of Florida State College for Women.

Comparing arts of living as practiced today in England, America, and Spain, Mr. Davies said, "The greatest difference between England and America is that England is the result of the blending of two peoples, the Cavaliers and the Puritans, while America is popularly supposed to be the result of the coming of Puritans alone. Both Puritans and Cavaliers, however, influenced the American nation, the former settling in the north while the latter settled in the south.

"The typical Englishman is therefore not radically different from the typical American; both have the same fundamental interests, and both are primarily busy in securing the necessities of life. The basic interests of both are interest in earning a living and in the opposite sex. They are interested secondarily in movies, politics, simple friendship, and also in art, literature, and education.

"The chief difference between the Englishman and the American with regard to education is that the former feels that he is educated because of the mere fact that he was born in England, while the latter is disposed to have an inferiority complex, and is animated by a constant desire to end life an educated man.

"It is interesting to note the difference in the attitude of the American and the Englishman toward the subject of politics. In England politics is considered a suitable field for men of finest ability, while in America it is looked upon in many cases as a dubious and none too honorable a calling. In America the belief is commonly held that the person who creates is not so fine a person as he who destroys. It is a strange indictment of our civilization that this should be true.

"A regretable trend in modern American life is to be found in the decrease in the value set upon simple freindship Business is being mixed with pleasure—a combination deplorable and repugnant to the English mnid. It is difficult nowadays for the basis of a trustful friendship to be laid: the world is too full of many things for people to become really acquainted.

"In the American world today time is money. It is felt that true love can be expressed only through the medium of expensive gifts, from which the recipient really derives no more pleasure than does the Spanish child from the

Turkey Day Is A Reality Here

One hundred and eighty-five luscious brown turkeys, oozing dressing and golden juices, will grace the tables when approximately 1,750 people dine at Florida State college Thanksgiving day.

As in the past three years, Miss Anna Mae Tracy, dietitian, announces, these turkeys which will average from twelve to fifteen pounds dressed are being supplied through the Gadsden county home demonstration club. This club raises the turkeys especially for consumption by the college dining room.

There will be cranberries, prepared with oranges, Miss Tracy said, and all the other Thanksgiving specialties. The tables are to be centered with attractive arrangements of oranges.

National Book Week Observed

National Book week, Nov. 17-23, has been recognized at the Florida State College for Women this week, by several exhibits in the college library.

The most outstanding of these exhibits is a display of books which have been Newberry prize books. The John Newberry medal which is awarded annually for the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children was established in 1921. John Newberry first published books specifically for children and his famous store in St. Paul's churchyard was frequented by the children of London. This medal is awarded each year by Frederic Melcher, editor of the Publishers' Weekly. Among these prize winning books those on display in the library and in the stacks of the library are: The Trumpeter of Krakow, by Eric P. Kelly; Tales from Silver Lands, by Charles J. Finger; The Story of Mankind, by Hendrick Willem Van Loon; Shen of the Sea, by Arthur Bowie Chrisman; Smoky, by Will James; Invincible Louisa, by Cornelia Meigs; Waterless Mountain, Laura Adams Armer; Gay Nick, by Dhan Mukerji; The Dark Frigate, Charles B. Hawes; The Voyages of Doctor Dolittle, by Hugh Lofting; Young Fu, by Foreman Lewis; Hitty (Her First 100 Years), by Rachel Field.

A display of books of the week and books that every college girl should read give as the outstanding books: Good Old Yesterday, by Charles Lowre; Facing Two Ways (The Story of My Life), by Baroness Shidzue Ishimato; The Dew on the Grass, by Eiluned Lewis; Illyrian Spring, Ann Bridge; Salamina, by Rockwell Kent; and Songs of the Volsungs, by Dorothy Hosford.

Group Elects Abbey As Second Vice President

Dr. Kathryne T. Abbey, professor of history at Florida State College for Women, was recently honored by the Florida Historical society. Dr. Abbey was elected second vice-president of the society, and at the present time is the only woman serving as an officer.

Also at this time Joshua C. Chase of Winter Park succeeded Alston Cockrell of Jacksonville as president. Julien C. Yonge, Pensacola, was elected as first vice-president, with Albert H. Roberts of Tallahassee, as treasurer.

Saturday Morning Wins Victory Over Blue Monday in Wash Day Popularity

Most Unpopular Group of Washwomen Are Those Who Work at 6:30 A. M. to Gloat in Superior Self-Content Over Late Risers

By EVELYN FISHER

Every day is wash day!

Monday may have been the traditional wash day for generations gone by, but every week day, week-end and even holidays, soap suds swirl and hot water steams as the Florida State College girl does her washing.

"Washers" can be classified in any number of ways. There are the early morning washers, conscientious souls who arise at 6:30 in the morning and proudly display their finished product hanging neatly on hangers above the radiator as the rest of the school's population crawl out of bed at 7:25 just in time to make a yawning run for the breakfast table. It is this first group of heroic souls thet always make it a point to casually mention their industrious before-breakfast habits for the benefit of other students at their breakfast table.

Of course there are always a few who prefer to do their tasks in exclusion and usually perform their washing rituals in their vacant periods.

Then there is the group of after-breakfast washers who dash in, dip their best angora sweaters into the soap suds and out again and

Bureau Places 278 Teachers Of This Year

Thirty-Seven of Forty Two-Year Students Secure Jobs

THIRTY-NINE ARE IN OTHER FIELDS

Placements for 1935-1936 Out-Number Those For 1934-1935

Of the 365 students of the class of 1935 and the alumnae who registered for the assistance of the placement bureau last year, 90 per cent have been placed definitely, according to a recent report made by Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel. This report includes all of the four-year graduates, the two-year graduates, and the alumnae who registered.

Teaching Leads Position

The great number of these students is employed in teaching positions. Of the 197 four-year graduates of the class of 1935 listed for teaching positions, 190 are placed, while thirty-seven of the forty two-year certificate candidates are also placed. Of the 72 alumnae listed 61 have secured teaching positions. The greatest number are employed in teaching English, home economics, primary education, history, science, mathematics, and commerce, while the remainder are teaching intermediate education, art, French, Latin, Spanish, library science, physical education, public school music, psychology and sociology.

The 278 placements in teaching exceed the number of placements made for the 1934-35 school term, which numbered 265. There were 415 requests for teachers for this school year as compared with 333 requests for the 1934-1935 term and 118 requests for the 1933-1934 term.

Florida State Will Entertain

Classical Association To Observe Bimillenium

Florida State College will be hostess to the first annual convention of the classical association of Florida on December 6-8. The association has as its members the teachers of Latin in the state high schools and friends of the classics throughout Florida.

Interest during the convention will be centered on the poet Horace, in celebration of the two thousandth anniversary of his birth. The principal speaker at the meeting is to be Dr. Hubert C. Lipscomb of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Virginia.

Another feature of the program is to be the awarding of the prizes offered by the Florida State college chapter of Eta Sigma Phi, national classics honorary, in a contest among high school students in the state. A plaque of Horace will be awarded to the ninth or tenth grade student submitting the best paper on "Horace, the Poet." Another plaque will be presented to the eleventh or twelfth grade students submitting the best metrical translation of one of Horace's best-loved odes, "Fons Bandusiae."

Other details of the program are being worked out by the classical club on campus, Eta Sigma Phi, and members of the classics faculty.

The celebration of Horace's two thousandth birthday, according to classics students here, is assuming national scope. Organizations in France, Switzerland, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Hungary, Germany, England and America are making plans for participation.

The idea of a commemoration of Horace's birth date was a result of the enthusiasm with which the Vergilian bimillenium in 1930 was celebrated.

A part of the Horatian celebration was carried out during the summer of this year when teachers, students, and lovers of the classics visited Horace's birthplace between July 28 and August 22. The exact location of the place of his birth has been authentically established, and the walls of the villa on his Sabine farm definitely identified.

Charlotte Lockwood Will Play Tomorrow

Charlotte Lockwood

Talented organist will present her program tomorrow night in college auditorium at 8:15.

Is Acclaimed Foremost Woman Organist Of United States

SKILL DISPLAYED IN EARLY YOUTH

Critics Extol Maturity Of Interpretation, Artistic Power

Charlotte Lockwood, noted American woman organist, will appear tomorrow night at 8:15 at the college auditorium in the second program of the artist series for 1935-36.

Miss Lockwood has displayed great musical talent from an early age. When eleven years old she was already organist of the First Methodist church at Reidsville, North Carolina.

Studied Abroad

After graduation from Salem college she went to New York city as a pupil of Dr. Clarence Dickinson and within two years won the degrees of associate and fellow member of the American Guild of Organists. Later Miss Lockwood studied in Paris with Charles Marie Widor and in May, 1931, received the master's degree in sacred music from Union Theological seminary, New York.

Since that time Miss Lockwood has traveled extensively abroad. In Germany she studied under Professor Gunther Ramin, organist of the famous St. Thomas church, Leipzig. She is at present organist and choir-director of Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Plainfield, N. J., and West End synagogue, New York, and is a member of the faculty of the School of Sacred Music, Union Theological seminary.

In the course of the last few years Miss Lockwood has appeared in many recitals, winning the highest praise from her audiences and the press, as is evidenced by this comment from a critic of the Washington, D. C. Herald. "Charlotte Lockwood presented a program, selected with superlative taste and performed with astounding mastery.

Nature Musicianship

"Changing stops and manuals with lightening speed, never missing the proper emphasis of a theme, fingering and panelling with crystal clarity—all these are features of her perfect technique. But technique is a secondary matter to Miss Lockwood. Her interpretations are proof of mature musicianship and the artistic power of her personality asserts itself in every number of her program."

Another critic claims that "her music extolled the eloquence of the organ as a churchly thing, over which there reigned so instinctive a flow of beauty and of meaning that one was lost in what she truly 'creates.' Pedan-

Two Prominent Visitors Talk

Artist, Author, Address Student Body Here In Convocation

Mrs. Anna Steese Richardson, American author and director of the good citizenship bureau of the Woman's Home Companion, and Mrs. Myrtle Bradford of Miami, chairman of the art department of the Florida Federation of Women's clubs, addressed the student body at convocation Tuesday morning.

"Life is not worth living unless you are married," said Mrs. Richardson in her talk on "After College What?" But as for marriage and a career, Mrs. Richardson does not see why a woman can not have both. She stressed good health as the first and most important prerequisite for those women who are working toward a career.

"To have lived well, to be wholesome, quiet and unassuming are the next most-needed factors in attaining such a goal," Mrs. Richardson said. "An all around education, even in politics, is also important."

"It is most convenient too, to be able to typewrite, to be able to be your own stenographer should there ever come a time when you were in need of one. A pleasing personality, and good diction are other requisites."

Mrs. Richardson is to talk before women's clubs in ten cities, including Jacksonville, Quincy, Perry, New Smyrna, Dunnellon, and Winter Park while on a two-weeks' visit in Florida.

Mrs. Bradford, after showing that the importance of art had been developing to a great extent in our modern world, went on to give a history of the first citizen of Florida.

"It was the romance of Eulalie," she said, "an Indian princess of South Tampa Bay, who so plead for the life of Juan Artez, a Spanish boy about to be burned at the stake, that never after was child sacrifice practiced among the Florida Indian tribes. It was she, too, who later when this same Spanish boy was again tied to the stake, unbound him, and sent him off, yet she went back to face the judgment of the chieftain, her father. So we see," said Mrs. Bradord, "that Florida has her Pocahontas too."

Mrs. Bradford has been living among the Indians for a number of years gathering materials and painting scenes of their life. She is not only acquainted with their present mode of living, but through an extensive study has learned much of their true history.

Mrs. Bradford showed three representative paintings which she had done of native Indian scenes.

Hosea Presents Recital

Wednesday evening at 8:15 o'clock Sarah Hosea presented a speech recital in the Augusta Conradi theater.

The reading Miss Hosea gave was a play by Susan Claspell entitled "Surpressed Desires." The play had three characters, the husband, the wife, and the wife's sister.

The plot was an amusing one with a theme which satirised psycho-analysis.

Campus to Have Clean-up Time

Debris to Be Cleared For Festive Occasion

The general clean-up program which has been taking place on the campus is part of an approved WPA project. The cleaning up consists of grading the campus back of Gilchrist on the south edge of the campus adjacent to the archery field, planting and replanting trees, and grassing the leveled plot. Further grading areas are being taken care of on the south side of the Demonstration school in the area of the Demonstration playground.

The trimming of the trees about campus takes place nearly every three years while the raking of scattered debris is being done especially to have the campus in good condition for the Thanksgiving ceremonies.

There are about fifty men employed on this WPA project which will cover a period of about six months. Immediately after this clean-up project on campus the men will begin the process of grading and landscaping the nine-hole golf course.

Another WPA approved project is taking place at the college dairy and farm. The work being done is largely that of grading and fence building together with clearing and grubbing the fields.

Arboretum Is To Be Changed

ImprovementsAlsoInclude New Golf Course To Be Erected Soon

The arboretum, known to many students as Games' wood, and which includes about ten acres of dense woods two blocks west of the college archery courts is to be converted into a park with driveways, benches, and picnic tables, according to Mr. H. D. Mendenhall, college engineer.

All dead timber and stumps will be removed from the woods, ridges will be graded, holes will be filled, and fence-posts will be painted.

Work on the arboretum will be completed in two months, Mr. Mendenhall says, and is being done as part of the campus FER.. project.

Plans are also being drawn for a nine-hole golf course for the students of Florida State College for Women.

The golf course will be erected on approximately 80 of the 300 acres of land owned by the college and situated directly north of the gymnasium building and the athletic field.

The erection of the golf course is also a part of the FERA project for which the federal government recently appropriated $13,710 to Florida State college.

Other campus improvements to be included in the FERA project besides the beautifying of the college arboretum and the clearing for a golf course, are the extension of the whiteway on paved roads, and the grading and sodding of all unsodded land on the campus.

The new whiteway will extend from Gilchrist Hall to and around the gymnasium building, and from Jennie Murphree hall to Fall street on the north side of the Demonstration school.

sistance in fields other than teaching, thirty-three have been placed. For the 1935-1936 year there were fifty-two requests in other fields, exceeding twenty-one requests for 1934-1935 and three requests for 1933-1834. The placements for this year were in the fields of art, home economics, journalism, chemistry, social service, store service, technician, and business.

The placement of 90 per cent of those enrolled for assistance for this school year exceeds that of the two previous years. For the 1834-1935 school term 89 per cent of the enrolled students were placed, and 69 per cent of those enrolled were placed for the 1933-1934 term. Out of the 330 placements this year, in which is included nineteen students placed in "further study," 219 were definitely placed or assisted by the placement bureau.

The Tallahassee Girl On Campus Cites A Method In Her Madness

Reasons of Convenience, Friendships, And Economy Keep the Local Students Away From Home, They Say

Picture to yourself a typical "session" of five or ten or a dozen Florida State college students in a typical gathering-place—a dormitory room—the post office—a tea room. The time is soon after the opening of school. The members of the group are becoming acquainted with each other, asking the conventional questions about home towns, courses, likes and dislikes among faculty members, and so on.

One student chances to remark, "My home is in Tallahassee, but I live in the dormitory."

Immediately, the rest of the group with expressions of mingled horror and astonishment utter in unison, incredulously, "Your family lives here, and you stay in the dormitory?"

For a moment the group sits in stunned surprise scrutinizing this strange being who prefers to live under college regulations to living at home with her family. Then the object of their curious stares launches into a lengthy explanation of the reasons for her choice.

And there are a number of good reasons for such action, say the seventeen Tallahassee girls who are living in the dormitories this year. Nearly all of them emphatically declare that they like dormitory life.

Eight of the girls are upperclassmen and nine are freshmen. The first year students are Adella Appleyard, Alice Cannon, Virginia Giddens, Louise Harris, Betty Herrison, Dore Koons, Bershe Oven, Bette Smith, and Clair Wells. Those in upperclassmen dormitories include Louise Doyle, Florence Jones, Frances Lewis, Sarah Sealey, Mary Ellen Tharpe, Emily Davis, Roberta Diamond, and Virginia Crump.

The first reason given by most of the girls for staying in the dormitory instead of at home is convenience. The average college student, they say, has no idea how much the town students inconvenienced in her work by her dependence on other members of her family for transportation to and from school. Unless the student has a car of her own, her schedule is likely not to fit in with the hours of other members of the family.

By living at the college the Tallahassee students find that they have fewer obligations to interfere with their work, such as home duties and social engagements.

Economy, too, enters into the question. The fact that board at Florida State college is so reasonable sometimes effects a saving for the student's family.

Not the least important of all the reasons, however, is the social factor. A number of students say that they get a great deal of pleasure from their dormitory life because of the opportunity to know a number of students other than the town girls.

But what a strange life a local girl in the dormitory does lead! She cannot drive her own car without special permission, she cannot ask other students to visit in her own home except at Easter, she cannot spend the night at home without using one of her week-ends, she cannot go home and talk to the boy next door without signing up for a date!

Yet in spite of the college rules, so burdensome to some students, the town girls all say they thoroughly enjoy dormitory life and want it to last as long as their college days.

Baptist Union Holds Meeting

Students Celebrate Tenth Anniversary Opening Friday Night

A celebration of the tenth anniversary of the Baptist Student Union at the Florida State College for Women will be held in Tallahassee next week-end. Among the prominent Baptist workers from out of town who are expected to be present are John Hall Jones, Gainesville, state Baptist student secretary; Dr. C. M. Brittain, Jacksonville, state mission secretary; Dr. Frank H. Leavell, Nashville, Tenn., southwide Baptist student secretary; and guests from the University of Florida at Gainesville.

The celebration will be opened with a banquet Friday evening, November 29, at 8 p. m. in the community hall of the First Baptist church. All officers of the local student union, out-of-town guests, Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the local church, Miss Maude Flowers, former president of the student union, and all Baptist alumnae have been invited to attend. Evelyn Collins, present president of the union, will preside as toastmistress. Since the anniversary is the tenth, the program and remembrances will be suggestive of the metal tin.

Saturday morning at 10 o'clock a business meeting and gift service will be held at the Baptist Student headquarters. In the afternoon from 4 until 5 p. m. there will be a tea given in the Broward club room honoring Dr. Leavell and the other special guests of the celebration. The college faculty, members of the first Baptist church and all Baptist students have been invited to meet the distinguished guests at that time. At 8 p. m. Dr. Leavell will conduct an open forum at the student headquarters. At that time moving pictures will be shown portraying events and people of interest at the Student Conference held in Ridgecrest, N. C. last June.

Sunday morning at 8 o'clock a breakfast will be held at the Three Torches tea room honoring the Baptist council members and the out-of-town guests. Mary Nell Pinckard will act as toastmistress. The address of Dr. Leavell at the usual 11 o'clock service at the church will conclude the celebration.

A confirmation service will be held at St. John's Episcopal church this Sunday morning at the usual 11 o'clock service. The Right Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Jacksonville, bishop of the diocese of Florida, will officiate at this special service, which will be preceded by an address by Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell at 10 o'clock to the class on Bible study. Among those at the Florida State College for Women who will be confirmed Sunday are Miss Edna Mae McIntosh of the Home Economics department, Miss Helen Averett, Dixie Gist, Marjorie McRae, Dorothy Hill, Jean Bowman, and Jane Thomas.

The weekly after-dinner coffee will be held at Ruge Hall this evening at 7:30. The newly organized student choir led by Miss Margaret Dow will hold their practice meeting at 7:15 Tuesday evening.

A Thanksgiving worship service will be held in the annex of the Presbyterian church Sunday morning at 8:45 o'clock. At this time the sacrificial offerings, used to pay the salary of a native preacher at an out station in central Africa will be presented. The local student league, through its offerings, has kept this African station open for nearly six years. Eleanor Daniels will be in charge of the program.

A weiner roast and cane grinding will be enjoyed by the members of the Methodist student league this afternoon at an attractive spot about 25 miles from town. Cars will leave from in front of the church at 4 o'clock.

Practice for Exhibition Game is Begun; Outing Club Meets This Week

Among the physical education activities for this week are hockey and soccer practice, Outing club meeting, and rifle team practice.

Students began practice for hockey and soccer exhibition games to be given Thanksgiving on Tuesday afternoon.

According to Miss Elizabeth Autrey, physical education instructor, the rifle team has begun practice but not as many as were expected have signed up for this as yet.

There was a meeting of the Outing club yesterday afternoon, of which physical education students are members. Faculty advisors of the club are Miss Grace Fox and Miss Dorothy White.

A new class in horseback riding will start soon, according to Marie Taylor who is in charge of the classes.

Radio Program Tonight Aids Homecoming Plans

To advertise Florida State's annual Homecoming celebration, a fifteen-minute program over radio station WTAL has been planned by the publicity department for tonight, from 6:45 to 7 o'clock.

A special group from the college glee club, under the direction of Miss Etta Robertson, director, will sing two songs, "Garnet and Gold" and "With Spirits So Bright" written by Dean W. G. Dodd for the college. The remainder of the time will be devoted to a talk on Homecoming by Miss Mary Settle, member of the physical education faculty, and graduate of the college in 1930.

Saturday Morning Wins Victor Over Blue Monday

sprint to their 8:30 classes with all the speed of a 40-yard dasher.

But this group can not be compared to the just-before-last-light-flash speedsters who break all time records as they dash down the hall at 10:25, fight with last minute face-washers and tooth-brushers for space, flash the clothes in and out of the soap suds, and still have enough strength left for a final spurt of rapidity as they skid into their rooms just as the last light flashes.

In contrast to the usual "blue Monday" Saturday morning seems to be the grand wash time for the college washers. All through the morning groups gather to slosh foamy water around as they wash clothes accumulated for a week. These Saturday morning sessions have become almost social gatherings in the dormitories. "Boy-friend talks," plans for Gainesville trips, and heated arguments over everything from the teaching methods on this campus to movie censorship characterize these over-the-wash discussions on Saturday morning, while gay "sings" run the talking a close second in popularity. So interesting do these little gatherings grow that some return to wash their hair and to continue the conversations half begun. Sometimes it becomes an all morning affair.

It is interesting to note the costumes the college girl wears as she washes. There is a strong group of smock advocates who point out the usefulness of this garment that may be hastily donned whenever a few minutes allow for a hasty washing. Others especially the Saturday morning group dress especially for the occasion in shorts and bandana tops, while a third group refuses to make any special concessions to the washing process in the way of garb despite the cleaning bills.

After the washing is done there is always the question of a suitable place to hang it. Clothes lines are handy but clothes when strung over the desk and dresser have an unfortunate habit of dripping on notebooks or the boy-friend's picture. When the heat is on, a newspaper spread over the radiator makes an excellent quick-drying place. The ordinary method of drying, however, consists in spreading the washed articles upon hangers which are ultimately placed in the windows for the balmy breezes to dry.

French Honorary Gives Three Bids

Hutt, Campbell, Lopez Are Invited Into Group

Beta Pi Theta, French honorary fraternity has issued bids to three faculty members who are instructors in French. The bids were issued to Miss Elizabeth Hutt, Miss Margaret Campbell, and Mr. Manuel Lopes.

Sunday afternoon, November 25, at 4 o'clock in Broward lounge, the five girls recently tapped will present a play in French.

The presentation of the French play is an entrance requirement in the fraternity, and after this there will be a pledging service.

The girls who are presenting the play are: Jo Binion, Pearle Overhultz, Dorothy Crews, Barbara Crosland, and Anna Glen.

At the conclusion of the pledging service, refreshments will be served. All the French faculty and present members of the fraternity are invited.

Members of the faculty in the fraternity are Miss Mildred Finnegan, faculty adviser, and Mrs. A. B. Allan, Miss Dorothy Breen, Dr. Margie Burks, Dr. Marion Hay, Miss Lucy Lester, and Dr. A. R. Seymor.

The student members include Mauvis Lussier, president, and Alice Porter, Leona Stimmel, Ruth Mock, Ruth Dickson, Betty Boggs, Ruth Feinberg, Wylma Ter Bush, Mary Carson, and Lillian Turlington.

Alumnae will be passed at the door by their badges. There will be reserved seats for the orchestra, teams, Spriowirs, Esteren, alumnae, Odd and Even committees, ushers, and college officials.

Collegiate Crowd Makes Way Toward Co-Ed Buying Mecca

heading for Bennet's and a soda to revive her before returning.

Above the din a crooner warbles, "I Wished on the Moon," and around the victrola and record department gather a group of love-lorn looking girls who despite the clamour around them, appear to be transported far away, perhaps even 150 miles away. Each girl has her particular favorite that must be played before she will shove on to other articles on her list, some awaiting moonstruck melodies, others impatiently snapping their fingers awaiting a tune that yields notes of weird minors and words that tell of a lost love and the futility of struggling on through life. Then there is the girl that demands the hot-cha and even hillbilly music and lends her ear to the tune despite the incredulous looks that adorn the faces of her companions who possess a love for music on a much more elevated plane. As the needle bumps along the ridges of the record, the clerk beams, visioning the coming sales, hearing the numerous clicks of the cash register, and makes no attempt to hide her chagrin when the music-minded group pushes on with their souls full of music and their money still in their purses.

Toy Counter

"Isn't she adorable? I wish I weren't too grown up to play with dolls!" This comes from the toy counter, about which gather a group of girls who register haughty expressions in order to ward off any snickers which may come from the passers-by. One buys a tin Popeye the Sailor, explaining to the clerk in a nonplussed voice that there is a little boy somewhere for whom she is buying it, tucks the package under her arm, and makes her way to the hosiery department where she regains her collegiate air. The sight of a china dog puts one sophomore in a state of excitement that threatens to be the doom of both ten cents and the dog. The cash register clicks; the dog leaves the counter; paper rattles, a package is placed in the outstretched hand, and one more pup is on his way to join a vast collection on a dormitory shelf, devoted to canines.

The crowd shoves onward, leaving in its wake girls demanding a certain color and texture of hosiery, some eyeing lamp shades with a critical attitude, one inquiring at each counter as to the hereabouts of a corn-popper, and another explaining to a bewildered clerk that she wants a do-hickey that is about so long and has a pink something-or-other on one end. A line mills out with bundles galore; a line worms in with shopping lists and full purses, each a link in a moving chain of babbling voices, hurrying feet, bundles of coats and sweaters, on a bitterly cold Saturday afternoon.

Speaker Gives Talk Thursday

crude wooden doll fashioned by the loving hands of his mother.

"Also deplorable in our modern life is the decline in true home life. There is today in reality no home life. Members of the family are engrossed in interests outside of the home; they crave continuous rounds of excitement, and find a quiet evening in the home so boresome as to be intolerable.

"In our modern art of living we must learn to cultivate intelligent use of leisure time. We have changed from an economic order in which hard work was a necessity to an order in which a three-hour working day may before long become a sober reality. It is leisure which distinguishes man from beast. We must endeavor to escape from excessive mechanization, to make intelligent use of this leisure time. Then we will have achieved the ideal that an educated person is not alone one who has amassed a huge fortune or done many noteworthy things but one who has learned to cultivate the art of leisure."

Sleepers Awake To Rusty Clang Of Fire Alarm

Quiet of Dormitories Is Pervaded by Noises Of Tired Mob

The silence of sleep filled the corridors. The sound of the last muffled footstep had died away into the all-pervading quiet. The coldness of late fall settled over the empty halls.

Behind the closed doors there was coldness, too. The radiators were cold. Even their clanking had ceased to punctuate the stillness.

The windows were dark splashes. A cold white mist hugged the buildings. Only a faint glimmer of light here and there broke the monotonous blackness.

Into the cold stillness came a series of awakening sounds. Rusty metal clanged against rusty metal. The silence was splintered by a chaos of small noises—snaps of light buttons, shuffle of slippers, creaking of doors, the brusque clanging of windows, the alam of transoms, the mumble of sleepy voices, the dull thud of many feet, the hurried running of belated awakeners as they went down the stairs into the icy air.

Glaring light filled the buildings. It revealed faces—faces startled into wakefulness, faces filled with sleepy anger, faces moving in listless apathy, faces devoid of make-up, pale in the bright light as they trudged back up the steps.

Silence and coldness again settled down. The building was again filled with sleep.

Noise and light again came into the darkness and the cold. Pale faces in the light, dull thuds on the stairs. A long wait in the cold. Weary shuffles of feet on the stairs. Doors closed. Lights went out. No more fire-drills for a while!

Day Students To Hold Forum

Discussion to Consider Compulsory Chapel Will Be Held

At the meeting of the day stunts' organization held Thursday rning, it was decided that an en forum be held on Monday, ovember 30, at 7:30 in room 203 the Administration building, for e purpose of discussing whether not day students should be mpelled to attend convocation ercises All day students are ged to be present and any inerested members of the student dy are invited to attend, acrding to Marjorie Fain, president of the organization.

Reports from other girls' schools ere read to the organization. hese reports were in reply to estionnaire sent out by the day udents, with regards to activities day students at other colleges. every report, it was stated that apel was compulsory, and that ere was very little discriminaon between day students and mpus students at their respece colleges. At Winston-Salem llege, in North Carolina, the ass offices are divided among y and campus students, and a air per cent of representatives to councils and senates must be day students.

It was voted by the organization to carry on the work of the Y. W. C. A. playground for Tallahassee children during the Christmas holidays.

All Tallahassee girls attending F. S. C. W. were invited to attend an after-dinner coffee, to be given for them by Dean Dorman the first week in December, at which time Miss Dorman will address the organization

It was decided by the club to invite as speakers for meetings in the near future, Catherine Blood, Margaret Graham, Lucy Gee Linn, and Margaret Maxwell.

A report was given by the social chairman, Mattie Lou Love, and plans were made for the next meeting, which will be a social affair to be held December 5. Details of this party will be announced later.

4-H Club Has Displays of Three Hundred Jars of Preserved Fruit

Beauty is more than skin deep in the fruits and vegetables used to make the three hundred jars of marmalades and preserves on display by the 4-H Club in the Science building. Ordinarily clashing colors harmonize perfectly in the lighted display of the jars which are arranged on a semicircular set of shelves.

Marmalades and jellies which bring color to the shelves are kumquat, limequat, orangequat, grapefruit, Japanese plum, and guava. Decoration by means of cross sections of the fruit adds to the attractiveness of the jelly. One jar of kumquat marmalade was artistically unique with its decoration of rind cut in various shapes, including a head and letters of the alphabet.

In preserving the guava, some girls left the fruit whole, while others canned it with the center taken out to be filled when used. Grapefruit peel and citron are well-known for their use as candies and for fruit cakes. In addition to pineapple preserves, there are salad packs of pineapple and pear. The papaya, also called the tree cantaloupe, is pickled and used for spices when green, and is preserved when ripe and of a deep golden color. Other preserved fruits in the display are peaches, pears, wild plums, figs, and tomatoes.

Just as interesting and attractive are the preserved vegetables and canned meats. Okra, turnip greens, sweet corn, lima beans, celery, peas, carrots, squash, green beans, and beets are all appetizing and attractive and mingle well in the colorful atmosphere with the rest. Combinations such as greens with fat meat and turnips make an interesting jar-full, while canned chicken can be very appealing to the eye as well as to the appetite.

All of the display is made up of Florida products. Part of this display will go to the National 4-H Club Congress to be held at Chicago in December, while the remainder is a permanent display by the 4-H Club girls.

Elementary Classes In Textiles Busy on Fair, Thanksgiving Projects

In the department of home economics, the three elementary textile classes are working on two nearby projects.

The first is an exhibition for the Leon County fair which will be held in Tallahassee, November 28-30. An array of posters, two by four, are being used to show the need of standardization of textiles in general, especially of household linen, hosiery, and dresses, particularly of silk and rayon.

There will be a more extensive display Thanksgiving in the Textile laboratories of the Science building for the purpose of showing what the classes are doing. All Homecomers and others interested in this field are invited to inspect this exhibit Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons. Besides the exhibit of posters and models of textiles in general, the students will demonstrate the use and operation of the textile machines. The laboratory is equipped with machinery which is similar to that used in large factories in which actual tests of the quality of the fabrics are made before releasing them.

Students Give Program For Kiwanian Luncheon

A program of dances and songs arranged by Caroline Oliver, was presented at the Tallahassee Kiwanis Club luncheon Tuesday at the Floridan Hotel by a number of the college students.

The program consisted of a solo tap dance by Viola Brooks; a Dutch song and character dance by Sara Knight, Mary Kimball, Caroline Athon, and Caroline Blount; "Girl from Tallahassee," sung by Shirley Pemberton; a military tap dance by Viola Brooks and Sara Knight; and "The Old Gray Mare," a character tap dance by Mary Kimball and Caroline Blount.

Peace Leaves When Grades Are Released

You are walking calmly to class. You meet your best friend. A word is passed. Expressions of stark terror spring to your faces, you drop hands and dash apart, galloping in opposite directions.

You flee past classrooms, empty save for stoical teachers who smile knowingly as you pass. Over the pavement you fly, followed by an ever-increasing silent mob, relentlessly hurrying, hurrying hurrying . . .

Up off the pavement like a flash and into a cavernous corridor. In the dimness you make out a small dial, turn it swiftly, and reluctantly thrust your hand into the darkness beyond. Nothing.

The mob is upon you. It writhes and squirms all about you and you draw aside to think. Eureka!

Again you're on your way. You pause before an awe-inspiring grating marked cashier's and push your last dollar to the stern and rockbound other side. A sheet of paper is thrust at you. It bears the indecipherable motto "Paid: 10c." You clutch it and hurry on. (Excelsior!)

Then to the office of the registrar! A very small voice that you suddenly and surprisedly realize is yours asks for grades. You hold forth strained, clammy fingers attached to a nerveless hand to grasp a small slip of paper. Back again into the milling mob before you get enough courage to look at it. The mob presses against you. You are going down, down. You make an attempt to see the strange markings on the paper. (You go down, down.) A ray of light sneaks in. You can see the paper! You go down. (You're going too far.)

"Tell Mother I made two "A's," you mutter as someone steps on your face.

Chemistry Notables To Speak Here at Meeting Of Florida Scientists

Dr. Fred Allison, chemist of international fame from the Alabama Polytechnic institute, will speak here at the meeting of the Florida section of the American Chemical society on Saturday night, December 14, at 8 o'clock, according to Dr. Leland Lewis, professor of chemistry.

Dr. Allison received the Herty medal for his distinguished work done in the field of magnito optics, which method he employed in his discovery of the two elements, virginium and alabamium. These two elements were named in honor of Alabama, where Dr. Allison is working, and for Virginia which claims him as a former student. Dr. Allison's discovery of these last two elements, Dr. Lewis says, is important not only because they are the last remaining two of the total 92 elements but also because only three of these 92 have been discovered by Americans.

Mr. B. J. Russel, chief chemist of Southern Kraft Paper company of Panama City, will speak at the afternoon meeting at 4 o'clock, bringing an exhibit from the paper works of Panama City and promising to present his work in such a way that laymen may follow his discussion of phases of paper making.

These addresses are not for those members of the American Chemical society only, but students at the college and the public are invited to attend.

Conradi Attends Meets

President Edward Conradi attended meetings of the State Board of Control and of the Florida committee on the accrediting of high schools in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, in Gainesville last Saturday.

Bottles and Burlap Blossom Into Modernistic Articles

Thousands of Rural Women Aided to Make Attractive Homes by Members of Agency With Its Headquarters at Florida State

By MINNA AGRESS

An emptied vinegar bottle has all the potentialities of a modernistic table lamp. A crocus sack is not just two yards of rough material stitched into a bag, but an embryonic coat, dress, or perhaps a pair of drapes. Under the guidance of a home demonstration agent the farmer's wife finds endless ways of making luxuries out of prosaically ordinary articles.

More than 15,000 rural women and girls have been aided in the making of better homes by members of the state home demonstration agency, with headquarters at Florida State College for Women.

The department is headed by Miss Flavia Gleason, state home demonstration agent, and is composed of the Florida home demonstration staff consisting of seven specialists in the management of the rural home and thirty-seven trained home demonstration agents, one in each of the thirty-seven counties in the state participating in the organization. The work is done in cooperation with the State College of Agriculture at Gainesville and the United States department of agriculture at Washington.

The state home demonstration agent develops and supervises a state-wide program of home demonstration work. The program planned is arranged to provide an opportunity for a broad and practical education to the girls and women living in the rural sections of Florida. Representing the college in the rural community, the home demonstration worker, under the supervision of the district agent, personally directs the work done among girls and women on the farms.

The basis of the home demonstration program is the "demonstration idea." The woman or girl with whom the county representative works decides on a definite project which she wishes to carry on in her home. The agent offers information and suggestions to improve the methods formerly used, and a record is kept of the experiment.

When the demonstration is completed a comparison is made between the results obtained when the offered information was used and the results of former experiences. The agent thus shows to the rural women the value of the improved methods, which are usually accomplished with the expenditure of little or no money.

The home demonstration worker aims to set up standards of living superior to those found in the average rural district. The agent introduces better practices in preparation of foods, clothing, and shelter. Improved methods in gardening, canning, sewing, cooking, planning and purchasing of meals, and home beautification are demonstrated to the rural home-makers. The needs of the people among whom the information is distributed determine the work of the home demonstration department. The women and girls of the state decide the phases of rural life in which they want assistance.

The state home demonstration office also serves those counties not employing a county home demonstration agent through correspondence and by meetings held several times during the year.

Vesper Service Planned

A special Thanksgiving program will be the feature of the vesper service Sunday evening at 7:15 o'clock in the Augusta Conradi theater.

The Y. W. C. A. choir will sing several Thanksgiving hymns, and Mary Jeanne McKay will tell a Thanksgiving story.

Student Written Skits Requested

Physical Ed Section Of FEA Plans Program

The physical education section of the Florida Education association is asking for skits to be used on radio programs and in auditorium productions. Such skits are to comply with the following regulations: (1) the time for production should be about fifteen minutes; (2) they must be easy to produce, so that high school groups with little difficulty could present them, (3) they are to convey information concerning the value, purpose, or activities of physical education in the school program; and (4) they must be interesting, preferably clever.

Any student producing a skit that is accepted by the committee will be given full recognition in the production of such a skit, wherever it may be used in the state. The best skit will be produced in Orlando at the time of the physical education section meeting during the Christmas holidays.

For informational material that might be used in such productions students are referred to two sets of typed material now on reserve in the library on the physical education reserve shelf. These are entitled, "Why Physical Education?" compiled by J. E. Rogers, and "The Value of Physical Education," compiled by K. W. Montgomery. Miss Montgomery also has several short sketches which students may read to get an idea of the type of material desired.

All students interested in this form of composition are urged to try their skill in such production. All skits are to be mailed to Katherine W. Montgomery, Box 159, F. S. C. W., on or before December 11, 1935.

Demonstration Worker To Attend Five Meets On Two Week Absence

Miss Flavia Gleason, state home demonstration agent whose headquarters are in the extension department of Florida State College has left for Washington, D. C., where she will take part in a discussion "How to Improve and Expand 4-H Club Work" at a conference of agricultural extension workers.

Following this will be the annual meeting of the Association of Land-Grant Colleges and Universities which Miss Gleason will also attend, taking part in programs of the home economics and extension sections. An agricultural planning meet where particular attention of planning county programs of agriculture will be paid is the third meeting which Miss Gleason will attend. A meeting of the Epsilon Sigma Phi fraternity, made up of extension workers in the service 10 years or longer, will follow. Miss Gleason was secretary-treasurer of the Florida chapter for two years.

On November 2? Miss Gleason will stop in Lake City to attend the meeting of the county home demonstration council, and will return to Tallahassee on the same day, after an absence of two weeks.

Seniors Carry Football Game

Triple Lateral Pass Ends Unique Game Using Six-Man Teams

The senior six man football team of the Demonstration school defeated the All-stars by a score of 54-0 in the first game of the year between these two teams.

Members of the senior team were Phillips, (Milk of Magnesia), Brooks, (Jess Willard); Kindrick, (Otis Elevator); Yates, (Al Capone); Gray (Joe Lewis), Boone, (Daniel). Members of the senior team were: McCann, Linzie, Irving, Diffenbaugh, Skipper, Smith, and substitutes, Richey, Pfluge, Baker.

The high point of the game was a triple lateral pass scoring a touchdown in the last minute of play.

Cheerleaders for the seniors were Frances Johnson and Harriet Kent; for the all-stars, Sue Love and Mary Charles Pendley.

Leon high school of Tallahassee is also experimenting with this type of football and the two schools may be matched at least once or twice during the year.

The six-man team originated a year ago in Nebraska. It is especially suited to smaller high schools and intra-mural games since it affords greater selection for positions.

In the six-man team, there are three men on a line, one center and two ends, and three men in the backfield. The game is played on a forty by eighty yard field, instead of fifty by a hundred.

"In all the essential qualities the sport is the same as eleven-man football," Dr R. B. Parsons, superintendent of the Demonstration school said. "After three weeks practice, the boys are crazy about it. It's a wonderful game."

Dr. Parsons got the idea from a current issue of the School Executive Magazine, in which Stephen E. Epler, author of the article, says, "Capital outlay and maintenance of a smaller field is less, and transportation to other games, food and lodging also decreased with a smaller team."

Epler originated the game at the high school at Beatrice, Nebraska, where it's successes the first year indicated a bright future for it.

The first six-man football game was played on Hebron college football field at Hebron, Nebraska, the night of September 26, 1934, and Scottsbluff Junior College played the first college game.

Besides the initiation of six-man football there is being conducted a series of Ping-Pong tournaments among the individual students who are interested, and plans are being made for the opening of the basket-ball on December the first.

Among other lines, the students of various grades have contributed to the entertainment of the student body with representative interpretations of books, plays, and such. The senior class, under the direction of Mr. Kenneth Williams is already at work on their annual play, which is to be given sometime before Christmas.

"Whither America In 1936 Olympics"

The question of whether American athletes should participate in the Eleventh Olympiad, if it is held in Nazi Germany, is now being debated throughout the entire country. Especially in the colleges has the matter received attention, and every week comments from other college newspapers present new angles of the situation.

The issue seems to be whether Nazi policies and activities in the realm of sports and in connection with the Olympic games themselves are of such a character as to make impossible the true spirit of sportsmanship in the games. According to a bulletin published by the Committee on Fair Play in Sports, Nazi Germany has violated her pledge not to exclude German Jews from the German team solely because they are Jews, by denying them the opportunity to train and compete for the German team; and has violated her pledge to observe the Olympic code not only by her treatment of her Jewish athletes, but by her treatment of her Catholic and Protestant athletes and by her misuse of the games to serve the interests of the Nazi regime rather than the interest of sports. If this is true, then Germany has introduced race, religion, and politics into the Olympics, a policy inconsistent with the spirit in which the games were conceived.

Jonathan B. Bingham, editor of the Yale Daily News in his editorial, "Sport—Not Politics," contends that though none but "Aryans" are allowed on the Olympic team it is doubtful if this is any concern of the participating nations. "If Germany wishes to handicap herself by barring Jews," he writes, "it is difficult to prove that that is not strictly her affair." Morever, he says that political issues have been confused with matters pertaining to sport. "The German people would not be less likely to bow to "Hitler," he adds, "if the United States stayed away next year."

Replying to the Yale editor Roger E. Chase, editor of the Columbia Spectator, says that in Germany athletics are frankly, even proudly, identified with Nazi politics.

"The official invitation to the Olympics bears on its cover the picture of Adolf Hitler with the caption 'I summon the youth of the world.' The question is," he asks, "to what use is our youth going to be put?"

What can we as Americans do about the situation? We can either send our athletes to the contest imbibed with the true spirit of the Olympic games, "win or lose, everyone an equal chance," or we can withdraw from the contest on the grounds of Nazi Germany's discrimination and abandonment of sportsmanship and fair play. To quote the words of the editor of the Junior Collegian, "Will the motto be 'Home and Fireside,' or "Berlin or Bust'?"

Is Education Just a "Hand-out?"

The case for academic freedom again was brought to the fore by John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, in an address before a session of the Missouri State Teachers' association recently.

"It should be the primary concern of our professional educational organizations," he said, "to safeguard our educational system from the straight-jacketing influence of alien doctrines of suppression and censorship."

The situation in most of our schools is, indeed, deplorable. Only this week the recent "communism row" at our capital city in Washington reached its climax when comptroller-general J. R. McCarl ruled that teachers who receive government pay checks first must sign statements avowing that they have not "taught or advocated communism." The incongruous thing about the whole matter is that the office declines to give an interpretation of the use of the word "taught," which has been the main bone of contention in the entire controversy.

This is only one instance of many which shows how much the schools are influenced by outside factors. Dr. Theodore Irion, dean of the school of education at the University of Missouri, says that if teachers continue a laissez-faire system, permitting outside forces to control what is taught in schools, education will continue to be the tool of selfish interests.

It is time that we were waking up to the fact that we have been teaching blind obedience and blind loyalty in our schools instead of trying to develop a critical attitude. A citizenship creed which was drawn up by a committee appointed by the American Bar association seems to express the general view which we have been trying to indoctrinate. It reads, "I believe we Americans have the best government that ever has been created—the freest and the most just for all people. The schools of America should no more consider graduating a student who lacks faith in our government than a school of theology should graduate a minister who lacks faith in God."

We have been preaching this doctrine without presenting adequate facts about other systems as well as our own. If we only "hand on" in classes what has been "handed down" to us, without stimulating the habit of critical thinking our educational system is doomed to narrowness and bigotry.

Shall We Defy Organization?

Firmly believing that the campaign against unworthy organizations now being sponsored by the Crimson-White, University of Alabama newspaper, its editors have launched a vigorous deluge of criticism aimed at the clubs, honoraries, and organizations of all sorts that obviously have no definite place on the campus and "are there mainly to satisfy the gregariousness of the students."

The editorial board of the paper proposes to work in this drive in conjunction with a committee composed of representative students. Their first task will be to classify all local organizations as to purpose, activity record, and worth, believing their group of unbiased and nonpartisan viewpoints.

Too long, they say, has their campus been subjected to a surplus of groups that seek only to add new members to their rolls for the sole purpose of adding more gold to the coffers, with oftentimes a key or a pin as the only indication of the organizations' existence.

While there may be no immediate danger of F. S. C.'s campus being overrun with societies whose activity is all "front," there is, in the problem besetting Alabama, a warning to all our collegiate organizations to look to their laurels, lest our own student body become surfeited with superfluous "activity."

In spite of the large amounts of collegiate peace propaganda released by university newspapers this fall, the ROTC enrollment over the United States has increased by the thousands.

The college editors who so vehemently denounce the organization as one whose unnecessary teachings over a four-year period might easily be compressed into a month's wartime training, now find their demilitarization program "up against it." The foe is increasing in numbers. Hope may be derived however from constant evidence that within the body of students who every year must enroll for compulsory military training, there is dissatisfaction.

SOVIET RUSSIA LEGALLY MATURES

With this month marking the eighteenth year since the Russian revolution and eighteen the age of maturity in Soviet Russia, a number of writers attempt to describe Soviet Russia of today in current periodicals.

John Lewis in Asia gives his explanation of Soviet Russia's new philosophy. It is impossible for us to judge Soviet Russia by our standards or any standards we know today, he writes, for Russia's new standards contradict both western and eastern philosophies.

She accepts neither the West's pursuit of pleasure in material goods, nor the East's "ascetic discipline and its cultivation of the beyond that is within."

Her philosophy is a philosophy of change. She believes evolution is not a result of mystical influence or any spiritual principle from within, but a power of movement, a power in men's minds. Therefore, Russians assume social ownership of the productive apparatus and consciously control the industrial system.

In their moral pattern then it is thievery to "own" the means whereby the community lives and it is a social obligation to secure for the community the wealth by which it lives. If a man quits his job, everybody suffers.

Man, they believe, is neither good or bad but what necessity requires him to be. A capitalistic society compels man to struggle selfishly or perish.

In conclusion Lewis says the five-year plan is no longer an "experiment" but the birth of a pattern of change—a pattern of living which inevitably the whole world will have to make.

Maurice Hindus, in Asia also, completes his "Moscow Moods" which began in the November issue. Some street scenes he describes as amusing to us, others pathetic, but they do help us to better understand how the Soviet plan has affected various classes of Russian society.

Louis Fisher, a Moscow correspondent, writing for Nation, November 13, tries to picture the Russian scene objectively.

The long-time conflict between the two systems, one capitalistic, the other non-capitalistic, has resulted in supremacy of the anti-capitalistic system, Fischer says, although the system has taken the form of socialism rather than communism.

For instance, more and more workers will start wearing white collars, he says, for the Bolsheviks are no longer afraid of bourgeois forms. Pressure from the outside capitalistic world may cause the Soviets to don bourgeois forms, Fischer observes, or they may feel they have to appear to be as good as the bourgeoisie before they can prove themselves better.

Returning to facts, however, he finds that eighty-two million of the one hundred and seventy million inhabitants of Soviet Russia have never known capitalism, that is, counting children who were under six years of age at the time of the revolution.

The general appearance, he says, is one of unlimited self-confidence and universal animation which all, including the foreigners, feel in the U. S. S. R. Fischer explains this fact by the peoples' close identification with governmental activities.

"Everyone is concerned at the shortcomings of certain state farms . . . the publication of new school text books is a national event . . . the rank-and-file of workers condemned or praised in the national press take on a new dignity . . . there is a vast yearning for good health and good living . . . a belief in a glorious future which is clouded only by the possibility of war."

SAVING AND SPENDING

By Stuart Chase
Survey Graphic, November, 1935

Conclusions of the Brookings institute's four-year survey which were condensed in this column last week from an article in the current Fortune are criticized by Stuart Chase who thinks his conclusions superior to the institute's because they face reality.

Brookings' recommendation to decrease prices may lead us only to chaos, Chase thinks, in a system as complex and specialized as ours.

Rather would he place blame on the fact of profits than the capitalists' use of profits. The government should tax the rich for the money they cannot spend or reinvest, he says, with the following essential financial steps: progressive income taxes on larger incomes; inheritance taxes on large fortunes; conversion of public and private debt at lower interest rate; public control of banking and credit, public control of new investment; establishment of minimum wage levels as in NRA; and the financing of public work by non-interest-bearing public credit, as in Russia.

FELLOW-ALUMNI OF MAMOTH!

By John Tunis
Harpers, November 1935

Tunis adds the alumni secretary to his series of "acid portraits," as the editors of Harper's have named Tunis' college sketches.

Chuck Walker, secretary of Mammoth college, cannot be described as the typical alumni-secretary because none of them are alike, says Tunis. However, Chuck contains characteristics of all of them and his implements are the same. Dictaphones, typewriters, electric addressographs, are all at Chuck's command to inveigle the alumni into giving contributions to Mammoth.

The lack of alumni-secretaries in Europe says Tunis, may indicate that Europe believes in education while America believes in progress.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

By GRACE MARY WEBSTER

TERMS of the United States-Canada treaty, which Roosevelt believes will double the commerce between the two nations in two years, were disclosed this week.

The principal issues concerned reduction of the high tariff wall which has been built between us. For example, we reduced our tariff on all whiskies aged four years or more in wood to a half of the former tax of $5 per gallon. Canada, on the other hand, reduced her rates of duty on 180 commodities, and guaranteed us the lowest rate of any non-British country on 767 items. Magazines and periodicals will carry no tax henceforth. Potatoes and cotton are on the free list and so also are oranges during certain seasons of the year. Canada reduced her taxes on our manufactured goods, going so far as to put tractors on the free list, while we cut our duties on all kinds of agricultural products and live stock.

This marks a real step forward in establishing ourselves on this continent in the matter of friendly relations. Central American and South American states still cast a rather bilious eye at us in our "big brother" policy. Relations with Canada, especially in the last ten years, have been what might be called a tariff rivalry—seeing who could pass the highest tariffs to hit the most vulnerable spots. What will senatorial ability to clip, change and refute do to this treaty next January?

THE committee appointed to award the Nobel peace prize very solemnly announced this week that there will be no award for 1935. Some international-minded humorist put up Emperor Haile Selassie's name for the prize, but the committee very courteously explained that the name had not come in by the deadline time.

* * *

THE increased import of Canadian agricultural products which should result from the recent treaty brings up the question of our farmers. Will this swing American farmers against Roosevelt and the new deal in the forthcoming election? Will it give the Republican party another platform with which to appeal to the farm population? Manufacturers, who should approve of the treaty, will have money to help the Democratic presidential campaign, but

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

A COLLEGE EDUCATION AND 'DOLLARS AND CENTS' . . . .

"The object of a college education is not to help a man as a bread-winner but rather to be the life-long sweetener of all the bread he ever earns.' President Conant of Harvard university quoted these words of James Russell Lowell at the fiftieth anniversary of Bryn Mawr last week.

At the same time, Dean Ackerman of the Columbia School of Journalism, was quoted as saying that "the face value of a college degree is negligible.' Both of these learned gentlemen seem to be very much in agreement with James Russell Lowell, but it is certain that most college students would find they have much more in common with the ideas of former Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts Gasper Bacon, who said, at a recent Phi Beta Kappa convention, "Colleges are trying to teach young men and women to think for themselves, to discover and assimilate knowledge and to apply it, to discriminate between the essential and the non-essential in any given problem, and to arrive at independent judgments."

None of us claims that "a scrap of paper" is proof that a person is educated, for numerous men and women somehow sneak through college, fulfilling the requirements for a degree, but not assimilating a college education. It is to be hoped and expected that the largest number of students certainly hopes that four years spent in college will signify they have gained more than a 'life-long sweetener' of what they may accomplish in later days.

Even a liberal education has vocational value and the great development in professional schools in the last two decades has made it possible for college to have a very definite 'dollars and cents' value.

Although it is irrefutably true that an education as conceived by James Russell Lowell is necessary for a completely happy and successful life, it is even more conspicuously true that the world which the college graduate must face is a completely practical one, and expects more of him than a smattering of learning to light the dark days after college.

—Michigan Daily.

EDUCATION VS. TRADITION

On the frontier of present-day learning stands the undeniable fact that education is an opponent and not an ardent supporter of traditional ideas and methods. Education by its very nature is revolution. This fact is readily apparent in the growth of any individual from infancy into adulthood. Change is the essence of a constructive development.

The real purpose, then, of education is not to mould the younger generation into the narrow groove of tradition. It aims rather at preparing youth for a greater material and cultural achievement than the previous generation was able to accomplish. Herein lies the secret of human progress.

A glance at the world picture emphasizes the need for this little recognized conception of education. A traditional economic order that has not kept pace with technological advancement is no longer able to decently care for its people. Cultural and spiritual values are thrown aside in the made scramble for existence. Governments bound by the shackles of a dead past rush blindly on in a vain search for the way out. And over the sorry spectacle of modern "civilization" hangs the dark cloud of war, a monument to the petty jealousies and ambitions of the older generation.

Mental stooges of the existing order are not going to lead society out of the mess in which it finds itself. Only intelligent thinkers who are free from traditional influences can add fresh color to the picture. This is the problem of the modern school. Will it equip the student for a constructive future? Or will it be content to offer the narrow rut of a disappointing past. In this answer lies in the future of human welfare.—Daily Northwestern.

U. S. EDUCATION DEPARTMENT

Establishment of a federal department of education, headed by presidential cabinet members was declared the next important step toward better education by Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, at a recent gathering of educators in Providence, R. I.

Doctor Hutchins scored the "neglect" which education has suffered through so-called 'economy" programs of politicians, large taxpayers and cranks in general. He placed direct responsibility for national education on the federal government. "Responsibility to equalize educational opportunities in the nation's schools must be in the hands of the federal authorities," he said.

Four thousand New England educators agreed that a cabinet officer would have "forced" the national government to give more attention to education in the last few years. They agreed that local and state budgets were cut out to "dislodge the politicians who because it was easier to do so then were actually squandering the public funds."

The entire educational program is far from being in a unified state. Even in closely allied sections of the country, methods go from one extreme to another. Staid old New England is particularly harassed by a lack of unified educational standards. Some states even lack a standard of education within their own boundaries. New York is singular in its state "regents" system.

No federal supervision of educational methods and teachers themselves is provided for in any way. Agriculture, commerce and labor are all integral parts of the governing system. Is not education as important as these?—Syracuse Daily Orange.

BETTER TO GRIN THAN GRIPE

"We might as well be in a jail as in this school," many of the unappreciative college girls say. If only some of these girls would think twice before they made such a remark, they would realize how much liberty they actually have here.

Let's take a backward look, say, three years ago. Then dancing with a man in a sorority house and similar places was an unheard of thing. It just wasn't the thing to do and consequently there were rules against it. Today dancing is held in sorority and off-campus houses—dancing with the opposite sex.

Until this year riding with a man was breaking one of the college rules. One could ride in the daytime, yes, but not after 6:30. Now we have the privilege of riding after 6:30 as well as before. This is another step toward "freeing the college girl."

Still students remark that F. S. C. W. is similar to a jail. This type of person certainly must not have much "spunk" to say this, and she is really proving herself to be very unappreciative of the freedom the college is giving her. If she could only be made to realize that the more she shows her appreciation of what is being done for her and the more she proves herself worthy of such liberty, the more liberty she will obtain.

Probation was lifted last week-end in order that all the students could attend "fall frolics." Let's wonder how many girls wholly appreciate this act and are grateful to their Alma Mater? They truly should be made to consider seriously the affair and to show their gratefulness by doing big things for the school, such as cooperating with the rules that still remain.

The college has adopted the plan that the more the students show their ability to appreciate the liberty given them the more liberty they will receive. Why not let it be known that we can assume the responsibility of more freedom?

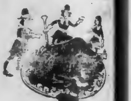
Collegiate Come-Backs



Now that grades have been out for a week the student body is gradually assuming its former expression after having decided that suicide is messy and that professors don't grade fairly anyway. The greatest complaint seems to be coming, not from the disappointed A-aspirants nor from the out-and-out F-ers, but from those souls who received C after having "laughed at all of his ancient, bewhiskered, bone-dry jokes." Oh, well, it would appear that lots of us are in the same boat in that respect.

A professor on campus recently asked one of his classes to imagine a society with only one sex. It would be difficult for a class at Florida State to imagine any other type, don't you think?

Juniors and Seniors Of Pi Phi Sorority Entertain Profs

Faculty members invited by the junior and senior members of the Pi Beta Phi sorority were entertained Wednesday night at the chapter house with an after-dinner coffee.

The lower floor of the house was decorated throughout with attractive arrangements of late fall and early winter flowers. The coffee table was overlaid with a lace table cloth and centered with a bowl o' roses.

Coffee, cookies, salted nuts, and mints were served during the evening.

Theta Upsilon Fetes Fellowship Day At Informal Tea

Members and pledges of the Theta Upsilon sorority entertained yesterday afternoon with an informal tea celebrating Fellowship day.

Decorations of roses and poinsettias were used with fern throughout the house.

Teas, cakes, sandwiches, and mints were served during the afternoon while a social hour was enjoyed.

Hostesses at this time were Anne Donnell, Lucille Edenfield, Mary Lanehart, Elizabeth Leach, Barbara Greene, Gertrude Tomkies, Catherine Newman, Margaret Neff, Doris Geiger, Lorraine Gyles, Mildred Smith, Harriet Jeffries, Olivia Sorenson, Dorothy Stewart, and La Una Hosford.

Personal Mention

Josephine Trantham, Eleanor Hutchinson, and Mary Emily Parker are going to Atlanta this week-end to attend the Florida-Tech football game.

Among those coming to the Alpha Delta Pi house for Thanksgiving are Mrs. Traxler, Gainesville, Mary Belle Rogers, Dot McKeathan, and Margaret Rogers, Brooksville, and Mrs. Holmes and Kathryn Holmes, Fort Myers.

Betty Hatch, and Jane Upton spent last week-end in Jacksonville.

Nellie Lamar is going to Fort Valley, Georgia, this week-end.

Members and pledges of the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority went out to Bishop's plantation to a cane grinding last week-end and cooked supper out there.

Members of the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority will hold their weekly open house Sunday night for members of the faculty and other friends.

Virginia Turner and Mrs. Matilde Wall of Jacksonville, were guests at the Delta Delta Delta house last week.

Virginia Peyton and Sallie Anthony are going to Jacksonville this week-end.

Among those attending the Florida-Georgia game in Atlanta this week-end are Miss Elizabeth Love, Jo King, Jane Grey Stevens, Beauford Thrower, Francas Thomas, Charlotte Stevens, Jean Clark, Betty Wynn, and Polly Ann White.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Carter, patron and patroness of tha Theta Upsilon sorority, were guests at tha chapter house last Sunday evening for an informal supper. The Berea school, where all the sorority algeristic work is done, was discussed during the evening.

Katherine O'Mara and Mary Ellen MacMinn have been pledged to the Phi Mu sorority.

Victoria Crisp will pledge Alpha Xi Delta tonight at six o'clock.

Poultry Class Visits Here En Route To Chipley Project

The poultry class of the Agriculture school of the University of Florida was entertained last Monday in the college dining room.

The class passed through here on its way to Chipley where it will observe and study the Florida experimental poultry farm, a project of the university. This is a major field trip for the class which was headed by Prof. H. L. Anderson.

MORTAR BOARD MEMBERS ENTERTAINED TUESDAY NIGHT WITH BUFFET SUPPER

Members of Mortar Board were entertained with a buffet supper at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Harold F. Richards on Tuesday evening.

After the supper Mrs. Richards spoke about her attendance at the installation of Mortar Board at Birmingham-Southern in Birmingham, Alabama, where she had acted as the installing officer. There were representatives of Mortar Board from Agnes Scott, University of Alabama, and one from Michigan present at the installation.

After Mrs. Richards' talk, final plans were made for the Mortar Board reunion breakfast, which will be held on Saturday morning of Homecoming week at Mrs. Richards' home. About forty returning Mortar Board alumnae are expected to be present.

Members of Mortar Board who attended this supper are Ruth Persons, Minna Dunn, Trudy Kuhn, Edith Webb, Katherine Blood, Sarah Krentzman, Margarat Graham, Lucy Gee Linn, Betty Meyer, Dorothy Leach, Lillian Turlington, Murae Reddick, and Mary Etta Thistlethwaite.

SORORITY HONORS GRAND SECRETARY WITH AFTER DINNER COFFEE TONIGHT

The members and pledges of the Beta Phi Alpha sorority are entertaining tonight at 7:30 with an after-dinner coffee honoring Mrs. Della Thede, grand secretary and visiting alumna.

Termite Theme Waived; Archie Makes His Debut

Data on Topic is Original; Zoology Annals Are Not Responsible

A significant silence prevails in the zoology room. Shuffling of papers and fague mouthings from absorbed members of the class break it occasionally. The yearly insect talks are about to begin and students are memorizing last-minute inormation about the bette-known antennaed pals of man.

A name is called. A student looks up startled, throws her eye over her paper for a last minnte rake-off, puts it aside, and rises with dignity. She arrives in the front of the room with three overturned books and a practically ruined umbrella in her wake. Rubbing her bumped shin, she clasps her hands and throws to the hungry audience: "Termites," in a jerky bass.

She begins with a few hilarious remarks, saying she doesn't know a whole lot about them, but will tell you what she found in the library. She makes a few desultory attempts to get into her eubject.

"Termites are the worst insects I know of." Bam! (Slapping annoying tickling on ear.)

"Termites, like other insects are a sign of unsanitary conditions. (Pow!) Termites can make you very uncomfortable."

"Bugs!" (A cynical comment from the back of the room.)

One last futile attempt to get into the material for whichc the library is responsible.

"Termit—," she reaches absently behind her ear, a look of horror overspreads her fece.

"Termites," she concludes hurriedly, "are a beby's prayer at twilight compared to roaches!"

Freshmen Learn Rites Of Odd-Even Tradition

At a meeting of the freshman class held Monday night Dimples Turner, Odd cheer leader, explained the Thanksgiving ceremonies and told the members about the equipment they would need for Odd night out, etating that lanterns and colors could be bought at the beginning of next week in front of the post office.

The leader also urged that all freshmen try out for color rush Saturday morning between 10 and 12 o'clock.

Freshmen Elect Latin Credits

Latin is not a dead language.

At least, Latin is not a dead language in our high schools, judging by the number of freshmen who antered Florida State this year carrying credits in Latin. There were more than twice as many credits in Latin as in all the other foreign languages combined. German avidently is the least popular language in our high schools, for only one freshman entered this year with credits in German.

Algebra enjoys an unexpected popularity, being represented by as many credits as mathematics, geometry, and trigonometry combined. Biology is far in the lead of the other sciences.

American history, rather surprisingly, has about twice as many credits as the next popular, European history. English outnumbers all the other subjects.

Henry Talks on Poetry Of Modern Age at AAU Meeting Monday Night

The American Association of University Women held its regular monthly meeting at the home of Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, Monday evening November 18. Miss Mildred Henry, member of the English department, spoke on modern poetry.

Miss Henry used selections from Frost, Robinson, Millay, and other of the modern poets to illustrate that the poetry of today is not lacking in the beauty found in the older works.

A social hour followed the meeting during which yearbooks of tha organization wera distributed among the members attending.

Mrs. Myrtle Taylor Bradford of Miami, chairman of the art department of the Florida Federation of Women's clubs was a guest at the meeting.

College Girls Asked To Contribute Old Clothing

The Y. W. C. A will make available next week an opportunity for students of F. S. C. W. to contribute second-hand clothing for the Leon County Welfare association and to the E. R. A. These two associations do not have budgets that allow for clothes to be given to needy persons and are making a plea for all college girls to help them in collecting clothing.

Boxes are to be placed in sorority houses, off-campus houses, and on each hall of the dormitories in which girls are to place their old clothing.

Every student is asked to cooperate with this plan, according to Lucy Gee Linn, president of Y. W. C. A., as all contributions will be greatly appreciated and are needed badly.

Astronomy Fans Study At Camp

Richards Indicates Stars, Constellations; Tells Myths Connected

Members of the Astronomy club spent Wednesday and Thursday night at camp Plastacowo, observing and studying the movements of the stars and planets across the heavens.

Wednesday night, after enjoying a steak supper around three big bon-fires built on the lake shore in front of the cabins, the young astronomers and their guests, Dr. Harold F. Richards, head of the college physics department, Mrs. Richards, and Miss Elizabeth Lynn, instructor in physics at the college, launched canoes and paddled out into the middle of Lake Bradford. There Dr. Richards pointed out many of the less familiar stars and constellations and told several fascinating myths connected with the constellations.

A small movable telescope lent by the physics department was set up on the dock of the boat house for the use of the members and guests of the club. Several pairs of powerful binoculars belonging to the physics department were also at the disposal of the group for use in studying the constellations.

Members of the club attending camp Wednesday night were Patsy Johnson, Marie Anderson, Mary Burgoon, Gladys Ware, Lynn Hammond, Charlotte Engstrom, Sally Ratliff, Jane Quinn, Helen M. Hall, Marion Harrold, Mary Ellen Lovelace, Winona Ireland, Mauvis Lussier, Margaret Mizell, Leona Rehbinder, Mary Ola Reynolds, Virginia White, Betty Beach, Adelaide Lounds, Isabelle Gleason, Florence Evers, Harriet Foster, Mrs. V. W. Clark, Marjorie Harris, and Sarah Beth Davis.

Those who went Thursday night were Marie Joffre, Dorothy Swanborn, Jane Dowdell, Opal Langley, Jane Hubbard, Charmion Lufburrow, Anne Jeter, Judith Bell, Mercedes Garrga, Anne Lee Rollins, Rosemary McGlinchy, Lu Walker, Helen DeVries, Rebecca Keith, Marion Ferrell, Billie Johnson, Ethel Runyan, Nancy Felt, Dora Helen Baggott, and Marjorie Raulerson.

Faculty Fast Becoming Players of Basketball

The faculty is trying its hand at basketball in the gym on Monday and Thursday evenings. Several members turn out regularly (incognito) and are enthusiastic about it. These games are played at eight o'clock on the nights mentioned and those of the faculty who have not as yet hit a ball are invited to do so.

The regular Thursday night plunge period for the faculty is still in effect with the cold weather making it a challenge.

"Style Plus Economy"

Hairdresser Deplores Movie Coiffure for College Co-Ed

Styles Vary from Curls To Coronets, Campus "Setters" Say

By ETHEL GRASSFIELD

"Last year it was braids. This year it is combs and we have to set hair accordingly," said one of the hairdressers on the campus.

"Everyone has her individual hair style this year," she continued, "and I jump from curls rolled on pencils to flat waves and flat curls. I didn't realize girls had their hair set so many different ways until I tried to set hair like the girls wished. I have actually had to learn all over again on some girls."

Just before a big week-end like Armistice or Homecoming the hair-setters are busiest. Almost every girl who can set hair is booked up days ahead for all her free periods.

Some girls ask you to bring your own bobbies pins, hair pins, and fluid, while others are generous enough to douse one's head in fluid at their own expense. Of course, one goes around for days with her hair soaked and hair pins sticking straight into her head. But we must be beautiful, and to have wavy locks is one step forward.

"I always have a few regular customers," said one successful beautician, "and when I learn how they want their hair set I can do it quickly and easily. However, it isn't always as simple as that. Sometimes a girl comes to me who simply must have her hair set like Joan Crawford or Claudette Colbert; or Minnie Mouse. That's when I grit my teeth, grasp my comb, and wonder why on earth Miss Crawford decided on that coiffure. It certainly doesn't suit my customer.

"I try to persuade the would-be follower of Joan that it isn't her type. And, indeed, it isn't her type, but nothing else will do but that kind of a hair set. So I struggle for about two hours, and when at last I accomplish the remarkable feat the girl candidly remarks that it doesn't look quite as good as she expected it to. That soon wears on any one's nerves. Fortunately, most of the girls are sensible about their hairdressing, and save the extreme modes for the big dance."

Most of the girls really enjoy setting hair, and have learned to do it skilfully by practicing on little sister or roommate.

When they feel they are capable of doing a neat job, the girls decide they ought to receive more than thanks for their artistry; hence, they charge a nominal fee. They usually leave it to the customer as to what she shall pay. However, the prices range from one dime to twenty-five cents.

Some of the girls make all their spending money in this manner. It always comes in handy when you want to go to that extra picture show or when you can't resist a hot fudge sundae. Oftimes the money even goes toward a new pair of hose or a trip home.

As for hair styles quite a few of the girls are still wearing little ringlet curls in back. Some girls also add a cluster of curls in front in the form of bangs. Still others are wearing their hair quite short, semi-shingled in back with flat waves and a few flat curls about the face. Of course, there are always those who stick to long hair and who wouldn't cut their tresses for anything in the world. These girls wear their hair in various ways: some with the conventional bun down on the nape, some with a braid or smooth coronet, and others with an inimitable style of their own.

Hoover has commented on the new treaty in true rugged individualistic style. "I presume it is more of the more abundant life—for Canadians," he said.

He continued his bitter denunciation with, "The Canadian is just another instance of this hasty, economic planning without full consideration of consequences. There has been no opportunity given for public debate, no opportunity for adequate hearing of the groups affected.

"But this much even now is obvious. It means still larger imports of foreign food. It thus means further decreases in the home market of American agriculture."

THE annual conference of American mayors in Washington this week was assured by the president that direct Federal aid to the destitute of the nation will not be discontinued as long as such help is necessary. The present relief program is scheduled to a virtual end by December first of this year; hence the concern of the mayors.

Mayor La Guardia of New York city, newly-elected president of the conference, stated that the organization passed a resolution asking for money enough to "meet a planned and comprehensive program for relief work and direct aid to cover the unemployment situation through the fiscal year 1936-37."

REPORTS from Addis Ababa would indicate the first Ethiopian victory in a clash on the southern front at the cost of hundreds of casualties. Juicy details about the capture of six Italian tanks are interesting. The commander of the Ethiopian forces said, "We do not fear tanks. Once we hear them they are lost." He continued telling the story of how they cut off the six tanks from the Italian infantry, pouring gasoline over the tanks and setting them afire so that the heat forced the occupants to surrender. However, as some wise man has said, Ethiopia is not highly civilized, her people have not yet learned to use all the latest instruments of war, nor do her scientists know of the use of poison gases.

Program Honoring Poet Horace Presented For Students of Classics

A program in honor of the poet Horace was given for the members of the Classical club and Eta Sigma Phi Tuesday night in celebration of the Horatian Bimillenium.

Three talks on Horace were given during the evening. Rebecca Keith discussed "Horace—His Life and Yorks;" Lillian Turlington spoke on "The Sabine Farm;" and Mary Etta Thistlethwaite discussed "The Horatian Odes."

A trio composed of Marian Conn, Lois Bowen, and Valerie Stubbs sang three Latin songs: "O Fons Bandusiae," "Integer Vitae," and "Magnum, Malum, Lupum."

In the presentation of a dramatized version of Horace's ninth satire, "The Bore," the principal parts were played by the recent initiates of Eta Sigma Phi. The characters were Horace, Julia Vanderipe; the bore, Mary Kathryn Gibson; Fuscus, Mary Marshall; Latius, Valerie Stubbs; slaves, Mary Green and Holly Waker.

Thirty-six Attend The First Speech Clinic To Have Defects Analyzed

The Speech Clinic, sponsored by the class in problems in speech made up of seniors in the speech department, opened last Tuesday, November 19. The meeting was held in room 404 Administration building.

Thirty-six students attended the first meeting of the clinic. The fact that Mrs. Anna Steese Richardson, who spoke in convocation Tuesday, mentioned that the students should take advantage of the opportunity the Speech Clinic offered to them, seemed to stimulate the attendance.

Of the number who came to Tuesday's meeting, ten were found to have no actual speech defects, but are troubled with self-consciousness and stage fright.

Some of the problems discovered at the Speech Clinic were lisping, foreign dialect, extreme high pitch, hoarseness, nasality, and other speech defects.

Next Tuesday, those who attended the clinic will meet again to have their speech analyzed. A few of the major cases will be given outside help by members of the class in Speech 401.

Cherries Are Revealers of Human Nature

Reporter Finds Lunchtime Study Profitable And Musing

Whatever could bring that thoughtful expression to the faces of hundreds of girls in the dining room other than cherries for dessert?

Now cherries are very delicious, but with the public serving of this fruit, a problem presents itself. The seed—and it is indeed amusing to observe various expressions during mastication of the fruit and discarding of the seed.

One girl chews thoughtfully, then just as thoughtfully and very, very carefully, removes the sed with the aid of a spoon, and deposits said seed on a salad plate.

Another girl chews the cherry rather haltingly, casting sly glances at her neighbors, then furtively removes the seed, placing it as inconspicuously as possible in a paper cup or under a neglected lettuce leaf.

And oh, how embarrassing when a dainty damsel opens a rosy mouth to utter a witticism, and instead, out pops a cherry seed!

The expressions on some faces remind one of a peaceful, contended cow, staring dreamily into space, while she chews her cud.

It isn't at all uncommon to see an expression of dismay suddenly appear to mar the tranquility of a lovely countenance. This expression is usually caused by the swallowing of the seed.

What this college seems to need is an edible cherry seed or at least some one who can devise a means of disposing—gracefully—of them.

Further Arrangements In Dining Hall to Be Made for Thanksgiving

Breakfast will be served at 7:30 only, on Thanksgiving day, according to Miss Anna Tracy, dietitian.

Further announcements concerning the dining room regulations for Homecoming week-end include a request that all reserved table lists be filed at the dining room desk immediately, and an announcement to the effect that anyone having visitors over Thanksgiving week-end and desiring tickets for Thursday dinner, may register on the waiting list at the alumnae office, in order that accommodations may be made if extra places become available.

Peace Programs Are Discussed

International Relations Club Hears Young

Miss Sadie Young, professor of economics, gave a talk on "World Economic Factors and Peace Programs" at a meeting of the International Relations club Monday night.

Stressing the fact that the economic factors are only a part of the difficulties which make peace programs necessary, Miss Young said that before the world war the nations had been working on the principle of internationalism, of free trade, laissez faire.—the profit system. After the confusion of the world war and the apparent failure of this system, the program became one of national self-sufficiency.

Economic interdependence had been developed too greatly, and there came about the system whereby concerted effort was to unify the power and to make peace possible this way. This is the system in practice now.

According to Miss Young, to rise above that class of people who merely wish to find a way out of the chaos to peace, to enter the class of people who are analyzing the causes that make way with peace is to thoroughly know the community in which you live, to understand its problems and to be able to analyze the causes of these problems.

Doris Isted will lead a discussion on Russia at the next meeting of the international relations club to be held on December 2.

S. P. Sashoff, professor of electrical engineering at the University of Florida, will talk on "Europe—1935" at a meeting on December 9.

Head Life and Figure Sketching is Feature Of Student Exhibition

Advanced head life and figure sketching will be exhibited this Friday afternoon in the Art browsing room in 307 administration building, according to Mrs. Beatrice Beyer Williams, professor of art.

Students whose work will be exhibited include Martha Makemson, Mary McGunagle, Eloise Moeller, Margaret Reedy, Ruth Sadler, Betty Evans, and Grace Whitaker.

The next exhibition to be held the Friday of Homecoming will be a composite exhibition of the work of the various art classes.

The first quarter work of the composition class under Miss Amy Ferris Briggs associate professor of art, was exhibited last week. This exhibit included contour drawings of flowers, compositions based on the rectangle, and on the diagonal, and a number of compositions based on symmetrical balance.

Students whose work was exhibited included Lois Forester, Rosetta Whildon, Polly Flint, Anna Coomes, Doris McCollough, Caroline Adams, Ortrude Parks, Louise Lingo and Doris Risk.

Writer Thinks Waitresses Are Unusually Interesting People

Patrons May Be Divided Into Three Classes By Their Habits

Did you ever stop to think that beneath that impassive exterior of the waitress lies a mind that holds as many emotions as the most sensitive artist possesses? Few people realise that behind the superficial smile that waitresses wear to greet the great public there is one of the most analytical minds possessed by people of any profession. As soon as she places a glass of water and a menu before you, she has you summed up as belonging to one of three types of customers.

According to the waitress you are either a finicky person, a table leaner, or one who doesn't give a "hang." The first type is the most abhorred by her, for there is nothing she can do to please them. Her earnest endeavors to give the best service in the shortest time is never appreciated. The salad always has the wrong kind of dressing, and the iced tea has either too much or too little ice.

In a few minutes they curl their index fingers in a come-hither way and ask for a sauce to go on their meat. This always happens when the waitress is in the middle of an order for another finicky person. When the dessert comes they are ready to forgive the poor service and include the waitress on the cute little sallies they are telling, but it is hard for the waitress to laugh at the jokes of the man who makes her take about four or five extra trips to the kitchen to humor their whims.

The people who usually come under this type are the small business men with high aspirations but no initiative who must show their superiority to the person who is unwillingly forced to be their inferior for the time being. The majority of them are women, who feel it their bounden duty to carry their household dominance wherever they go. The women are hard to serve, but deliver the waitress from a finicky man.

The table-leaners always bring a newspaper or a magazine along with them, in order to spend a quiet hour of reading and eating. They are never critical of food because they are too engrossed in a gruesome murder case or a cheap love story to bother about the art of eating. It is a slow process to serve them because they never want to move those lolling arms that are placed exactly where the food must go. There is always the necessity of having to look out for that arm which generally moves just about the time the waitress is serving the soup. To this type belongs the unattractive man or woman who tries to appear nonchalant sitting alone. They generally carry their independence to the extreme though because of their utter indifference as to what is going on around them.

The third type, those who don't give a "hang," is the main joy of the waitress. Immediately upon serving them she relaxes from her defense mechanism and becomes her true self. She takes delight in plopping the water down in front of them, and she never worries about spilling hot coffee for she is too much at ease for such a disaster to happen. In fact, this easy-going type of person is taken advantage of by the waitress who is liable to give them poor service. They don't care if the water is placed on the left side or the salad on the right.

Those who belong to this class are the ones who have stopped long enough to think about the waitress as being human. They have an abundance of the milk of human kindness and have been used to "eating out" for many years. Men who belong to this class are usually executives or hold responsible positions in business concerns. The women are those who do not spend their lives keeping their homes immaculate and trying to get the most out of every person they can.

With all the hardships and worries that are attached to being a waitress it is an interesting occupation. When a waitress is off duty and goes to another restaurant or cafe to eat she hardly takes her eyes off the girl who is serving her. All the time she is watching the actions of the other waitress so carefully and is planning how she can improve her style by the other girl's method of serving. She admires a member of her profession who can carry three glasses of water in one hand for this is a feat that will rank her as a "number one" worker.

Burks Speaks At Convention

Faculty Members Attend Annual Association Meet in Georgia

Three members of the faculty of Florida State college will attend the eighth annual meeting of the South Atlantic Modern Language association at the University of Georgia, Athens, November 29-30.

Dr. Margie Burks, assistant professor of Spanish, and Mrs. Dorothy Breen, assistant professor of Spanish and French will represent the college's department of modern languages and Miss Mildred Henry, assistant professor of English, will attend from the English department.

Dr. Burks will appear on the program of the department section meeting Friday, November 29. She will speak in the Spanish section on "Collateral Reading Reports."

The general session will be held Friday afternoon, to be followed that night by a banquet. Saturday morning there will be more departmental section meetings and later that morning there will be a general business session during which there will be election of officers.

Among the colleges which will be represented are Emory university, University of North Carolina, University of Alabama, Brenau college, University of Florida, Duke university, University of Virginia, Georgia State College for Women, Georgia Military college, Davidson college, Wesleyan college, Georgia Institute of Technology, University of South Carolina, Birmingham-Southern college, Winthrop college.

Florida State to Have Exhibit at Leon Fair

An eight by ten foot tent on the grounds of the Leon county fair is to be given over to an exhibit representing Florida State college. The fair, which will be sponsored by the local unit of the American Legion, is to be held November 27-30.

The exhibit, according to Mrs. Laura Strunk Leslie, college publicity director, will be a poster display arranged on a small platform draped in garnet and gold.

The posters will show photographs of college officers and pictures of campus scenes and will give information about departments of the college, degrees offered, the library, the standing of the school in relation to various educational associations, the sororities, and the scholastic honoraries represented on campus.

Odd-Even Games Are Climax Of Week-End

Evens Are Victorious In Both Major Events For First Time

RAIN FUTILE IN DOWNING SPIRITS

Swimmers Show Colorful Pageant of Form And Novelty Strokes

Included in the usual round of Thanksgiving festivities were the annual Odd-Even basketball and volleyball games on Thursday morning. The rain, which made it necessary to hold the games in the gymnasium did not deter many students and visitors from gathering to cheer the teams. In basketball the Evens took an early lead, keeping it through the game, and finally winning from the Odds, 28-21.

The Even team was rolled on the court in a truck preceded by an Odd devil and the cheer leaders who rang bells as they ran in, to the familiar "Bells of Hell".

Even Line-Up

The Even line-up included, forwards: Mel Emmelhainz, captain, Elizabeth Penn and Frances Thill; guards, Jane Tombaugh, Hilda Spradlin, and Felicia West. Even substitutes were Mackery and Athon.

The Odd team was brought on the court in wheelbarrows. The special cheering section and other enthusiasts were dressed as hicks, in overalls and ginghams. The cheer leaders accompanied the team and led songs as the team entered

The Odd lineup included, forwards Sarah Lytle, Fay Corey and Dot Kamiya; guards, Hazel Viertel, Dora Butler, and Mary Miller, captain. Odd substitutes were Sasseeth and Simpson.

The officials were, referee, Miss Autrey, umpire, Miss Settle; timekeepers, Marion Weeks and Ceil Levy. Odd cheer leaders were: Dimples Turner, June Maule, and Mary Jean Johnston. Even cheer leaders were: Mary Bruce Patterson, Audrey Farmer, Anne Mizell, and Nan O'Shaughnessy.

Evens Win Volleyball

The Evens again made a good start in the volleyball. They took the lead with the first point and kept it, finishing the first half with a score of 11 to the Odd's 6.

In the second half the Odds warmed up and the remainder of the game was a struggle, with the Evens fighting hard to keep their lead. They succeeded, and the half ended with a one-point lead spelling victory for the Evens. This is the first time in the his- of the Homecoming games

Leonardy Talks to AAUW Group

WPA Projects Developed To Give Employment To Educators

As guest speaker before the AAUW forum at Ruge hall Friday night Mrs. Herbert Leonardy, associate director of educational projects of the WPA outlined the work her department is doing to employ people on relief rolls capable of teaching, irrespective of formal education.

Projects are developed to suit the needs and capabilities of these unemployed teachers. Although the primary object of the educational department is to develop employment for the teachers to effect this object the secondary feature has been inaugurated, she says. Opportunities are given to partially educated men and women who need a new lease on life by these projects which use the services of the unemployed teachers.

Practicality is invariably an important feature of the subjects taught in all of the projects. A necessary requirement of subjects taught is that they must add to the students' usefulness and chances for gaining employment. The projects have as an additional aim the teaching of any subject which will add to the laborer's enjoyment of living and use of leisure time. Classes in citizenship, public affairs, health education, arts and crafts are part of the program.

Camps for girls who are not prepared to obtain employment have been established as an important project. Two white camps at Lake Byrd and Crystal Beach and one camp for colored girls at Daytona Beach are providing employment for a number of teachers and at the same time offering new hope to girls between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five who are members of families on relief rolls. Every two months a different group of 150 girls are placed in these camps, and prepared for gainful employment. At the end of the period they are aided in finding positions suited to their training.

As many unemployed teachers as possible are employed in the nursery school projects. The underprivileged pre-school child is given opportunities to develop physically and mentally in these schools which the WPA has established in the state.

"To take people with limited educational advantages and train them to do one thing thoroughly" is the aim of the vocational training project under Mrs. Leonardy's supervision. Negro women are trained to be efficient maids, cooks, and nurses while the men are taught the rudiments of mechanics and other things necessary to efficient chauffeuring.

The Emergency Parent Education project employs teachers efficient in the teaching of care and guidance of children. This project attempts to lessen the gap between parents and children resulting from education and change in the family. Improvements in home and family conditions are suggested to the inadequately educated parents.

Mrs. Leonardy stated that in addition to "giving a job to somebody that is without one" the WPA also offers opportunities for higher standards of living in the community. The projects which are of value to the community receiving government aid, she added will probably be continued when the supervision of the government is removed.

Open Air Ovens Will Be Ready After Christmas

Construction work on two open air ovens to be used by the students for roasting marshmallows and apples or broiling steaks will begin immediately, according to Mr. Mendenhall, the college engineer.

These ovens, one near the northwest corner of the arboretum, the other at the west end corner of the college pastures, will be completed by the end of the Christmas holidays. The college recreation fund will furnish the money for the work.

Alumnae Feted Remaining Days Of Homecoming

Institute Held to Show Ways Graduates May Serve College

SUPPER GIVEN AT CAMP FOR GUESTS

Gym Dance Is Climatic Event of Gala Four Day Celebration

Thanksgiving festivities over and Odd and Even supremacy settled for the present, the remainder of the ninth annual Homecoming today and tomorrow will be devoted to entertainment especially in honor of alumnae of Florida State college.

These last two days will round up the work of more than 200 faculty, student and alumnae leaders serving on sub-committees of the official Homecoming committee of which Miss Mary Settle, of the physical education faculty, is chairman. This year's Homecoming has been acclaimed as one of the largest in the history of the school and as having the best developed program.

Campus Tour

This morning from 9:30 to 11.30 o'clock a tour of the campus points of interest, arranged by Kitty Blood, president of the student body, was conducted for parents. This tour included inspection of the general display upstairs in Bryan, the library, with Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, conducting the guests through the building: home demonstration offices, through the botany department where there is a display paintings done by former students of F. S. C. W., post office, book store, auditorium, bank, registrar's office, practice house, Demonstration school, gymnasium and dining room.

At the same time an alumnae institute, the second annual meeting of this sort, was held in Broward lounge, with Mrs. Edward L. Beeson, president of the State Alumnae association, presiding. The institute was planned in order to show alumnae how to be of service to the college and in an effort to create a better understanding between the college and its alumnae.

The theme, "What the Alumnae Can Do For the College," was divided into five parts, as follows: "Making the Work of the Institution Effective in the State;" "Some Ways for the Alumnae to Vitalize the Work of the College," "Organization of the Alumnae Association," "Greetings from Other Alumnae Associations" and "Alumnae Awards." Speakers include Mrs. Laura Strunk Leslie, executive secretary of the Alumnae association; Miss Rachel Pitchford, assistant publicity sec-

Anniversary Of Bible Observed

Dr. Christie Will Speak In Convocation

A special program commemorating the four-hundredth anniversary of the printed English Bible will be given Tuesday morning at convocation under the auspices of the college religious workers' council. Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the First Baptist church, will give the address.

The program will open with the singing of an old hymn, "The Bible," from Daye's Psalter published in 1562. After an invocation by Rev. Gerald Culberson, pastor of the Christian church, the college glee club and chorus, under the direction of Miss Etta Robertson, will sing "The Christ Child's Birthday" by Capocci-Glasson.

A scripture reading will be given by Rev. J. H. Daniel, pastor of Trinity Methodist church. Following Dr. Christie's address, Miss Margaret Whitney Dow will play two organ selections, "Holy Night" by Weiss and "A Rose Breaks into Bloom" by Brahms. Rev. Jeffry Alfriend, rector of St John's Episcopal church, will ask the benediction.

Similar programs in honor of the printing of the English Bible are being given all over the country during the period from October 4 to December 8, according to Dr Arthur Williams, professor of religious education

Entrance to College

Florida State welcomes parents, guests, and over 300 alumnae this week to its four-day program of Homecoming activities.

Play Day Held At YW Project

Thanksgiving is Observed At Recreation Center By 150 Children

The recreation center, which is being sponsored by Y. W. C. A. and by the Exchange club of this city, observed its first Thanksgiving day program Wednesday afternoon from 3:30 to 5:30 o'clock when approximately 150 children from Tallahassee were present at recreation park.

The activities of the day included relay and individual races, stories for the younger children, and football games for which prizes were given. Candy sticks were also presented to the children as favors of the afternoon.

Announcements of this "play day" program were made in the "Daily Democrat," in the Caroline Brevard and Sealey Memorial schools, and in the Sunday school departments of the various churches in order that all the children of Tallahassee would receive an invitation to attend Thanksgiving day at the recreation center.

Girls from the college who assisted on this occasion were Rachel Seay, Ruth Barker, Beverly Brown, Helen Cate, and Betty

Campus Life Is Set to "Music"

Time: any afternoon.

Place: within hearing distance of the music studios in the Administration building.

Action: varied and vigorous, judging from the sounds issuing from within where music is in the making.

A would-be soprano vainly tries to capture high C. A flute player strives valiantly for tonal quality. A clarinet squeaks intermittently. A piano is pounded doggedly. Another is skillfully fingered. A series of minor scales are heard on a violin, followed by a sudden blast of a trumpet.

For a minute all is quiet. Then harmonious strains of melody flow through the air. One wonders at the power of the orchestra conductor, who can achieve such coordination of sounds.

Conradi Attends Meeting

President Edward Conradi is leaving Sunday for Louisville, Kentucky, where he will attend a meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools on December 2-6. He will be accompanied on the trip by his daughter, Miss Louise Conradi.

Dr. Conradi will also travel to Tampa next week for a meeting of the state board of control. The board is to meet there on December 7.

Organist Shows Traditional Graciousness of Southerner

Miss Lockwood Duly Impressed With Tallahassee's Freezing Weather vs. Florida's Palms On Her First Visit Here

By BILLIE HOTARD
and
JEWEL TURNER

A dim light fell across the stage of the auditorium revealing, seated at the organ, a lone figure with fingers idly wandering up and down the keys, bowed head looking at the sheet of music in her lap, soft grey fur about her face, completely absorbed in the work before her—Charlotte Lockwood, noted American organist

She smiled as she raised her head, revealing two dimples, and said in a husky voice, "Yes, I'm Charlotte Lockwood. I suppose you mistook me for a student. Perhaps I even play like one." This in answer to the question asked concerning the whereabouts of the famous organist.

This was Miss Lockwood's first visit to Florida since she has never been any farther south than the state of North Carolina. When asked about her impression of Tallahassee, she drew her grey fur around her a bit and replied, "The palm trees and poinsettias fascinate me. I've never seen them growing before. But I nearly froze to death last night. It was as cold as snakes." Apparently Florida had not impressed her as being very tropical.

Once or twice a year Miss Lockwood returns to the South to renew acquaintances and make social contacts, and despite her extensive traveling in the United States and abroad, she still feels herself to be a southerner. "Although I've lost my southern accent," she added with a smile on her lips and a merry twinkle in her eyes.

At present she holds four positions, two in New Jersey and two in New York the latter city being her residence. She expressed the opinion that the jobs are too many and she finds it rather difficult to manage both them and her recitals.

"I am only able to obtain two leaves a year, and these merely two weeks each. This tour has been very short." Her tour has been short in terms of time spent, probably, but the same word is hardly applicable for the mileage covered. She has toured from Canada to Florida and as far west as St. Louis, her recital here being the eighth of nine planned for this tour.

"During these tours about all an organist does is sit on an organ bench," Miss Lockwood said, squirming a bit in her chair. "As fast as I arrive in a town, it's necessary to begin practice for the night recital, since all organs have a different touch."

Although she has given recitals here and abroad, she prefers America, for she finds the American audiences more suited to the American entertainers than are the foreign audiences.

In planning her program for the college Miss Lockwood decided on a general one not too heavy, since she believes that preferences and specialization in the field of music narrows one too much. "I would hate to be a 'box organist.' I don't like just a smattering of things. I like to get at the bottom. One reason why I have no preferences in musicians or types of music," she added, "is that I have been far too busy studying the various schools." This fact accounts for her choice of selections played last Saturday night which included a sample of German, Flemish, English, Russian, American, Belgian, and French.

Numerous Festivities Honor Three Hundred Alumnae

Sigma Kappa Win With Ship

Honorable Mention Goes To Alpha Delta Pi And Tri Delt

The Sigma Kappa sorority has again won first prize of five dollars in the contest sponsored by the Alumnae association for the best-decorated off-campus house. This sorority was given first place in last year's contest also. Those receiving honorable mention this year were Alpha Delta Pi and Delta Delta Delta.

The exterior of the Sigma Kappa house was converted into a brown and white ship, christened "The F. S. C. W. Mayflower." Its passengers were the Odds and Evens, each being represented by its individual colors. On the left the Evens were anchored with green and gold streamers and an anchor inscription reading "Hold 'Em Evens." On the right a similar idea was expressed, the Odd colors of red, white and purple, taking the place of the green and gold.

From the mast flew a garnet and gold flag, while the sails were composed of smaller sails of green, red and gold, on which the sorority's welcome to the alumnae was written. Two bright spotlights, placed on either side of the sidewalk leading to the house, illuminated the ship at night.

The Alpha Delta Pi house had garnet and gold streamers flowing from the roof to the ground in a V formation. In the center a large pumpkin was growing with "Welcome Alumnae" written across it. On its top was a little man holding a F. S. C. W. sign high above his head. The color scheme of the Odds and Evens was carried out.

The Delta Delta Delta house took one back to the days of early history in the time of Priscilla. Six turkeys were wandering about in the left yard with images of Pilgrims with guns in their arms hunting them. On the right Priscilla was standing among tall corn stalks and pumpkins. The columns of the house were decorated with the colors of the Odds and Evens, and from the roof, garnet and gold ribbons were extended.

The judges of the contest were Colonel Guyte P. McCord, chairman; Mrs. George Gwynn, and Mr. W. L. Marshall, all of Tallahassee.

Sikes Chaperones Florida 4-H Girls

Fourteenth National Meet Opens in Chicago

Five Florida girls who excelled in state contests held during the annual 4-H club short course last June at Florida State college are leaving today for Chicago to compete at the fourteenth national 4-H congress. They are being chaperoned by Miss Anna Mae Sikes, acting east Florida district agent of the state home demonstration department with headquarters at this college and will compete with approximately 2,000 boys and girls from every state in the union.

These girls who were selected from more than 8,000 4-H club girls in Florida for outstanding work in the respective fields and the contests in which they will enter are: Frances Palmer, Havana, canning. Edna Sims, DeFuniak Springs, bread judging; Rebecca Partin, Boynton, food preparation and health; Margaret Dunford, Brewster, style revue, and Lorena Wetherbee, Taft, leadership.

Among the requirements of 4-H girls who seek entry in national contests are that the aspirant be at least sixteen years old and not more than twenty and that she serve as an active member of a 4-H club under the direction of a home demonstration agent for three full years during which she does productive work.

The 4-H club party from Florida will visit the International Live Stock exposition to be held at the Union stockyards at Chicago and will be taken on a fifty-mile sightseeing tour. Miss Sikes also will attend the seventeenth national convention of 4-H club representatives

Dorman to Address Students On Horace

Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, professor of classics and dean of students, will speak informally Monday night at 7:30 in the Browsing room of the library on the Latin poet, Horace. This is one of the programs commemorating the bimillenium of the birth of Horace which is being sponsored by the classics students of the campus.

The general public, especially the student-body and the faculty of the college, has been invited to attend.

Davis Speaks At Vespers On Thanksgiving

Speaker Points Out That Day Has Threefold Meaning

"To some Thanksgiving is to be celebrated as a mere holiday, to others it is a period of opportunity to take advantage of, and to others it is a period of fond reflection when we may experience the spiritual efforts of our forefathers and build the lives of the future," were the words of the Honorable Fred Davis, judge of the Supreme Court of Florida, the speaker of the Thanksgiving Y. W. C. A. Vespers service held in the Augusta Conradi theatre, Thanksgiving morning.

The origin of Thanksgiving and its continuance as an annual festival was probably based on three things, the past, present, and the future. Our descendants when they first celebrated this great festival celebrated on the basis of the past, the situation of the present lives they were to lead and the wonderful possibilities of the future. Do we think of these things as we celebrate Thanksgiving in this day of material things or do we just forget the past and anticipate the future? Do we have the dollar mark as the National God or do we worship our Father above as our forefathers did?

In closing Judge Davis said, "I invite your contemplation of the future young people, you have real opportunity, and always remember life is like a bank account, you can't get more out than you put in."

The Thanksgiving service began with the singing by the College Glee club of "Let Every Tongue Adore Thee," directed by Miss Etta Lucile Robertson. Lucy Gee Linn, president of Y. W. C. A., gave the Scripture reading and Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews led in prayer. Dr. Edward Conradi, president of the college, then introduced the speaker of the morning. The service was closed with a selection by the Instrumental Trio, Mr. Owen F. Sellers, cello; Miss Augusta Murphy, violin, and Miss Mary Esther Winslow at the piano, in a selection, "Allegretto Moderato."

Bank Deposits for This Year Show Increase Of Over Fifteen Per Cent

Deposits in the college bank for the year of 1935 have increased 15 per cent over those for 1934.

The depositing of more money by students this year seems to indicate that prosperity has turned the corner.

There are approximately 1000 deposits in the school bank, the depositors being composed of the students and the employees of the college

The Florida State bank is a convenience for the students, according to Mr. J. G. Kellum, business manager. It does not lend money or pay interest. With this safety spot any student may feel no qualms in receiving her allowance monthly or by the semester, or she can place it in the bank and draw it out at convenient intervals. There is no charge for opening an account, and no set limit as to the amount that can be deposited.

College checks issued by the bank are honored at the stores in Tallahassee. Therefore no student is forced to carry large sums of money about with her.

Over Traditional Class Factions Garnet And Gold is Supreme

OPEN HOUSES AT SORORITIES, HALLS

Even Spirits, Odd Lantern Parade Shatter Post Lightflash Quiet

Approximately 300 alumnae have returned to Florida State college for the ninth annual Homecoming celebration which opened Tuesday night and will come to a close with the dance in the gymnasium Saturday evening

Odd-Even rivalry has raged in the traditional contests—the demonstrations, color rush and volleyball and basketball games, while the garnet and gold spirit has held full sway in the other features of Homecoming—the Thanksgiving service, the "Meet Our Alumnae," swimming demonstration, Thanksgiving dinner and the many social affairs in the dormitories and sorority houses.

Evens Victorious

Fulfilling the prophecy of "lady luck" in their demonstration, the Evens made a clean sweep in the athletic contests Thursday morning, defeating the Odds 16 to 13 in the volleyball games and 28 to 21 in the basketball.

Five out of the eight college buildings carried the Even green and gold after the color rush early Wednesday morning. The Even runners, Betty Ostlund, Jana Tombaugh, Ruby Nell Johnson, Viola Brooks, Helen Daniels, Felicia West and Marie Busselle, pinned their colors on the dining room, Bryan hall, History building, Science building and gymnasium, while the Odd runners, Mary Lou O'Haver, Bunny Lowery, Fay Corey, Carolyn Boyd, Betty White, Harriet Duke, Louise Bowery and Myrna Frink, placed their red, white and purple on the Administration building, library and Education building. Odd and Even colors and the school colors were in evidence on Bryan, the front gate and as part of the decorations of the off-campus and sorority houses.

The celebration began Tuesday night with the presentation of the Odd demonstration, followed by the Even Night Out, while the Even demonstration came Wednesday, followed in turn by the Odd Night Out.

Gleason Attends Washington Meet

Demonstration Agent Speaks on Work

Miss Flavia Gleason, state home demonstration agent, returned last Sunday from a two-weeks' trip to Washington D. C., where she attended a number of meetings concerning the development of agricultural extension work

At the meetings of the southern agricultural workers November 15-16 in Washington Miss Gleason took an active part in discussions on the various phases of extension work.

Miss Gleason gave a talk on "Improving and Expanding 4-H Club Work" at a meeting of the Land Grant College association a few days later.

The third meeting she attended was that of the state home demonstration agents November 21, the purpose of which was to make plans for the future development of home demonstrat work

Of special interest to Miss Gleason was the meeting of Epsilon Sigma Phi, fraternity of extension workers who have been in service at least ten years. At that time she explained, E h Barrus, home demonstration agent of Palm Beach county, Florida one of thirteen workers to receive special recognition for her work as a home demonstration agent.

Before returning to Tallahassee Miss Gleason stopped in Lake City to attend the meeting of the county home demonstration council.

Miss Novaes is Interviewed As She Lunches in Tearoom

From Vantage Point of Three Torches Table, Visitor Comments on American College Life, Entrancing Her Listeners

By ELEANOR JENKINS

Amid the din of clinking silver, scraping chairs and the laughing noisy chatter of the noon hour in a crowded tea-room, there came a lull.

"There she is!"

The noise subsided, heads turned, necks craned, all action was suspended, every eye turned toward the door. There standing hesitatingly on the threshold was Guiomar Novaes, accompanied by her husband, Senor Pinto and Dean Ella Scoble Opperman.

After being directed to her table and assuming the role of any ordinary person ordering a meal, the noise and chatter gradually arose to its former heights. Petty gossip and business talk, however, were laid aside for the moment and there could be heard passing between the tables—

"Wouldn't have missed her concert for anything" "—from Brasil." "Isn't she young looking" —"Most wonderful pianist I have ever heard."

Having met Senora Novaes after her concert the night before, I hurried forward to wait on the much discussed trio. There was little chance for conversation but she recognized me and a few desultory remarks were passed.

In the evening, Senora Novaes and her husband returned. After I had taken their order, she very graciously invited me to be seated. "Do you know what we did?" she asked eagerly. "We went to Wakulla spring! It is very wonderful. Once when we were in California, we heard that there was such a place in your country and now I am thrilled to see it." Her eyes full of wonder, the senora commented on the skill of the one who "could make the fish come to him."

The conversation continued. Impossible of reproduction is the charm of Senora Novaes' delightfully accented English and her quaint arrangement of words. She was particularly interested in what connection the girls working in the tea-room had with the university, not aware that American college girls could help pay their way through school.

"Ay, I see now." she exclaimed, after much explaining. "It is very good. In Brazil, we do not give our girls such a chance for their education"

In commenting on the program of the night before, she said, "It was heavy for a student group, and I think the girls were very attentive and very good not to make any noise."

As I arose to leave, "When I have finished you will please come back," Senora Novaes requested. Returning later I stood beside the table while she conversed quickly with her husband in Portuguese. He then took out of a folio a large picture of his wife seated at the piano and handed it to her Senora Navaes signed it and presented it to me. Speechless, I could hardly stammer my thanks.

"When you come to New York you must look us up at our apartment. I shall expect to see you next year if we return on another tour."

The tea-room was quiet as she arose to leave. All eyes followed her to the door And not until after her departure did the chatter gradually resume its former heights.

The senora leaves behind her a lasting impression in the memory of her interviewers who will not soon forget her graciousness.

that the Evens have won both volleyball and basketball games.

The Even volleyball lineup was: Louise Gehan, Marjorie Horton, Betty Meyer, Betty Ostlund, Janet Griffetts, Doris McKenzie, captain, Frances Lewis and Catherine Pratt. Substitutes were Marjorie Raulerson and Audrey Cooper.

The Odd lineup: Martha Makemson, Margaret Maxwell, Janice Borton, Mildred Seekins, Valeria Hunt, Sophie Beavenick, Dot Rickards, and Beth Daane, captain. Substitutes were Shirley Stevens, Edythe Stanley, Marie Taylor, and Dorothy Molnar Officials were: referee, Miss Fox; umpire, Miss Katherine Montgomery; timekeepers, Aiken for the Even and Lovell for the Odds. Linesman, Nusum and Walker for the Evens: Hoenshel and Moeller for the Odds.

Water Pageant Held

The water pageant, entitled "The Court of Flastacowo," was given in the pool after the games. It was designed to honor the alumnae and the visitors.

The queen was ushered in followed by her attendants and the swimmers promptly appeared to try to win her favor by their performances.

The first event was the exhibition of form strokes featuring girls in groups of four in red, green, purple and blue bathing suits. They swam to music, giving exhibitions of the crawl, sidestroke and backstroke.

The next event was a group of novelties, including an apple race, a contest of unhorsing, tandem swimming, and a night gown race. The apple race was soon over, the contestants reaching the other side of the pool before biting the apple. The unhorsing contest was also short, two "horses" falling quickly into the water, and the other easily pushing off her opponent. The tandem swimming was done to music. The nightgown race was accompanied by loud laughter from the audience as the participants dived gracefully in surrounded by much billowing flannel nightgown.

Diving came next, with exhibitions of the jack knife, swan, back, and other dives

The pageant closed with a spectaculer finale featuring a medley of dives and strokes.

Those in charge of the pageant were: Marion Weeks, general chairman, Jane Tombaugh and Betty Ostlund, director of events: music, Polly Eveleth: house, Marion Lessey: programs, Faye Peterson: and, properties and costumes Shirley Stevens and Jane Tharin.

atmosphere of burglary and murder in their presentation, "An Odd Murder Mystery," written and directed by Mary Jeanne McKay. Clair Smythe, an Odd of Florida State, home for a vacation before the Thanksgiving games, finds herself suddenly up against love, theft and finally manslaughter. She meets and falls in love with Lord Judson Valentine, an English nobleman, is robbed of her heirloom necklace, an Odd good luck piece, and is greatly frightened by the murder of a gypsy in the Smythe home

The necklace, a lucky piece and supposedly a good symbol for the Odds, is found after much sleuthing by three noble detectives, Smilo Pants, the suave Englishman, Palvin Murvis, the drawling Southerner, and Wun Tu Menee, the Chinese Sherlock Holmes. Judson Valentine whom Claire has accused of taking it finds it on the hem of her dress as he shakes her for thinking him a thief. The Odd luck is saved and Judson and Clair find love.

Clever comedy dances arranged by Jo Binion who also did several solo numbers enliven the humorous scenes, while the mysterious atmosphere is heightened by ghosts dancing in purple flowing gowns. Tuneful songs added color to the performance, as Valentine and Clair sang "Tea for Two" and the demonstration play was brought to a close by "You Are My Lucky Star."

Teams Introduced

The basketball and volleyball teams were introduced between the second and third acts, the members dressed in their red and white suits coming to the stage. Odd cheers and songs were directed between acts by the cheer leaders, dressed in their dark slacks, white satin blouses and red, white and purple sashes, carrying out the Odd colors. The Augusta Conradi orchestra, under the direction of O. F Sellers, furnished an instrumental background for the musical part of the demonstration.

Presenting a "Mid Autumn Night's Scheme," written by Marjorie Harris and Althea Smith, the Evens combined a significant theme with a fantastic and intriguing setting of doll land on the eve of Thanksgiving.

Opening in the room of two college girls, one Odd and one Even, the first scene presented the college girl's views and aspirations for Thanksgiving day. The all-important decisions of the victory of the morrow is finally left to "lady luck," in the form of a doll, and the girls finally go to sleep.

Doll's Eye-View

With gigantic furniture, weird scenic affects, the next scene opens to disclose the doll's view of the situation. "Lady Luck" holds court in order to make the all-important decision. Through a series of cleverly arranged dances and cryptic remarks from a jack-in-the-box, representatives are brought before the throne of Lady Luck. Seniors are represented by Dutch dolls, juniors by soldier dolls, sophomores by Ragged Anns and Raggedy Andys and the freshmen by a petite kewpie doll and a chorus of grotesque followers. The dances were arranged by Sara Knight, Mary Carson, Viola Brooks and Caroline Oliver. The significance of the affair is brought to a climax when the representatives of Odds and Evens themselves present their idea of the spirit of Thanksgiving.

First "four weary horses" stumble in to furnish the Evens' comic interpretation of the Odds spirit. The peak of the performance is then reached when the Even volleyball and basketball teams are presented as the Evens' idea of the spirit of Thanksgiving.

Between the acts two piano selections were given, as well as readings, songs and a humorous announcement by Sara Krentsman.

Even Night Out

To the mournful lament of their traditional dirge, the sheeted figures of the "Even spirits" wound their way Tuesday night to a huge bonfire where re-eching songs and pep talks by the Evens —Dr. Richards, Miss Louise Richardson and Miss Katherine Montgomery—filled the surrounding atmosphere with promise that "those bones would rise again."

With colorful lanterns swaying, the Odds formed in front of the dormitories Wednesday night for their traditional lantern parade and snake dance. The picturesque spectacle was viewed by a large group of visitors and townspeople.

Thanksgiving began with a special service in the Augusta Conradi theater, with Lucy Gee Linn, president of the Y. W. C. A., in charge of the program. Dr. Edward Conradi introduced the speaker, Judge Fred Davis, of the Supreme Court of Florida.

Climatic Games

Following the service the volleyball and basketball games were held in the gymnasium instead of on the athletic fields since rains prevented the teams from playing out-of-doors. Immediately following the games the "Meet Our Alumnae" was held in the gymnasium, many alumnae being introduced to the college.

From 12 45 to 1 o'clock the Life Saving corps presented a swimming demonstration in the pool.

About 1,700 people gathered in the dining room at 2 o'clock for Thanksgiving dinner which included turkey and all the traditional trimmings. A special program was presented during the dinner. The blessing was sung by Jo Binion, Marian Conn, Marian Carson, Maxine Ward, Margaret Endsley and Pearle Shepard, accompanied by Elinor Daniells. With Caroline Oliver as toast mistress, a number of toasts were given, including "The Victors and the Victims," Rose Panowski; "The Odds," Mel Emmelhains; "The Evens," Mary Miller: "Garnet and Gold," Katherine Blood; "The Alumnae," Margaret Graham; "Dr. Conradi," Lucy Gee Linn. Dr. Conradi spoke briefly and the orchestra played a selection.

After Dinner Coffee

Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of students, with the directors of residence halls, entertained with after-dinner coffee for parents and alumnae in Gilchrist hall parlors. From 4:30 to 6 o'clock girls of the home management house entertained with an at-home. In the evening dancing was enjoyed in Jennie Murphree and a program was presented in Reynolds hall for parents and alumnae, while the sorority houses entertained with open house during the afternoon and evening.

Committee chairmen in charge of the Homecoming celebration include Miss Mary Brandon Settle, general chairman; Miss Rowena Longmire, representing the faculty committee on cooperation with alumnae; Mrs. Laura Strunk Leslie, publicity; Miss Florence Reno Tryon, representing the alumnae in Tallahassee locality; Dorothy Leach, representing Mortar Board; Katherine Blood, representing student - presidents' council.

Local Librarians Attend Meeting

Richardson and Matthews Represent College

Miss Louise Richardson, librarian and professor of library science, and Miss Etta Matthews, assistant professor of library science, returned last week from Atlanta where they attended a confernce on the "Training of School Librarians of the Southern States."

Delegates attending the conference were the state school superintendents, high school supervisors, representatives of library training agencies, the Board of Education for Librarianship of the American Library association, and the committee on libraries of the Southern association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Miss Richardson represented the college library at a meeting of the policy committee of the Southeastern Library association and the American Library Extension board. Each type of library in the Southeast had one representative.

Plans were made for a meeting of the American Library association to be held in Richmond, Virginia, May, 1936.

PLACEMENT REGISTRATION FOR SENIORS, TWO YEAR CANDIDATES BEGINS MONDAY

Placement registration for seniors and two-year certificate candidates will begin Monday, December 2. The work entailed is heavy and although notices of openings are not received before March or April, it is necessary to begin enrollment now.

Every senior is required to have a permanent placement record in the personnel office whether or not a position in any field is desired. Tentative candidates for graduation in January, May, and August are being scheduled for a ten-minute conference with Miss Parker. Seniors in the schools of education, music, and home economics, and graduate students are to be scheduled from December 2-7; Seniors in the College of Arts and Sciences, the week of December 9-14. Two year certificate students are to make appointments, if interested in registering, which is optional, for the week of December 16-20. The two-year candidates will not be given conferences except by request.

If you are a candidate for a bachelor's degree in January, May, or August and have not been mailed a notice of appointment by the 13th, please come to the Personnel office. This especially applies to the August graduates, as we do not have a complete list.

Bring penciled notes of your credits, including all courses through graduation, i. e.: 24 sem. hrs of Education: 18 sem. hrs. of English; 12 sem. hrs. of Mathematics, 6 sem. hrs. of Botany, 6 sem. hrs. of Zoology, etc. Please come promptly, as another senior is scheduled immediately after your appointment.

If you wish to secure a "Handbook for Teachers" before the hour of your interview, copies are available in the office.

ELIZABETH G. ANDREWS,
Director of Personnel.

Play Day Held At YW Project

Scott. Myrtle Lowery was general chairman of the party.

This project, which was started this year, has been very successful, according to Gladys Oliver, chairman of the project. All the college girls seem to be very interested in the plan and are taking an active part in the programs to make it one of the best achieved projects of the year. Other members are Anita Jones, Elisabeth Kirby-Smith, Kathryn Barrs, and Carol Farabed.

Alumnae Feted Remaining Days

retary of the college, Miss Katherine Warren, secretary to the dean of students; Dr. Mark H. DeGraff, professor of education; Dr. Venila L. Shores, associate professor of history; Miss Elisabeth Lynn, physio instructor at the college; Miss Sarah Herndon, English instructor, and Judge Charles M. Ausley, Tallahassee, and Mrs. Beeson, Groveland.

At 11:30 o'clock visitors were invited to take part in an informal discussion of books in the browsing room of the library, with Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, in charge. "If you have read a new book, let us hear about it," was the keynote of this informal discussion.

Alumnae Supper

This afternoon from 2:00 to 3:00 there will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Alumnae association in the alumnae office.

One of the new features of Homecoming is the supper for alumnae and faculty at Camp Flastacowo this evening from 5 to 7:30 o'clock. Alumnae of Tallahassee, with Miss Florence Tryon, as chairman, are in charge of arrangements. Transportation will be furnished in front of Bryan at 5:00 and the guests will return in time for Play Nite at the gymnasium.

Another new feature of Homecoming is the Mortar Board reunion breakfast tomorrow morning at 8 30 o'clock at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Harold Richards. Following the breakfast there will be an informal get-together of old and new members. Among the alumnae Mortar Board members expected to attend are Mary Lee Davis, Lucy Pope, Marian Brantley and Frances Parks.

Hostesses are: Dorothy Leach, Minna Dunn, Margaret Graham, Kitty Blood, Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, Rae Reddick, Lillian Turlington, Betty Meyer, Lucy Gee Linn, Edith Webb, Ruth Persons, Sarah Krentsman and Gertrude Kuhn.

During the day there will be class meetings. Announcements of these will be placed on the bulletin board.

The four-day celebration will come to a close tomorrow night with the gala dance in the gymnasium in honor of the alumnae. Former students have been requested to wear their badges to the dance which will begin at 8.30 o'clock.

Newman Club Initiates; Church Plans Services

Old members of the Newman club will be honored at a party given by the newly initiated members next Saturday evening, November 7. Betty Snyder is in charge of the arrangements, which are to be announced.

The first of the annual series of Christmas worship services will be held in the annex of the First Presbyterian church Sunday morning during the usual Sunday school hour.

NSFA Will Hold Forum Tuesday for Election Of Delegates to Meet

Two delegates to attend the NSFA convention in Kansas City during the Christmas holidays will be elected at the open forum meeting to be held by the local NSFA Tuesday night at 7:30 in 203 Administration building. One junior and one senior will be chosen.

At this time a discussion of women in politics will be held. The speakers on this part of the program will be Margaret Graham, who will talk on "Woman and Her Place in Politics," and Daisy Parker who will speak on the same subject from the Florida viewpoint. There will be possibly a third speaker, although this has not been decided definitely as yet.

All students are urged to attend since the delegates chosen are supposed to be representatives elected by the student-body.

Bids for Remodeling Wing of Ad Building Are Open December 4

Bids for remodeling the east wing of the Administration building are open December 4. If the bids do not exceed the appropriation of $90,000 allotted by the federal and state governments, construction will be begun December 15 by the PWA.

Plans for the new dormitory, the addition to the dining hall, and the addition to the infirmary are still unmade as the project was not approved at Washington

The golf course up until now has had no appropriations. PWA workers are grading the land so that it will be ready for construction work if and when appropriations for it are granted.

Miss Briggs Announces Weekend Art Exhibit

A special art exhibition showing the comprehensive study of the work done by the students in the several art classes will be open Thursday, Friday, and Saturday from 9:00 to 5:00 in the Art browsing room, 302 Administration building, according to Miss Amy Ferris Briggs, associate professor of art.

Visiting Organist Shows Graciousness of South possibilities of success in the field of organ playing, she shrugged her shoulders and said, "There is as much future for organists as any other musicians. I believe it to be an excellent branch of work. It certainly offers positions, if that is what one wants—churches, synagogues private instruction, and college work."

At this point she became restless and seemed anxious to get back to her music, so the reporters had to be content with only one more question, concerning her hobbies. 'Hobbies? Yes, I have a grand one—tennis. I've spent much time and energy following tennis tournaments. I find it a good sport for an organist, for it strengthens the arms, and it requires a standing instead of sitting position. An organist needs out-of-door exercise"

With a graciousness that seemed characteristic of her she said goodbye and once again returned to her music.

Dust and Soap Mingle In Fall House-Cleaning

Alumnae Will Be Greeted By Campus of Spick And Span Dorms

Dust and soapsuds fill the air as the dormitories undergo a rigid fall house-cleaning. The alumnae will be greeted not only by shining faces, but also by the sight of gleaming windows, polished floors, and neat rooms in all of the residence halls and off-campus houses.

Students may now gaze out of their windows at the passing cars unimpeded by the slightly foggy appearance of the glass panes which has heretofore been characteristic. The newly-waxed floors in the residence hall parlors have caused many a worn oxford to suddenly leave terra firma for a flight into the stratosphere, while the odor of furniture polish has been the reason for the wrinkling of many a fastidious nose.

Many a student has been struck with horror on returning to her room after class during the past week to find her domicile in a state of turmoil unequaled by any since the last time she couldn't find her other sock After worming her way past piles of books, shoes, laundry, chairs, beds, tables and trunks, she advances through the thickest disarray holding a flag of truce in her hand The storm of hairpins and dust subsides and the beaming face of the janitor looms through the mist "It's y'alls turn to have yo' room scrubbed, ma'am!"

The student either dazedly staggers to a friend's room, or is struck by a fit of zealous energy In the latter case she sorts out her various possessions hangs a new pair of curtains and dusts off the boy friend's picture.

Outing Club Plans For Two Sunday Afternoon Excursions to Wakulla

The first meeting of the outing club was held last week, November 21. It was decided that the money alloted it by the budget would be used to build two open fire places for student house parties in Game's Woods a short distance from the college. Beth Daane, president of the club, announced that work would be started on this project soon.

Every student enrolled in the Florida State College for Women is automatically a member of this club and is urged to take an active part in its activities, according to Beth.

As its first excursion the club will sponsor the taking of parties of five students to Wakulla spring on Sunday afternoon, December 1 and on the following Sunday, December 8 at a minimum charge.

Sikes Advises That Alumnae Set Up Programs Helpful to College

Pu[illegible] Favorable To Alma Mater Should Be In Plans

Branch chapters of the Alumnae association of Florida State College for Women were advised this month by Miss Anna May Sikes, vice-president of the association, to set up programs for their respective organizations which would be of help to their Alma Mater, the community in which they are located, and to the members of the chapter themselves.

Among the ways in which the local clubs can be of help to the college, Miss Sikes [illegible] is by getting out favorable publicity about the college, letting the newspaper editors know that the Florida State girls appreciate mention of their Alma Mater in the columns of the newspapers, tracking down and checking [illegible] rumors detrimental to the college, and by interesting the high school students in the college.

Alumnae may help the community, she said, by aiding with or sponsoring [illegible] community project. She urged that the graduates of Florida State College for Women let the people of the state know that their training at the college here and that state money spent on them has been worthwhile.

Florida State College clubs can be of help to the members [illegible] keeping the graduates in[illegible] about the college and by [illegible] good programs which will be of value to those who attend the meetings.

According to Miss Sikes, seventeen alumnae clubs have been organized in Florida and [illegible] in New York [illegible]. The newest club was organized this month in Monticello.

Alumnae clubs in Florida with their presidents follow: Clearwater, Miss Maude McCall; Ft. Pierce, M[illegible] Adams; Jacksonville, Miss Mildred Greene, acting president; Key West, Mrs. Neil Knowles; Miami, Mrs. Charles M Fisher; New Smyrna, Miss Anne Patillo; Panama City, Miss Arabelle J[illegible]er; Pensacola, [illegible] Marjorie Mack[illegible]; Sanford, Mrs. R. O Williams; St. Petersburg, Miss Carteen Vinal; Tampa, Miss Mar[illegible] Boyle; Monticello, Miss Katherine Johnson; Alachua [illegible], M[illegible] Ames of Gainesville; Broward, Miss E[illegible]abeth Tribble of Ft. Lauderdale; Polk, Mrs. J. W. K[illegible]rew of Lakeland; acting [illegible] Gadsden, Miss Do[illegible] F[illegible]ber of Quincy; Palm Beach, Miss Antoinette [illegible], Lake Worth; New York city, Mrs. G. C. Williamson.

Pitchford Works With Secretary

Rachel (Sockey) Pitchford, who graduated from Florida State College in '29, is now acting as assistant publicity secretary at F. S. C. associated in the alumnae and publicity office with Laura Strunk Leslie, also of the class of '29.

The new publicity secretary is a former editor of the Flambeau. Since graduation she has worked on the New Smyrna Daily News and for the past four years has been a member of the staff of the Daytona Beach News-Journal.

Alumnae Office Receives Letter

Buttles Writes to Obtain More Information

The organization by Dr. Harold F. Richards of volunteer teams of telescope observers of the skies at Florida State College for Women has led Lois Inman Buttles, '27, of Chicago, to write the alumnae office for more information about the astronomy department.

She learned this in the issue of the Flambeau mailed to the alumnae last month. "I certainly enjoyed the alumnae pages," she said, "as well as the rest of the paper."

Her letter in part, reads:

"Ever since I left Florida State I've been rather closely associated with astronomy, at first more or less as a hobby because my husband was interested, and later in the developing of modern telescopes. We have a club of widely scattered memberships (we even have a member in Plant City) whose major interest is the development of the most usable as well as the most efficient telescopes possible. We have been cooperating with a number of the professional astronomers in the design of equipment for their research problems and the reason I was so late getting to read the Flambeau was because we were over in Iowa setting up an 11-inch Polar Bowl at one of the state universities."

"Because I've been so closely associated with it I've somehow felt as though Florida State were a little out of step with other colleges and universities because it did not include courses in astronomy. Therefore when I read in this issue that Dr Richards was not only including a study of the heavens in the physics department, I can't tell you how pleased I am."

Camp Trip Will Honor Alumnae

Faculty Joins Graduates At Supper; Luncheon Is Discontinued

Another new feature of the Homecoming program will be the alumnae-faculty supper tonight at Camp Flastacowo, to which the Tallahassee alumnae chapter will act as hostess. Members of the faculty, faculty wives and husbands are invited to attend. The thirteen members of the Mortar Board, Dr. and Miss Louise Conrad, Dean Olivia Dorman, and J. G. Kellum will be honor guests at this occasion.

The camp supper is a combination of the Pine Tree Supper and the annual alumnae-faculty luncheon. The change from the Homecoming alumnae luncheon was made because of the difficulty in having the luncheon within one hour's time. In the past, faculty members having 1:30 classes and town alumnae having only one hour off for lunch could not attend the luncheon.

Transportation will be provided for, cars leaving Bryan Hall at 5 p. m. today. Reservations for the supper may be made with any member of the alumnae committee. Tickets are on sale at the alumnae office, college bookstore, Fain's Drug Store and all alumnae registration booths. All reservations must be made by 11:30 today.

The general committee in charge of this affair is composed of Tallahassee alumnae with Miss Florence Tryon as chairman. Transportation and reservations are being handled by Mrs. Pearl Beverly at the college business office. Miss Helen Smith is in charge of tickets, and Mrs. A. H. West is securing hostesses.

Miss Katherine Montgomery and program committee, Miss Grace Fox and Miss Elizabeth Autrey, are making preparations for the entertainment of the guests at the camp, which will include a conducted tour of the camp grounds, and indoor and outdoor sports. Indoor sports will be held in Camp House No. 2. Water sports such as canoeing, boating, swimming and Ky-yaking will be enjoyed. Swimming suits and towels will be furnished. There will also be rifle shooting and archery.

A box-supper will be served inside to the faculty and alumnae who will have formed groups according to their graduating class.

Library Issues Lists Of Books for Visitors

Instead of a special Thanksgiving exhibit, national book week, November 17-23, recognized at Florida State College for Women by several exhibits in the library, has been extended to include the week of November 24-30, for the benefit of the parents, friends, and alumnae attending the Homecoming of the college.

Book lists have also been issued, chief among which is "Book Week," a list compiled by the library staff of the college, and "Reading for Pleasure," by Anne Carroll Moore. These lists are available in the library.

Schornherst Introduces New Homecoming Feature to Audience: 'Meet Our Alumnae'

By MARY MASSIE

"Meet Our Alumnae," a new feature of the Homecoming program, proved to be an interesting [illegible] Thursday morning when [illegible] were introduced to the audience in the big gymnasium.

Immediately after the basketball game, parents and students were requested to remain in the balcony while the alumnae formed [illegible] in various groups [illegible] class banners which were hung on the wall. There were twelve banners ranging from the class of 1917 up to the class of 19[illegible].

An alumna, Miss Mary Schornherst of the [illegible] school, [illegible] was chairman of the program, gave a brief history of the progress of the graduates. Since [illegible] B[illegible] and 38 Master's degrees have been issued at this college. In [illegible] there were 21 graduates. In 19[illegible] the number went over the 100 mark. In 1929 [illegible] surpassed [illegible] and in 1933 about 300, while in [illegible] four-year [illegible] p[illegible]ma[illegible]

Miss Rowena Longmire has been associate professor of English since 1906 and Miss Olga Larson, assistant professor of mathematics since 19[illegible]. Miss Katie Montgomery is director of the physical education department. Another graduate, Miss Maude Flowers, is now director of residence halls. Miss Sallie Nicholson is manager of the college bookstore.

At least twenty-five of our graduates have taken Master's degrees in the past four years. Those having received M.D.'s are Miss Myrtle [illegible]w[illegible]ler, from the Rush Medical college; Virginia Scherer who graduated in '32 received this degree from the Medical College of Pennsylvania in '35; and Ruth Mertin, graduate of '30 from Rush Medical college in 1935.

Recent successful candidates for doctor's degrees were Helen Car[illegible]e, Ph.D from New York university in [illegible]2 who is now head of the Department of Home Economics [illegible] Louisiana State university. [illegible] Futch received her Ph.D. from Bryn Mawr in '34. Dorothy Dodd with a Ph.D from the University of Chicago in '33, is now holding a responsible position in the office of W. S. Cawthon. Evelyn Madge received her Ed. D. from John Hopkins in 1935.

Mrs. Edward L. Beeson of Groveland, president of the Alumnae association, said a word of greeting to those present after a brief introduction by Miss Schornherst.

Miss Katherine Warren, secretary to Dean Olivia N. Dorman, introduced some of the recent graduates, among whom were Helenmary Fritsch, graduate of '35, chairman of judiciary and member of Mortar Board; Mary Lee Davis of '34, member of Mortar Board and Y.W.C.A. cabinet; Jennie Rae Nall of '35, president of Y.W.C.A., Spirogira, and Mortar Board; Hazel Royal, '35, president of the F club, and member of Spirogira; Carolina DeMontigne, president of the College Government association of '35 and member of Spirogira; Jean Hamner, '35 House Chairman in Reynolds; and Nancy Lutz Hoyt of the class of '31.

Alumnae To Aid In Fund-Raising

Magazine Subscriptions Sold by Office Here

Alumnae, faculty, and students were urged this morning during the second annual session of the Alumnae Institute to cooperate in the present fund-raising project of the Alumnae association which will go into effect December 1.

The program, according to Mrs. R. H. Leslie, alumnae secretary is based on the general office of the Alumnae association serving as a clearing house for subscriptions to a number of magazines of various kinds. The Alumnae association will receive a certain commission for each subscription handled through the campus office.

"If each alumna or friend of the association will subscribe to the magazines she reads—should they be represented in the group handled by the alumnae organization here," Mrs. Leslie said, "the Association will receive during the course of a year a good sum of money through which it will be possible to benefit the alumnae of the college much more than has been possible in the past. Numbers of college alumnae associations throughout the country are using the magazine subscription idea as a means of raising money, and it is hoped that the alumnae and friends of Florida State College for Women will respond as those of other colleges have done."

The subscription price should be sent directly to the alumnae office with the check or money order made payable to "The Alumnae association, F. S. C. W." Since it is so near Christmas, alumnae officials expressed the hope that the college alumnae will make it a "magazine Christmas" and send in [illegible] subscriptions for their friends through the Alumnae association.

Monticello Organizes Group of Ten Alumnae

The Monticello branch of the Florida State College for Women Alumnae association was organized this month under the direction of Miss Gladys Folsom, director of district two.

Officers of the new organization follow: president, Miss Katherine Johnson; vice-president, Miss Frances Braswell; secretary, Miss Scott Turnbull. Miss Catherine Ash was named delegate to this year's alumnae institute.

According to Miss Folsom the club now has ten active members and "is expecting to increase this number at once." The club plans to meet once a month, and at each meeting to discuss something of interest to everyone such as current events, modern poetry and prose, and other similar topics.

March Is Date "FSCW Week"

All Alumnae Clubs Are Asked to Publicize Florida State

March 1-7 has been set as the date for the 1935 "F.S.C.W. Week" during which time information relative to the activities and scholastic standing of Florida State College for Women is placed before citizens of the state.

The date was announced this morning at the second annual alumnae institute held in Broward lounge with Mrs. E. L. Beeson, president of the Alumnae association, presiding.

Dr. M. H. DeGraaf, professor of education, addressed the officers of the Alumnae association and the representatives from the state alumnae clubs in attendance on "Ways in Which the Alumnae Can Vitalize the Work of the College." He declared that "Whatever the college is able to do toward the fundamental purpose of this or any state college is largely dependent upon the extent and manner in which those who have been trained there consciously, conscientiously and continuously attempt to put into affect those ideals, abilities and principles which were promulgated during their period of training."

Miss Rachel Pitchford, assistant college publicity secretary here, who for four years was connected with the Daytona Beach News-Journal, spoke to the group on "Press Notices."

"One of the first things I would suggest for any organization wishing to reach its members through means other than the mail or by person is to appoint a publicity chairman," she said. "That chairman should establish a contact with her local newspapers, and above all things she should learn the 'deadline' for the various sections of the paper."

According to Miss Pitchford the information which the person wishes to get in the paper should be prepared neatly as newspaper stories go through several hands before they come out in print. She advised that stories be written on one side of the paper only, typewritten and double spaced, or if the person cannot use a typewriter she should simply write legibly in pencil.

"It isn't necessary to attempt to write the story in newspaper style," Miss Pitchford said. "Simply have the facts there—the five 'w's—the who, what, where, when, and why of the story. Once your plans are definite for staging a meeting, party, or program, get an announcement in the papers right away. Follow this up with new angles and keep the [illegible] constantly before the public."

In getting press notices into the papers, Miss Pitchford advised that the story be in as early as possible. "For instance," she said, "don't take a story in at 3 o'clock for an afternoon paper that is due to be on the street at 3:30. Deadlines are hard and fast laws that must be observed to get a paper out on time and the earlier you get a story in in view of that particular deadline the more you will please everybody and the more likely you will be to get a better play for your story."

Following Miss Pitchford's talk, Miss Katherine Warren, a former president of the Jacksonville alumnae club, addressed the group on "College Exhibits." In her talk Miss Warren mentioned in particular the exhibits arranged in Jacksonville last year during "F.S.C.W. Week." Discussions followed most of the talks given at this morning's program.

Parents and Alumnae Are Entertained With Program in Reynolds

For the entertainment of parents and alumnae a program was given Thursday evening in Reynolds hall in connection with an open house held in their honor.

Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls, was in charge of the arrangements. Assisting her were Julia Vanderipe, Sally Bert Nuzum, Margaret Stout and Marjorie Raulerson. Punch was served following the program.

Dixie Gist presented a dance, accompanied by Mildred Smith at the piano. "On Thanksgiving" was recited by Marguerite Brown. A double trio, composed of Jo Binion, Marie Spurlock, Maxine Ward, Marian Carson, Evelyn Stump and Pearle Shepard, sang "Shortin' Bread," with Martha Wilkerson as accompanist.

A skit was given by Jane Tombaugh, Marjorie Horton, Jean Duncan and Jessie Lee Lumpkin. Martha Reddick played a violin solo, accompanied by Miss M[illegible] Esther Winslow. A reading, Yo[illegible] was given by Elizabeth Th[illegible] while Frances Forth and Sar[illegible] F Gatrell played a double piano selection.

Why Don't We Combine Demonstrations?

An obvious conclusion to be drawn from the presentation of the yearly Odd and Even demonstrations, with a thought given to the amount of effort, time, and expense that went into each of these productions would seem to indicate clearly a much-needed improvement—combination of the two demonstrations.

As the custom now exists, large groups of girls from both factions spend a great deal of time and effort on their respective productions for a period of several weeks just before it, each year. As the homecoming week-end approaches, more and more time must be snatched from study, often from classes, and from sleep, in a concerted rush to finish up odds and ends of two plays.

The saving in time, effort put into the plays by committees, casts, and dozens of assistants, money expended, and last minute breathlessness involved as the carpenter shop, or the printer, or the costumers find it almost too difficult to aid both groups at once, is far too overwhelming a proponent of the combination suggested to be overlooked.

This idea of combining demonstrations, however, is not new. Last summer certain individuals tried to take definite steps toward such a production for this year. But it was too late then—among other things, some members of one group contended that their script had already been written and certain plans made. Others were just too steeped in tradition to welcome a change.

Now that we have just "come through the mill" again, with "demonstration memories" still fresh in our minds, it seems to be a logical time to do something about it. Are we going to allow tradition to rule us, or will we rule tradition?

We Can Enlarge Our Homecoming's Significance

Once more we welcome visitors to our campus, in our ninth annual Homecoming celebration.

We welcome our alumnae this year to a new order of things. As they return to renew old acquaintances and make new ones in the old setting, they will find not only the welcome mat before every campus front door, but behind those doors a definitely planned program for their entertainment.

Each sorority has honored its former active members with entertainment ranging from buffet suppers and after-dinner coffees to pledge skits and bridge games. Informal dancing at the houses during Thanksgiving day, the formal mid-day dinner in the college dining room with its attendant program, coffee with Miss Dorman afterwards, and an evening of visiting the various campus "open houses," have completed a gala day begun with the Thanksgiving worship service.

This year's chairman of the celebration has so planned her program of activity for alumnae that each day of the week-end holds a full calendar of events in honor of the visitors. Florida State College is to be congratulated that comparatively early in its series of formal annual "Homecomings" so organized a program has been evolved and carried out.

It is to be hoped, however, that the evolution of the Thanksgiving fete will not stop here. The program of entertainment inaugurated this year could easily become the first firm step toward successive programs which would center constructive purpose in the social activities of the week. The informal gathering at the college gymnasium following the games is the first of its kind held here for alumnae. Giving the old grads a chance to exchange acquaintance and ideas, this gathering as well as the alumnae institute held this morning would become truly significant as heralds of an organized body of alumnae who in future years may be coming back to F. S. C. at Homecoming with definite views, and constructive thinking to contribute to each other, to the college, and to the state.

Why Can't We Have Two Dances?

It seems a pity that only the champion "standers-in-line" and the members of a few select organizations, who are given complimentary tickets, should be allowed to attend the Thanksgiving dance—one of the few big college dance functions of the year. Numbers of students, some of whom had already asked dates for the occasion, were turned away from the ticket line with the reply "Sorry, but all junior (senior, sophomore, or freshman) tickets are gone."

Such an undemocratic situation is deplorable and more so when we remember that it has happened, not once but repeatedly. Some may contend that those who wanted tickets badly enough would get there in time and the others wouldn't care about the lighter vein of college activities. But this is an erroneous conclusion, for many students had classes or were otherwise engaged at the particular time when tickets were issued.

Since the gymnasium, as we all realize, is too small to accomodate all students and their men friends, it has been suggested that we have two dances, held on the same evening, with separate tickets issued for each and the entire student body privileged to attend one dance.

Local NSFA Needs More Student Participation

It will be interesting to note how many students attend the next NSFA forum meeting when, after the regular discussion, delegates to the national convention to be held in Kansas City this Christmas will be elected.

Since the local unit of NSFA was set up, with a definite committee in charge, meetings and discussion groups have been held approximately every two weeks on national, international, and local topics. Each student belongs to this organization and should be responsible for making some contribution to it. But how many students have been to even one meeting?

Why don't students attend these meetings? Is it true that students are as indifferent to the outside world as they have been accused of being by both insiders and outsiders? At the recent meeting when the topic of Armistice peace demonstrations was discussed approximately twenty-five people were present. Future meetings of the NSFA, and especially this next one at which we decide who represents our student body in the national meeting, present a challenge to all students for increased participation.

Honest, straightforward, and astounding is the solution of all athletic worries offered by the University of Louisville's Cardinal: "Why don't we buy a good football team?"

Perhaps our brother institution might profit from the advice of the Kentucky college editor who ventured to predict that when the university began employing good coaches and offering tempting scholarships to gridiron huskies, (the editor caring not a hoot whether said scholarships were offered in shouts or veiled whispers) and when Louisville at last cast off the shackles of misplaced idealism and admitted that business is business, the university might get somewhere."

Roosevelt, as far as the college editors of America are concerned, is practically reelected.

Four hundred and eight strong, in a recent cursory poll taken by the Pulse of the Nation, the college newspaper heads shouted down fifty-two who voted for Borah, twenty-three for Thomas, twenty-three for Hoover, twenty-three for Knox, twenty-two for Landon, and eight for Browder.

THEY CRY "PEACE, PEACE"
By Bruce Bliven
New Republic, November 20, 1935.

"They cry 'Peace, peace'," but in reality they do little good. Only one group among all the organizations that profess pacifism, according to Bliven can really face all that pacifism implies today. This is the rising generation in colleges, he says, who are identified with American radicalism and who will be ready to participate in the changes necessary to curb the forces that make war.

The changes, Bliven points out must bring about "national and international control of all export trade, with exports and imports of each country roughly in balance!"

This necessitates control of domestic production as well, with restrictions on the number of producers in each type of commodity and the annual productivity of each unit. This further restricts the possibilities of profits and must be accompanied by governmental protection for labor with specified maximum working hours and minimum wages.

As to immediate action Bliven advises us to work for the rewriting of the neutrality law at the next session of congress so that all commercial and financial contracts with belligerents will become illegal, to bring pressure to bear on the government's Far Eastern policy, to change the character of our army from offensive to defensive, and to prevent our entering a forth-coming naval-building race.

In the field of more remote action we should support every activity here and abroad tending to limit the power of private capitalistic enterprise to create international tension, and we should see that we and others are not misled by statesmen in times of stress.

ADVENTURES IN DIET
By Vilhjalmur Stefansson
Harpers, November, 1935

Stefansson, who has lived in the Arctic and eaten nothing but fish for five years, believes he has enough evidence to blast all dietetic theories about balancing one's diet.

He left an anthropology professorship at Harvard for life in the Arctic, rather worried about having a steady diet of meat with no vegetables, for he was afraid of scurvey.

On his arrival the Eskimos gave him roasted fish since he was a guest. Soon he found himself eating boiled fish the natives fixed for dinner. Then it was raw fish for breakfast and finally he got up enough nerve to try rotten fish. This was the most delicious of all, he says.

Contrary to our tastes he found heads were the most delicate part of the fish, and salt is not necessary to one's diet—simply an acquired taste.

The conclusions of an experiment conducted by the Russel Sage Institution of Pathology and a group of distinguished scientists on Stefansson and another man who lived under city conditions for a year on an exclusively meat diet will be revealed in the next articles.

MUSSOLINI: MAGALOMANIAC
New Republic,
November 20, 1935.

Surrounded by flattery and absolute power, Mussolini has lost his sanity and sense of balance, says this foreign observer who writes what the editors tag "an uncensored letter from Rome."

Il Duce has built up the nation for war, talking war, and thinking war for the past generation. Now he must go through with it.

Older Fascists, however, says the writer, who know what war means, whisper among themselves that Ethiopia seems little worth the heavy costs in human lives and money and the world's condemnation. Fascist youth, says the writer, presents the only solid enthusiasm underneath the surface.

Evidence of Mussolini's disease is everywhere. No pictures or names are allowed to appear in public except his. Independent minds, such as D'Annunzio, Grandi, Secretary Starace, now no longer appear in public without announcing beforehand any popular acclaim goes to Il Duce

If the Ethiopian conquests fails, Fascism and Mussolini will inevitably crumble. If internal opposition does not cause it the writer believes foreign pressure and external failure will certainly bring about its downfall.

ILLUSION OF NEUTRALITY
By Henry L. Stimson
Forum, November, 1935.

Tradition has distorted the true meaning of neutrality to the average man, Stimson writes in this article which is an excerpt of an address made by Stimson before the American Society of International Law last April.

The average man thinks neutrality means impartiality or isolation in time of war, but Stimson claims that neither of these is possible in a world as complex and highly specialized as ours today.

Neutrality should be a measure to prevent war rather than keep us out of war, he says. The United States should openly declare to the world that she will not be responsible for Americans trading with warring countries, not only in arms and ammunitions, but in all domestic trade. Only then will we move towards prevention of war.

THE most menacing problem in Italy as a result of the enforcement of League sanctions is that of the oil supply. Oil men estimate that Italy's supply would hold out three months During the last few months the supply of oil from the United States to Italy has increased markedly. Our government, through Secretary Ickes, Petroleum Administrator, has called on oil producers to cease selling to Italy. In addition to this the shipping bureau of the Commerce department has warned them that they must conform to our non-selling policy. But our Neutrality act makes no provision for the enforcement of policies. Will American oil producers abide by the policies of the government? It is intimated that the Congress which will meet in January may take some action on this enforcement question if necessity requires.

CONTEMPORARY STUDENT THOUGHT

University Editorials

HERE IS YOUR CHANCE

Some philanthropic young college man or woman has a great opportunity to help those students enrolled in the University of Michigan for the simple purpose of gaining an education.

It would be difficult; it would require a good many hours of boredom; it would be at times intensely interesting; and it would require impartiality and keen judgment.

His job would be to divide the University of Michigan professors into two classes: Those who lead their students in vigorous discussion, who picture their subject in its true light, making it interesting to the student whose mentality is not dumb, and those who require memorization for memorization's sake, who want facts and more facts, giving the student who has burned the candle the lowest the highest grade.

Such a canvass could be put to great use. A student who was here for true education could take courses from professors in the first category. To learn the subjects that professors of the second class teach he could buy a few text books, master the courses in his spare time, and not bother to attend classes

He would not be bored by professors who repeat what he has read in the text books. He would not find so many subjects devoid of interest because the pertinent problems were not brought up by the professor. He wouldn't lose interest to such an extent as so many students do now, that he would quit studying the course.

He would learn to reason, clear and rationally. Logical thought would be his goal—not perfect memorization, which always results in a dull, drab personality. He wouldn't be filled with disgust after taking a 'pure fact' exam. He might learn facts, but he would learn them easily because he would want them to employ in a problem which interested him.

Here is your chance.

POWER OF YOUTH

European youth has long been recognized as a vital force in government affairs "Every nation abroad tries to contact her young people and draw them together Their vast political influence cannot be over-emphasized, as Robert A. Klein, president of the New York university day student organization, said after a European tour during which he studied the youth movement.

Theorists here have always been awake to the strength of the student body. Political parties are also awakening to the strength which the thirty million votes of students can give them. Both Republicans and Democrats recently made bids for college student followings when they began the organization of young Democrat and young Republican clubs

These thirty million votes can exert a vast and beneficial influence. But the strength of the present student body lies even more in its intelligence and leadership, yet to be proven

Youth can make today's student opinion tomorrow's government policies

YOUTH AND THE RED EVIL

A remarkably large and blustery tempest is being waged within the china-thin confines of the Yale Daily News teapot. This aged and highly dignified institution of Yale, in its trembling and indignant excitement, has practically thrust upon the collegiate public a so-called 'startling revelation" of communistic activities among members of its student body

One can well imagine the Yale bulldog growling uneasily in the half-sleep of his self-sufficiency. Comfortable old men bulldogs, and Yale work themselves into a tremendous dither when the odor of a new idea wafts around an ivied corner. It is all the same—old men fume and shake their canes at the laughing clean-limbed young, bulldogs growl and scratch, then creep warily under the sofa, and Yale publishes a "Digest poll.

It is not that we believe the United States harbors no red propagandists—that would be like denying the existence of the people themselves—but rather undue emphasis is being placed on Yale as a breeding place for communists Communism springs up wherever it can get a hearing. that is true, but it seems to be more of a sacred airing than a hearing in this college article.

In the first place, 62 per cent of the 3300 undergraduates, and faculty who were questioned recently admitted having been born in Russia. Ordinary reason and the registrar's files will prove that not every other person in that great university is of Russian birth. The Russian mind and soul is so interlaced and interwoven with communistic ideas and vain imaginings that the wonder would be if it should change. Thus we may expect red reactions to come from those inborn in it But it is difficult for us to think that an American university should possess within its walls more than half of its students and faculty right out of Russia May we suggest, the Daily News might have picked the 3300 questioned arbitrarily instead of taking an honest aver age?

If the Yale Daily News had really wanted to alarm anybody, there should have been no mention of the number of Russian-born. The Kernel would be interested in knowing how a more typical college group would stand.

The revelation does, however compel realization more clearly than before that there is such a thing as Red activity among our younger fry The foreign-born, even though foreign-born, is nevertheless making itself at home in America's front parlor and has to be seriously considered.

The Kernel does not feel as the Daily News digest might suggest to some, that all that is left to be done is to pull down the stars and stripes and send up the red flag But we do believe we can accept the matter for what it is worth and try to educate red enthusiasts toward a saner understanding of public affairs

It is not that our system is to be considered perfect—that [illegible] he question—but rather h[illegible] to discuss problems of publ[illegible] terest. In this way points of con tact will be made as could [illegible] be done by each side merel[illegible] sisting "Your system is [illegible] Mine is right"

The people as a whole are [illegible] willing to overthrow a form [illegible] government they have for one [illegible] ttle tried and not too succes[illegible]

In whatever way however Yale any other university may have been afflicted by the red per[illegible] of Russia, The Kernel is confide[illegible] in the conviction that upon the campus of the University of Kentucky the crimson devil can expect no comfortable abiding place, either now or hereafter.

Checks Aren't Always Easy To Be Cashed

'And Then There Was The Soph' Who Went The Frosh One Better

Two sophomores at Florida State College faced possible prosecution by the federal government. As a result "and then there was the sophomore" supersedes the traditional introduction of a freshman when a campus "break" is exposed

A sophomore received a post office check from home in answer to a subtle request informing the family of her financial status. Making use of her roommate she sent her to cash the check.

The roommate upon presenting the check at the post office thought it would be simpler to state that she was the person to whom the check was written. However, she was ignorant of the elaborate procedure one must go through before money can be obtained by such method.

At the first questions asking the place and time of birth of the recipient of the money the roommate complacently and confidently gave the right answers. The next queries revealed the horrible thought that she was completely ignorant of the names and addresses of the members of her supposed family She ventured answers desperately, hoping to give the right ones.

But even the ingenuity of a college student was taxed too heavily when the post office clerk firmly placed a fingerprint paper before her. A horrified glance at her hand left no doubt in her mind but that her prints would be at least twice as large as those of the roommate she was impersonating. Gathering up every ounce of her fast failing courage she desperately confessed that she was the wrong person.

The combined explanations of both the hastily summoned roommate and the thoroughly frightened sophomore forced the clerk to relent in his threats to expose the imposter. The honor of two Florida State students was left unsullied.

But "and then there was the freshman" no longer reigns supreme.

SORORITIES GIVE SPECIAL AFFAIRS FOR ENTERTAINMENT OF VISITORS

Alumnae of the Florida State College for Women and parents of students were the guests at a round of social engagements given in their honor by the eighteen campus sororities as part of the Thanksgiving day program. Dancing, buffet suppers, after-dinner coffees, breakfasts, bridge, "sings," and special entertainment at the sorority houses were among the events which took place yesterday. Several social functions are being planned for this week-end.

Kappa Alpha Theta sorority celebrated the local chapter's establishment on this campus back in 1924 with a Founders' Day program from 1:15 to 8 p. m. Thanksgiving afternoon. At 7.30 that evening the pledges entertained those present with a skit and from 8 to 10.15 o'clock there was dancing and for those who did not care to dance—bridge.

The visit of the Alpha Gamma Delta national inspector, Miss Julia Riser of Birmingham will be the occasion for a reception by that chapter tonight at the sorority house on Park avenue. Thanksgiving afternoon there was an informal "get-together" followed by a buffet supper at 6 o'clock. Sunday morning there will be an informal breakfast at the house.

An after-dinner coffee and skit were features of the program planned by the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority for the Thanksgiving afternoon program. This was followed by informal dancing. Coffee and wafers were served.

Last night the members and pledges of the Alpha Xi Delta sorority welcomed their Homecoming visitors with a buffet supper at 8:30.

The pledges of the Sigma Kappa sorority served at a Thanksgiving breakfast at the house to that chapter's Homecoming guests. Thanksgiving afternoon the pledges entertained with "goat" songs and skits and later in the evening dancing was enjoyed at which time coffee and sandwiches were served.

Phi Mu sorority held open house from 4:30 to 8 Thursday afternoon featuring such entertainment as dancing, bridge, and special music. Parents and alumnae were guests at a buffet supper later in the evening.

Open house formed the major part of the Kappa Delta entertainment program with dancing from 8:30 to 10:15 at which time refreshments of punch and cookies were served. Tonight the chapter is planning an evening's program of skits and songs to be presented by the members and pledges.

Informal dancing and a skit in which the pledges impersonated the chapter members were the main features of the Home-coming entertainment sponsored by the members and Chi Omega sorority.

A skit followed by a sorority "sing" was planned for 8 o'clock by the Alpha Chi Omega sorority and refreshments of punch and sandwiches were served.

The informal after-dinner coffee given by the members and pledges of the Delta Delta Delta sorority was followed by dancing from 8 to 10 15 p. m., coffee and sandwiches being served.

Theta Upsilon sorority held open house yesterday afternoon from 5 to 10:15 p. m., dancing and entertainment from 8 to 10:15 o'clock. Open house will be observed from 5 to 11.15 p. m. Friday and Saturday with an after-dinner coffee planned for Friday.

The Pi Beta Phi program consisted of a skit by the pledges, bridge, and informal dancing. Punch and cakes were served during the evening to the guests present.

Delta Zeta sorority held open house throughout Thanksgiving evening featuring a skit by pledges, bridge and dancing. This evening a buffet supper will be given in Jubilee hall in Goodwood, the home of Senator and Mrs. W. C. Hodges, patron and patroness of of the sorority. Saturday will be given over to visiting and the pledges will entertain with a skit during the evening.

An open house held Thanksgiving night and a waffle breakfast to be given Saturday morning are parts of the program planned by the members and pledges of the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority.

Other sororities and the entertainment which they have planned for Homecoming are Zeta Tau Alpha, informal dance and skit Thanksgiving night; Beta Phi Alpha, after-dinner coffee Friday night; Alpha Delta Pi, program from 7 to 8 o'clock Thanksgiving evening.

Visitors at the Kappa Delta house during the Homecoming holidays include Mrs. Oscar Ayala, Mrs. H M Litschgi, and Mrs. Carl Whitaker, of Tampa, and Mrs. C. O. Perkins of Jacksonville.

Girls Soak To Steep Again In College Days

By BETTY ELLEN SMITH

Erstwhile Flambeau Columnist, class of 1935, author of "How Do You Eat Your Grapes?", and now teacher and librarian in Titusville high school.

One of Horatio Alger's tongue-tickling titles, "Pluck and Luck," or even more appropriately, "Sink or Swim," might be applied to the touching incident which occurred at the Big Ravine, Thanksgiving morn when a group of students and alumnae attempted to recapture the thrill of a steak breakfast sizzled in a chilly dawn over a fire that only overgrown Girl Scouts know how to build.

The long trek over the same dusty clay road, the winding trail through the woods upholstered with fallen leaves, even the holes the barbed wire fences were just as they used to be. Yet the same overcast sky, that always before had managed to curb its eagerness to give the posies a drink and bathe the little birdies while they slept gave way with its first sprinkle as soon as the fire had passed its crisis and had begun to roar healthily. Picture, if you can do so without feeling damp, a group of bedraggled girls squatted under coats, with gleams of "do-or-die" in their eyes and sets of determination to their jaws, trying to roast their steaks in a downpour that at least kept the meat well basted, trying to find at least one roll not yet water-logged, and trying to keep the canned cream from becoming too diluted.

When the party had breakfasted soggily, they sojourned to the highway to exercise their thumbs. A large conveyance equipped to carry animals proved to be the ark that brought the doves back. Strange as it may Ripley, eight girls on campus returned, thanks for cattle trucks on that Thanksgiving morn.

"Roosevelt."

"Which Roosevelt?" asked the policeman.

"The other Roosevelt for a change" was the answer. And Cornelius gave himself up unto the law.

The police record for driving offenses in the presidential Roosevelt family runs one for James, two for John and five for Franklin, Junior. Hence Cornelius' remark.

This state has a population of 4,000,000 people. Mr. Yin, the gentleman apopinted to take charge, is related to the Japanese royal family.

In the northern section of Brazil Pernambuco and Rio seem to have taken an example from northern China, without, however, the aid of a nation like Japan. Land, sea and air forces are being put into action throughout Brazil to quell the uprising.

Student Tells Interesting Story With "Handles" Found on Campus

BY BARBARA HOLMES

"A name is merely a handle by which one is identified," is a definiton given by a high school student several years ago, and interesting enough does one find the study of the great variety of "handles" at Florida State College for Women. Some "handles" are common, some unusual and not a few of them can be identified with plants, colors and precious stones.

Joneses and Smiths

Among the least common of the surnames are Pooser, Fuhrer, Lufhurrow, Yon, Ayala, Overhultz and Routh. Jones and Smith tie for first place as being the most common names on campus with fifteen students claiming each. Brown follows in second place with twelve students, Johnson with nine and Williams with seven.

Double names as given names are popular at Florida State with the most common combinations Mary Elizabeth, Anna Bell, Margaret Ann, Mary Frances, Mary Louise and Elizabeth Virginia. The college also has its share of Marthas, Louises, Helens, Saras and Dorothys. LaUna, Yvette, Clairnelle, La Vada and Amo are more unusual given names.

Nearly all the colors are represented in one way or another by the names of the students. Brown, Black, White and Greene are among these. Precious gems are brought to mind by "monickers" like Opal, Pearl, Ruby and Diamond. Cotton, Lily and Bush appropriately identify the girls who own the names with the beauty and grace connected with each of the plants mentioned.

A suitable story in which names are woven appeared in a collegiate periodical last year. With slight variations it can be made to apply to the Florida State College for Women:

Story In Nomes

A LITTLE country girl, STRANGE to the WAYs of a great city, one DAY started out for an adventure in New York. At the BOWERY she met a YOUNG MANN, who FELT MOOR strange than she. In a FORD they drove to Central PARK to see the animals there.

FINCH had escaped from its cage. In the LANE between the cages it RISKed DEATH and escaped the building from which it was seen flying into the KNIGHT. A PEACOCK REVELed in all his glory, and not to be outDUNN, MOCKed the FINCH, but decided to LINGER when CRUMS were GIVEN to him. The YOUNG couple strolled up Fifth avenue. A CROOK ACOSTAd them, but the YOUNG man was a BRAVERMAN than he and boldly hit him with his BLOUNT cane. The couple went on their way, and it turned out to be a MERRYDAY after all.

Miss Manning Talks At Forum Held to Discuss Woman's Status by Law

An open forum meeting for the purpose of creating understanding and interest in the status of women in Florida will be sponsored by the A.A.U.W., Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in Ruge hall. Miss Zoe Manning, former president of the Business and Professional Women's clubs will lead the discussion.

The topic: the legal status of women in Florida and the proposals of the Business and Professional Women's clubs of the state for an amendment of laws pertaining to their status will show the status of women in regard to control of property and children, and the holding of positions.

Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey as chairman of the legislative committee which is presenting Miss Manning will introduce the speaker. The general public is invited to this open forum, planned for the interest of the student body.

Luncheon Will Be Held

Alumnae of Florida State College for Women who attend the meeting of the Florida Education association in Orlando will gather at an alumnae luncheon Friday, January 3, at the Orange Court hotel Elizabeth Markey is chairman of the affair.

Madame Blossom Keeps Owner on Constant Hunt

Pandemonium reigns in Jennie Murphree hall as the hunt for S. Blossom gets under way. The haggard owner of the truant frantically looks under beds and chairs and in closets in search of her loved one. Who and what is S. Blossom? None other than Madame S. Blossom, Esquire, of the Amphibious Reptiles of Florida, suh!, commonly known by the middle classes as turtles.

Madame is fond of swimming and hiking. She (?) takes frequent jaunts through her owner's room, and at times enjoys swinging on the curtains. The danger of the latter sport most appeals to her adventurous spirit, but the delights of swimming have an almost equal place in her heart.

S. Blossom hails from New Orleans, and so loves her native birthplace that she constantly wears a miniature painting of the city on her back.

When stirred by anger, S Blossom raises quite a commotion. She very much resents being disturbed while having her daily bath. She likes to dive from the top of a floating soapdish into the bottom of the bowl, and then lightheartedly scurry around under the water. At times her heart yearns for a slide, but, then—one can't have everything.

The one weak spot in S. Blossom's character is the fact that she sulks when she can't have her own way. And such a sulk! Her very back seems to say "Go away. I want to be alone."

Her fond owner stated that Madame will be moved to large and better air-conditioned quarters soon, as the candy box now used is no longer adapted to the needs of Madame S. Blossom, Esquire.

Salley Goes to Atlanta

Dr. Conradi Stresses Need for Art In Article Published by Quarterly

President is Honored As Magazine Prints His Analytical Study

Dr. Edward Conradi, president of F. S. C. W. was honored recently when an article written by him was printed in the High School Quarterly, the official organ of the Southern Commissions on Accredited Schools and Colleges, Georgia and National High School Inspectors associations.

The article, which appeared in the October, 1935 issue of the quarterly magazine, was entitled "The Importance and Place of Art in Our Schools," and in it Dr. Conradi stressed the need for the development of art in schools today.

The following quotations summarize some of the high lights of Dr. Conradi's article:

"Art in the education of our children and our youth has two major values; they are (1) to stimulate and give expression to that creative activity which is a natural mode of reaction of every normal child; and (2) to cultivate a proper sense of appreciation of beauty.

"I am not an artist. I am a layman in the field of art. But as a man interested in education I want here to emphasize the value of an appreciation of beauty in human life and the place it should have in the education of our children

"Art has alwayr been one of the finest uplifting forces in the development of man. From the time when David with his harp solaced the heart of Saul to the modern philosopher who, when his philosophical studies depressed him too seriously, placed himself in the presence of inspiring and uplifting music to lift himself out of his gloom, and from the days of the early Greeks who, the historian tells us, placed beauty next to holiness, down to the present day, art has been one of the choicest sources of inspiration to man from the humblest citizen to the most outstanding leaders in human life.

"I am glad to see that our communities in Florida are emphasizing beauty of environment in their school buildings and school grounds. It is a real progressive move toward maintaining and building Beautiful Florida. May I add here that the campus of the Florida State College for Women has been pronounced by various experts from outside of the state of Florida as the most beautiful campus in this part of the United States. We make this campus a part of beautiful Florida and of the beautiful Southland, for beauty of environment is a valuable party of one's education

"May I add here in conclusion that whatever an economic depression may do to us, let it never befog this charming sense of beauty in our hearts, so that we may keep alive and build in the hearts of our children that creative activity charged with a love of beauty, and an appreciation of the beauty of God's great outdoors and of the beauty given us by the great creative geniuses through the ages. May we never forget that the finer values of life namely, truth beauty and goodness, builded into the heart and the mind of the child and of the youth are immortal; they will express themselves and re-express themselves and so add to the beauty of the world from generation to generation through the years and through the centuries For if we build these finer values in the lives of our sons and our daughters, they according to Browning, 'will give forth a like cheer" to their sons and their daughters so that in the countless years to come they will 'fill the south and the north with the radiance thy deed was the germ of.' "

Seydell Talks On "Catching Celebrities"

Second of Lecture Forum Speakers to Appear Wednesday Night

WAS TRAVELER IN FOREIGN CLIMES

To Give Colorful Account Of Interviews With Many Notables

Mrs. Mildred Seydell, writer, newspaper woman, and speaker, will talk on "Catching Celebrities" Wednesday, December 11, at 8:15 p. m in the Augusta Conradi theater. Her lecture will be the second on the lecture forum program.

Mrs. Seydell has had a noteworthy and unique journalistic career. In 1934 she celebrated her tenth anniversary as a member of the staff of the "Georgian-American" at Atlanta, Georgia, and she is also a contributor to the better magazines and author of a best-seller of 1930, Secret Feathers. She also holds offices in numerous Georgia patriotic and civil organizations.

Travels in Foreign Countries

She has made yearly trips to various sections of Europe, Asia, Africa, and the United States, interviewing the "men and women of the hour" and studying the social and political reforms being sponsored in different sections of the world. She has visited kings and queens, and has been the guest of dictators She has gained national fame in her "coverage" of various important events beginning with the famous "monkey trial" in Dayton, Ohio, in 1925

In 1926 Mrs. Seydell was selected as a representative of the Hearst Crime commission to go to Europe to learn how crime problems are handled in the various countries. She was the guest of the king and queen of Spain, and interviewed Mussolini and numerous other great figures of Europe during that trip Because of the success of her articles on her first trip, she was sent to Europe again in 1927, this time to make a study of Irish politics.

Interviews Notables

In 1929 she went to Turkey to study the new life of Turkish women released from the harem, and in 1931 she journeyed to Sweden for a study of the noted Swedish liquor regulations. In 1931 Mrs. Seydell covered the Chicago Century of Progress for the "Georgian."

She has interviewed many notables in her travels and has visited Hollywood several times for chats with movie stars. Her series, "Talks with Celebrities", which has appeared in the Hearst newspapers throughout the United States, received much favorable comment.

The talk, "Catching Celebrities", which Mrs. Seydell will give Wednesday night, is a colorful and humorous account of how she has managed to break through the barriers surrounding the celebrities of the day, not only securing interviews, but gaining the friendship of those she met.

Cotillion Club at Dance Taps Seventeen; Dinner, Initiation After Holidays

One of the main features of the Homecoming dance, which was held in the college gymnasium last Saturday night, was the tapping of the new members of Cotillion. Among those girls tapped were: June Mauce, Marion Heper, Katherine Rogers, Dorothy Barr, Amelia Mae Lockwood, Nellie Robey Webb, Dorothy Olmstead, Mary June Michel Sarah Mae Davis, Augusta Yust Helen Meade, Sally Well, Elise Richards, Tommy Grace Faircloth Mildred Emmelhainz, Lilla Parramore, and Mary Telmer.

These girls were chosen by the club because of their ability to lead and to follow well, and also because of their social interest in ballroom dancing

After Christmas the Cotillion members will entertain their new taps with a formal banquet, the plans for which have not yet been completed Initiation will be held soon after the girls return from Christmas vacations.

Campus Cuties Pursue Childhood Pastime in Scholastic Fashion

"Hangman" Haunts Girls Who Shake in Dread Of Fatal Seven

If you see the heads of any of our femina perfecta bent in a studious, intent circle over a scrap of paper do not be alarmed at the phenomenon. They are not solving a complicated mathmatical problem, nor are they getting up a petition for bigger and better spinach. They are simply indulging in a game that has seen its renaissance on the campus in the last few weeks—"hangman", the delight of our not-so-far-distant childhood.

The uninformed may be glad to know that "hangman" is a sport easily mastered even by the most unerudite. It consists of the drawing of a gallows with blanks underneath it representing letters of a word. The gloating "hangman" alone knows the word while the unfortunate victim writhes in agony and stubs his mental toes attempting to fill in the blanks by guessing letters. In proportion as he guesses or misses the blanks are filled in or his image is drawn upon the "gallows."

Seven is the fatal number that constitutes a "hanging." Many are the highly rated I. Q's who have bitten their fingernails when only the noose, the seventh and fatal guess, remained.

Once addicted to the pastime there is no escaping. Fanatics rush across rooms with a wild gleam in their eyes to try a "word" on a former hanger in order to obtain sweet revenge or excrucisting disappointment for her own ignominious "hanging." Even the dining room is not immune from the disease. Whole tables hang upon the mental strivings of the word-hunter predicting her fate and giving her "hints."

Campus professors are rapidly becoming aware of this new classroom pest. Huddled heads in the corner of the room indicate the pursuit of the intricacies of the game Some loyal followers of the game even insist that it would be an excellent way for their professors to review them for tests

Even between classes the game must go on—up the steps and through the crowded halls. The latest greeting, "I have a word for you!" has almost replaced the once familiar, "H'ya toots?" in popularity.

Probably the supreme incident in the life career of the "hangman" on this campus, however, was reached in the din and clamor following Even night-out when one fanatic rushed up to another fanatic and shouted in her ear "I have a word for you!"

Editor Sets Deadline For Distaff Material

Sarah Krentzman, editor of the Distaff, requests that all material for the next issue of the Distaff be handed in before December 10.

Material may be brought either to 339 Gilchrist or to the Distaff box located on the lower floor of the Administration building, according to Sarah.

Manning Talks at AAUW Meet

Explains Legal Status Of Florida Women In Address

As guest speaker before the AAUW forum at Ruge hall, Wednesday night, Miss Zoe Manning of Tallahassee, first vice-president of the Florida Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs, explained the legal status of women in Florida and the work the organization which she represents is doing to improve woman's status.

To illustrate the point that women in Florida are seriously handicapped legally, Miss Manning said the legal status of women in this state today is on a basis with that of women in England before the American revolution.

Miss Manning in her talk quoted several laws from the statute books to clarify woman's position in this state:

"Women can not serve on a jury; married women can not make contracts without the consent of their husbands; a married woman can buy but can not dispose of or encumber property without the consent of her husband; a married woman can only terminate her husband's control of her property by law; a woman loses individual rights completely upon marriage and is considered as a part of her husband; a father's claim to children is given preference over the claim of the mother; a single woman is considered an infant until the age of twenty-one."

Recently, several steps have been accomplished toward feminine equality with men. The homestead exemption act recognizes a woman as the owner of a home whether or not she is the head of a family. Formerly the woman had to be the head of the family to be considered the legal owner of her home. Women have been recognized politically recently by the passing of a bill which allows equal representation of men and women on the state democratic executive committee.

To further improve woman's status in Florida, Miss Manning stated that the state board of the Florida Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs plans to sponsor a bill in the next session of the legislature for the complete emancipation of women, whether married or single, and to place them on an equality with men of the business world, economically, politically and legally.

This forum was sponsored by the legislative committee of the American Association of University Women. Dr. Katherine T. Abbey, chairman of the committee, introduced the speaker.

Students Acquire First-Hand Principals of Home Managing

Home Economics Majors May Test Theories In Practical Situation in House But Short Distance from Campus Hub-Bub

By JANE QUINN

Home management, which the late Calvin Coolidge called "the most important industry in America," is more than a matter of theory as taught at Florida State College for Women.

Those students majoring in home economics learn first-hand the principles of home making at the "home management" house where they are required to live several weeks taking turns at being manager, hostess, cook, maid and so on. All this is done entirely according to scientific management.

On the campus but a short distance away from the hub-bub of classes is this cosy dwelling where the students may test in a practical situation theories of home management and group living with Miss Mildred Ann Long as resident director

Florida State College's home management house has something unique—a home manager's office. This place is to the home management house what the more commonly known office is to the business firm. At the home manager's office, which Miss Mary Rokahr, national specialist in the extension field of home management, says is the only one of its kind in the country, records are kept consolidating the information which the average homemaker keeps "in her head" or scattered about in the nearest available spots.

The house on the Florida State College campus will accommodate a family of seven persons. Of English architecture, Elizabethan era, it presents a distinctive appearance to the passer-by. The house, two stories high, has a basement and attic. Construction on this campus home was started in 1926, R. Weaver supervising the plans. The building, which, with equipment, cost $22,500, was opened for residence March 2, 1928. Since that time 250 persons have lived there. There is an average of 650 visitors a year, including members of home demonstration clubs, high school classes, friends and relatives of students and out of state guests on the campus.

On the first floor are the spacious living room, the dining room, living quarters of the resident director, a terrace, the kitchen and pantry. Upstairs there are three

FSCW Classics Department to Honor Horace

First Annual Meeting Of Florida Association Here Saturday

DR. LIPSCOMB IS GUEST LECTURER

Dr. Olivia Dorman Heads Group Installed By Latin Honorary

The classical department of Florida State College will act as hostess tomorrow at the first annual meeting of the Classical Association of Florida.

The program will feature the part the Florida Classical association is to play in the world-wide celebration of the bimillenium of the birth of Horace. The chief speaker of the day will be Dr. Herbert C. Lipscomb, national lecturer, and head of the classic department at Randolph-Macon College, Lynchburg, Virginia.

Association Founded in 1935

The Classical Association of Florida was founded April 13, 1935 by members and alumnae of Eta Sigma Phi, national classical honorary. The purpose of the association is to promote interest in the study of the classics among students in the colleges, universities, and secondary schools.

Members of the association include teachers of Greek and Latin in colleges and high schools of Florida, and the members of the Florida State College chapter of Eta Sigma Phi.

Dr. Olivia Dorman, professor of clasics and dean of students is president of the association. Other officers are the following alumnae: Martha Brodmerkle of Jacksonville, vice-president; Virginia Earle of Sanford, secretary; and Louise Goodbread of Palmetto, treasurer.

Morning Session

The morning session of the day's program will begin with a business meeting at 9:30 in room 103 of the library. A panel discussion on the aids for promoting the classics will take place at this meeting.

Dr. Lipscomb will give an illustrated lecture on "The Villas of Horace" at 11:30 in the Augusta Conradi theater. His lecture will be followed with luncheon at 1 o'clock in the Three Torches tearoom for the members of the association.

The afternoon session will begin at 2:30 in the Broward club

Play to Depict Life of Brontes

Three Performances Of "Moor Born" Given

The play, "Moor Born," which will be presented by the speech department Tuesday, December 10, and Friday and Saturday December 13 and 14, is of universal interest because of its historical characters, the Brontes.

There has always been much speculation about this family of the Yorkshire Moors. How could such an isolated group of persons with apparently no contacts with the outer world write such novels as "Jane Eyre" and "Wuthering Heights?" What subtle effort was exerted by the moor upon the emotions of these young girls? These questions are answered in the play, "Moor Born," by the author, Dan Totheroh.

There has been much written in recent years about these tragic sisters. Many dramatists have made studies of their characters, but this play, produced last year in New York by the Theatre Guild is considered one of the best.

The novels of the Bronte sisters are familiar in every classroom. "Jane Eyre" by Charlotte Bronte, the eldest, was given the highest praise and recognition by her contemporaries. Present day critics have given that distinction to "Wuthering Heights" by Emily Bronte.

Because of the unusual length of the play, the curtain will rise promptly at 8:15 p. m. Tickets are being sold by students of the speech department, and the price of admission is forty cents.

Mr. Mendenhall, college engineer, has been added to the cast. Many will remember his performance in "Symphony in Two Flats" which was presented by the speech department in 1932.

Collegiate Or Garish; How Is Your Den?

Campus Room Decoration Heedless of World Remain Same

Room decorations on the campus of Florida State college are divided into three classes or types.

The first may be called the garish or copied-from-Chanel kind. This variety requires long weeks of mood-cultivation and survey from odd points (e. g. worm's eye view) in the first weeks of occupation. Then follows a siege of painting and furniture-prodding to make it assume that cold austere look that Shearer sets affect.

The first step in decorating in this manner is the selection of the plainest cubicle available with the vaguest type furniture. The cue is then to cover up as much as possible with melancholy blacks and virgin whites, to buy a shiny black bowl and fill it with white flowers (for the right effect, ignore daisies and periwinkles) and put it in the most conspicuous place, say under one's toothbrush or next to the mop.

You have to ignore the floor unless you want to spend the first week-end out in the hall. The beds can be swathed in glamorous velveteen (canvas, if you're broke) with startling cushions of off reds and greens, aimed with great concentration so as to make them settle carelessly, giving an unsteady effect. If pictures are desired, one must select these ultra-ultra off-proportion blobs with collections of disjoined figures stretching toward a thankfully distant goal.

These are placed to advantage behind the trunk, or maybe right up on the wall if you're out of your room a good deal. To blend harmoniously with the rest of this "merrie" little home, the lamps are preferably of the shapeless, lumpen type. A sort of inverted cuspidor effect with the light sneaking out from sundry holes in the framework. These are placed on the table, because there's really no

Program Will Be Presented

'Stars Night Out' is Given; Proceeds to Be Used For Delegates

In order that more delegates may be sent to the twelfth Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement at Indianapolis, December 28 to January 1, a program, "Stars' Night Out" will be given Friday night in the college auditorium at 7:30.

The program, which is being sponsored by the ways and means committee appointed by the president of the student senate of which Lucy Gee Linn is chairman, has an admission of 10 cents.

Florida State College's quota is eleven delegates, according to Lucy Gee, and if enough money is raised to send three more, the quota will be filled as eight other girls are already planning to go. Of these, Frances Lewis, Elizabeth Kirby-Smith, Virginia Northcutt, Sara Nance, Lillie McGuire, and Janice Borton will finance their own trip.

The University of Florida is sending twenty delegates, who have chartered a bus to take them to this convention. The girls from here are also planning to go together.

Peggie McMichael will act as mistress of ceremonies. Some of the outstanding talent on campus will be brought to light during this program. Josephine Binion will sing and dance. Beckey Ashton will give a reading and Edna Yacobian will sing. Mary Carson and Sara Knight, two performers of Even demonstration, will do another "Raggedy Ann dance." There will also be an Organ number during the evening. A trio composed of Josephine Binion, Marjorie Tillis, and Mary Jeanne McKay will sing several popular numbers. Viola Brooks will tap dance.

To raise the necessary funds to send three more delegates at least 1000 people should attend, according to Lucy Gee Linn, chairman, who urges that the student body cooperate to make "Stars' Night Out" a success.

Members of the ways and means committee are Martha Makemson, Doris McKenzie, Carol Parabee, Marjorie Raulerson, Hilda Spradlin, Anna Glen, Lucy Gee Linn, and Sarah Krentzman.

Modern Dance Forms Shown

Demonstration to Further Appreciation of Art Given Wednesday

Something new in the art of dancing will be shown when the Modern Dance classes give a demonstration of their class work Wednesday afternoon at 5:00 in the big gymnasium. Miss Nellie Dickinson, the instructor, wishes to further the understanding and appreciation of the Modern Dance and will explain the movements demonstrated before the program and before each study.

The performance is not a finished recital; it is instead, a group of informational rather than spectacular studies. The dances were created as a result of class problems, the two best interpretations of the problems being selected by the class and presented to show how the same composition may be treated differently by different persons.

Of special interest too is a comparison of the Modern Dance with better known forms of the dancing art. There is a wide acquaintance with ballet dancing, characterized by set steps danced to specific music In the history of the Dance this form was followed by romantic dancing in which there were no set steps and the emotionalizing was done more by the artist than by the audience. Natural dancing came next with its movements based on natural movements but the subjects of its moods limited to gaity or pity. The Modern Dance is attempting to increase both the range of its movements and the scope of its subjects to be danced.

Among the studies on the program will be simple rhythmic dances showing the fundamental movements; a dance in which the same rhythmic pattern is repeated ten times but varied in movement each time by a change in relationship between partners; a group dance giving the feeling of a folk-dance; another group dance demonstrating the development of one movement increasing in dynamics and scope. Original compositions will also have a place on the program.

In the spring the Modern Dance classes plan to present this same type of program in a more advanced form. According to Miss Dickinson, those attending this demonstration will be more apt to understand and appreciate the spring presentation.

Those participating in the Modern Dance demonstration are: Minna Agress, Caroline Athon, Patty Barringer, Jean Bitner, Caroline Blount, Mary Boatwright, Beverly Brown, Juanita Buchanan, Doris Butler, Mary Ruth Clayton, Dorothy Colburn, Marian Conn, Fay Corey, Beth Daane, Elaine Davis, Mary Louise DaGunther, Margaret Delaney, Florence Divine, Mildred Emmelhainz, Charlotte Engstrom, Myrna Frink, Virginia Godwin, Josephine Gordon, Helen Hall, Patricia Hamilton, Marie Harrison, Esther Hay, Dorothy Hill, Valerie Hunt, Jean Jackson, Carol Jones, Elsie Kersie.

College Council Adopts In Full Recommendations For Fee Proration

ACTIVITY FUND IS DIVIDED IN HALF

Rates for Athletics And Classes Are Reduced; Others Increased

The report and recommendations of the budget committee of the college council which were presented to the college council yesterday for consideration and approval have been adopted in full by that body, according to Evelyn Kennard, chairman of the budget committee.

The work of the committee which is included in this report is three-fold in character. It includes a survey of the activities covered by the student activity fee and a reorganization of the distribution thereof, the proration of the fee, and the approving of the annual budgets presented by the various organization heads. Although the proration of the fee made for 1935-1936 is complete the committee will continue its work, looking toward a more equitable distribution for next year, according to the report.

Objectives of Committee

The committee saw as its objectives the investigation of financial needs of student organizations, the investigation of the justification of requests for changes in rates, the re-proration, according to contribution to campus life, of that portion of the student activity fee alloted to student organizations, and last, the revision of budgets submitted for 1935-1936 on the basis of the funds now available.

In explanation of the third objective the report shows that the student activity fee is divided from the start into two distinct parts The first part, which is used for artist series, special speakers social funds, supplies, for stage and student performances, and the recreation fund, is expended under the direction of the executive council of the college. The second part of the fund which amounts to $7.222 per capita was that part placed under the administration of the budget committee this year.

Recommendations Are Made

The recommendations made by the committee in its report are as follows:

The freshman class shall have its fee rate reduced from .142 to .0938. The sophomore rates shall be reduced from .16 to .125. The present junior rate of .249 shall be reduced to .1345. The senior clas srate shall be reduced from .446 to .375. The Women's Athletic association fee rate shall be reduced from .875 to .80.

The following increases in rates hava been recommended and adopted: C. G. A. from .75 to .93, and Distaff from .60 to .70.

The budget committee recommended that no awards, prizes, or gifts with the exception of that to Dr. Edward G. Salley Attends Meet In Atlanta Recently

Dr. Nathaniel Moss Salley, dean of the School of Education, attended the conference on "Education and Race Relations" held in Atlanta last week-end. Dean Salley was invited as an honor guest to the meeting of the executive committee on this problem.

Outlining their work for the approaching summer the committee made plans for possible summer courses for teachers at various places in the south. These courses will be from three to five weeks in length. Several other courses of a week's length will be held for executive and administrative officers.

The trend of the conference, according to Dean Salley, showed an increasing interest in the education of teachers on the problem of "Education and Racial Relations."

"What Does College Do to Beliefs?" Asked the Student Who Found Out

Interviews Reveal Campus Attitude Toward Church-going

By MARTHA BAKER

The subject of the college girl's religion is over-worked and abused in every college newspaper, magazine, and bull session all over the collegiate world but nevertheless I am going to describe a phase of it as I have found it through the experience of living in a college dormitory.

The question is just what is the attitude of the majority of college students to the Bible? I did a little research on the matter just for curiosity. I decided to see how far I could go before I would find a Bible in an upperclassman's room. I started down the hall, room by room, beginning with my own. Each room was occupied by two people at least and in some cases three. I went into seven rooms before I finally came across one student who knew where I could get one!

You open your mouth in disbelief—so did I, but there the bald truth stands. Is that an indication of lack of faith in God, in the Bible, or in religion as a whole? Personally I don't think it is—I think it is more an indication of indifference. Almost every one of the girls I approached went to church spasmodically, when she had the time and the inclination both at the same instant, but I can't say aye or nay as to whether or not she felt any sincere devotion or reverence when she performed that act. It strikes me if she did however, it was a very superficial reverence. I feel a great deal more respect for the one girl I ran across who neither had a Bible nor went to church than I did for any of the rest. I asked her whether she considered herself an atheist or whether she actually did have some form of religion other than that of reading the Bible and going to church.

"Yes," she replied, "I do. My religion has always been a mystery to me but it satisfies me, nevertheless. Sunday mornings my roommate goes to church; she dresses very particularly and I stand by and remark how she looks and whether her make-up is on straight or not; she rushes around finding someone who can change a dime into two nickles so she can contribute to the collection 'because it's so embarrassing when he passes the plate and I haven't anything with me' and finally she is off to church. Everything being quieted down and peaceful I turn on the radio to a symphony orchestra or the Capitol theater program sit down with a letter to write or some stockings to darn, and the radio and I have our session. The music is lovely; the atmosphere is quiet and peaceful; my whole sensation is one of relaxation and enjoyment of the marvelous beauty of the music and the day You may think this a peculiar form of Sunday worship but to me it is all that is necessary and I have no fears of going to hell in consequence."

Naturally, I didn't think she was going to hell; furthermore I knew she was going to heaven if anyone did, for her sincerity was so piercing and her feeling so beautiful that it stirred me in spite of my resolution to go at this thing in a hard, matter-of-fact way.

There was another group of girls I stumbled on, though, that messed everything up, for where was I to classify them? That was the group who run the prayer meetings held every Thursday night in one of the rooms. They are the girls that diligently get up every Wednesday morning at 6:30 to attend Y. W. C. A. worship service meetings. They are the girls that go to religious conferences and aren't attractive enough for anyone to accuse them of going for a chance to meet another cute boy or for a chance to wear a new wardrobe; no, they go with a desire for something—I wouldn't be one to define what it is. Is their religion a retreat from the world of material things they will never acquire? Is it purely a result of childhood training and environment? Or is it, as many claim it to be a fanaticism similar, though in a lesser degree, to that of Aimie McPherson?

Be that as it may the question immediately arises is this or any form of religion necessary to a student in college? Does she need some form of sustenance? Are the facts that are being taught in the colleges today of such a devastating nature as to necessitate the prescribed religious activities "to keep the poor students from going mad"? I think the idea that the colleges are tearing down all the faith and devotion of its students is tommyrot. Furthermore, I think the claim that all college students are forced to undergo a period of rigid readjustment to religion is tommyrot.

Of all the students I questioned about the lack of a Bible not one of them blamed the college. Is it fair to say that the answer that they are too busy or interested in some other hobby is due to the influence of the college? I don't think it is. It strikes me that lack of interest in religion and growth of interest in some other field is a natural development of the person concerned and I think the varied conditions of student faith as represented in every college is a testimony to that fact. If the majority of college students felt a definite, fixed contempt for religion and its teaching perhaps it would be just to lay that condition at the feet of the college. But the fact stands that a group of them are fanatical in their faith; another group owns a Bible which it seldom reads but goes to church regularly: another group doesn't have a Bible but goes to church spasmodically: another group neither has a Bible nor goes to church but has a personal form of worship; another group has no Bible, has no personal worship, and attends no church. That last group is the group by which the world is judging the college student and that judgment is unfair and the result of ignorance.

I talked to one freshman who said she went to Christian Endeavor regularly when she was home but took no further part or interest in it now. For a minute I thought I was stumped—I thought—"here is the student the opposing forces are speaking of" but I stopped long enough to ask her why and then the truth was out. It seems at Christmas she joyfully returned to the society with hopes of getting back into the run of things for a couple of weeks but they got into a discussion and she stood up and gave her views on the subject, views she had had since she had first begun to think about anything. The leader of the meeting was an older member and perhaps a bit superior; he remarked immediately following her talk, which was in direct opposition to his conception, that college students had a tendency to get upset in their ideas the first year or so but after consideration and time they began to get a more balanced outlook.

"It was a little enough thing," she said, "but it served to sew things up for me People take it for granted that after you go to college you can't think straight or talk straight, and if they aren't willing to hear I'm not willing to try to help."

And there I felt sure I was on the right track. Perhaps the fault lay not with the college student any more than with the church itself and with the whole method of presenting things. A student does learn in college not to accept everything she hears without a second thought, and if that is what the churches are objecting to under cover perhaps the student is not so wrong in creating or not creating her own religion as she chooses. Perhaps she is right in feeling that religion, as it is offered today, a cramming of personal viewpoints down one's throat with a little honey added to help it slip, is not what she's after, and furthermore is not necessary to her life.

Art On Exhibit Next Thursday

To Include Work of Many College Students In United States

An exhibition of student art work from colleges and universities of all sections of the United States will be held Thursday, December 12-19 in the Art Browsing room, 302 Administration building, according to Mrs. Beatrice Beyer Williams, professor of art.

As a part of the third biennial exhibition sent out by the College Art association, this exhibit will include work from Smith college, Vassar, Yale university, Wellesley college, University of Iowa, University of Kentucky, University of Nebraska, North Western university, Texas State College for Women, University of South Carolina, Brown university, and other colleges.

Four other exhibitions will be held during the year, according to Mrs. Williams, the first of which is an exhibition of thirty-five modern prints, including etchings, lithographs and block prints, to be held February 4-20.

Chinese textiles from the collection of Helen Burton will be exhibited March 4-10.

Oils from various countries showing the development of genre painting, including seventeenth century Dutch and Flemish masters, early eighteenth century French, German, and Italian paintings, and the subsequent development of genre painting in the United States will be on exhibit March 25-April 2.

An international exhibition of twenty pieces of sculpture will be held April 8-15.

Will Give Talk on Horace

Dr. Herbert C. Lipscomb, head of the classical department at Randolph-Macon college in Lynchburg, Va., will be the guest speaker at the first annual meeting of the Classical association of Florida, which will be held on the campus tomorrow with the members of the Florida State classical department officiating as hostesses.

room with a panel discussion on the methods employed in teaching Latin in Florida. Among the speakers on this part of the program are Dr. Malcolm MacLaren, professor of classics at Rollins college, and Miss Vera Dumas of the St. Petersburg junior college.

Tea in Broward Lounge

At the conclusion of the business meeting, members of Eta Sigma Phi will honor the Classical association with a tea, to be held in Broward lounge.

A special feature of the day's program is the Horatian dinner to be held at 6 o'clock at the Floridan hotel with members of the association attending.

A lecture on "Horace's Friend, Vergil" will be given by Dr. Lipscomb at 8:15 in the Augusta Conradi theater. The general public, especially the students and faculty of the college, has been invited to attend both of Dr. Lipscomb's lectures.

At 9:30 a reception in Gilchrist parlor will be given by the classics deprtment in honor of Dr. Lipscomb and the Clasical association. Guests will include members of the faculty, representatives of all honorary fraternities, and students of the classics department.

College or Garish; How is Your Den?

other place. All in all, the finished room has a pleasant look, like a morgue, or France during the Revolution.

The second popular type is the Collegiate. The most distinguishing feature of this interior decorator's headache is the string of drunkenly-hung college pennants that streak the walls. A motley assortment, bearing names and colors ranging from Notre Dame to Ojus Reform School, class of (?). This room always has a collection of china animals, including the calico cat and the big, bad wolf.

Another stock decoration is the leather-framed Gable; the one with the open shirt and the pipe and a look very open-air and sporting. The cushions are generally of the lace and silk kind with an occasional long-legged doll, sort of Crawford-eyed. The lamp is one that resembles an inverted Gibson Girl, with a lot of petticoat showing These may be secured in the more offensive shares of pink, but some pretty vile blue are available, too. For the rug, as Cole Porter once said, anything goes.

The third and last type is the Conservative. This, of the three, is the most frequently encountered on the campus Matching curtains, bedspreads, rugs, toothbrush holders, lampshades, pictures, and dustpan, in fact, everything matches beautifully, even the roommates, and you know, my dress with your hat . . . etc. The trunks standing in the corner of the room are modestly enveloped in cretonnes. There is one surreptitious sticker across the mirror, sharing the rose-color spot with a picture of the boy of her regrets, whose charm must lie entirely in his personality, because anybody can see he has a waistline like a penguin. Brain maybe, not brawn.

Every year different girls, different styles, and yet the same old room decorations. Watch for them.

Library Shows Twain Exhibit

Includes Poetry Written To Young Sweetheart And Old Books

A new exhibit, "The Mark Twain Centennial Exhibit," in honor of the hundredth anniversary of Mark Twain's birthday, November 30, is offered this week by the library.

Much of the material which makes up the exhibit was obtained from Hannibal, Missouri, birthplace of the famous American humorist, Mark Twain. The exhibit is composed of three parts, all of which contain interesting material on the life and writings of Mark Twain.

The first part is made up of pictures, books, and magazines pertaining to the Mississippi river which is the scene of the author's childhood as well as the setting for many of his most familiar books. In this part of the exhibit are an original pilot's license for navigation on the Mississippi, a facsimile of the author's own license, and early editions of two of Mark Twain's outstanding books of travel—"Roughing It" and "Innocents Abroad."

The second part of the exhibit is composed of a special edition of the "Hannibal Journal" which is devoted entirely to the life and writings of Mark Twain, favorite books written by him, facsimiles of a letter he wrote to the editor of the "Hannibal Courier" at the beginning of his journalistic career and a poem he wrote to his youthful sweetheart, as well as other interesting articles and pictures about his life.

The third part of the centennial exhibit is composed of pictures of the "Mark Twain Memorial" at Hannibal Missouri, pictures taken from the movie film, "Tom Sawyer," and a few of the latest books published about the well known humorist. One particularly interesting looking book is "A Lifetime with Mark Twain," the material for which was obtained from tales told by a faithful old servant of Twain's. Other newer books shown in the exhibit are Mark Twain's Notebook and Mark Twain's America.

Hockey-Soccer Season Opened; Odd and Even Practice Times Given

The hockey-soccer season is here again. The overwhelming show of the Even Spirits during Thanksgiving games should bring every loyal Odd who can handle a ball out to practice for the team. The Evens, victors in basketball and volleyball, will have to work to keep their supremacy, and will also need all their earnest men and true.

Odd practice begins Monday, under the supervision of Marion Lessey for the soccer, and Marion Weeks, hockey. The practices are held on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 4:30 and Saturday at 9:30.

Even practice will start Tuesday. Frances Lewis will supervise soccer and Frances Thill, hockey. Practices will be held on Tuesday and Thursday at 4:30, on Friday at 3:30 and on Saturday at 10:30.

Sixty-Seven "Families" of Sisters Making their Home on the Campus

"Just one big happy family," say some of Florida State College for Women. Yet few have stopped to realize that there are sixty-seven real families among the students on this campus.

Tallahassee and Miami are the cities most representative of families, each having eight pairs of sisters in college.

An interesting fact concerning these families is that all of them except the Detrick family, Anne, Dorothy, and June of Tallahassee, contain two members.

Other families from Tallahassee include Donie Lee and Eleanor Cotten, Montine and Irene Foster. Lula Bell and Lola Dell Hopkins, Edith and Mildred Hurst, Geneva and Lorre Lamb, and Mary and Ruth Myrick.

Families from Miami include Betty and Dorothy Ash, Elizabeth and Mary Beach, Angela and Elizabeth Griley, Martha and Sara Hosea, Dorothea and Eleanor Ruff, Clarice and Anna Laure Sanchez, Sarah and Etta Virginia Turner, and Anita and Sally Walder.

From Jacksonville come five families: Jean and Margaret Blount, Edith and Ruth Dickson, Betty and Mary Manning, Betty and Violet Peck, and Mabel and Margaret Rogers.

Other families include Margaret and Mary DeGuenther, Margaret and Sara Tyler, Grace and Sue Whitaker, Adeline and Sara Tillman, and Dorothy and Louise Hill from Tampa.

Pauline and Eileen Arnold, Elizabeth and Martha Flake, from Quincy; Jessie and Margaret Melvin, Dorothy and Mary Katherine Scott from Winter Haven Irene and Maxine Braverman, Anna and Jean Tilden from Orlando; Anne and Josephine Bowen, Anna Love and Margie Glen from Chipley; Virginia and Patty Hamilton, Mary and Emily Whiting from Lakeland; Elizabeth and Helen Murray from Ocala; Gladys and Bernice Oliver from Marianna; Ortrude and Melba Park from Fort Lauderdale; Jenny and Joyce Reed from Tarpon Springs Elizabeth and Jean Root from Okeechobee; Miriam and Mary Sadler from Winter Garden.

Caroline and Marguerite Athor from Bradenton; Mary Alice and Ruth Barker from Newberry Mary and Marshlea Cottingham from Madison; Jane Hill and Jen Hill Crook from Bartow; Harriet and Virginia Duke from Gainesville; Ruth and Nina Howard from Dade City; Marie and Thelma Spurlock from Callahan Evelyn and Mary Stump from Starke; Lillian and Virginia Toffaletti from Port Tampa Clara Bell and Eugenia Trimble from Lake Jem; Eloise and Matilda Trott from Clearwater Helen and Edith Webb from Mandarin, and Edna and Vivian Williams from Havana.

Burks, Henry, and Breen Attend Meet in Athens

Dr. Margie Burks, associate professor of Spanish, was elected chairman of the Spanish section at the annual meeting of the regional division of the Modern Language association held in Athens, Georgia, last Friday and Saturday.

Representatives from here included, Mrs. Dorothy Breen, assistant professor of Spanish and French; Miss Mildred Henry, assistant professor of English; and, Dr. Margie Burks.

The meeting was devoted to the discussion of language teaching problems. Four conference sections in English, Spanish, French, and German were in session.

Among the social events of the conference was a banquet given Friday night for all those in attendance.

Test of Hearing Given Students

Audiometer Used to Find And Record Defects

A test for hearing is being given to all students of Florida State College, according to Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel. An audiometer has been secured for a limited time from the State Rehabilitation department for this purpose.

The test is being given in room 412 Education building to twenty-five students at a time. Each student has been sent a notice of her eppointment by the Personnel office. The test is intended for the benefit of all the students in order to enable those who have defective hearing to get individual tests and determine the defect.

The test is given with records and ear-phone attachments. The record gives degrees in tones, and those taking the test record whether they hear the tones or not.

This test has been given recently in all the Tampa schools and has been brought here as an outcome of the class in lip-reading conducted by Mrs. Elizabeth Chambless of Miami. If there is a demand for the course by those who have defective hearing and wish to learn lip-reading, the course will be taught again next year.

Students Acquire Home Managing

comfortable oedroome and a bathroom. Ample closet room is available upstairs and downstairs.

The primary purpose of the home management house is to provide a center for training the seniors in home economics in the fundamentals of home making and in the arts of social intercourse. Incidentally it provides a center for the social activities of the students in the school of home economics, of the following nature: at-homes to other students; teas for professional visitors; after-dinner coffee to class members and guests; Home Economics club formal reception to new students in the fall; and entertaining as house guests distinguished visitors to the college.

Special training is given in the use of money, time, energy and equipment at the model home where emphasis also is placed on the problems of group living and social intercourse.

The home management course, required of all senior home economics majors, includes two hours of group conference per week and a laboratory period which consists of thirty-six days residence in the house. Students stay in the house in groups of six. During one school term five different groups live here. Students serve in succession as manager, whose work is regarded as the most difficult, the assistant manager, the head cook, assistant cook, maid, and assistant maid. The relation between successful performance of various household tasks and the achievement of a satisfactory home life is studied.

The employment of a variety of labor-saving devices makes it possible to do the work in the most efficient and interesting manner. Some of the electric equipment used in the home management house includes a range, refrigerator, dishwasher, mangle and washing machine, a vacuum cleaner and attachments, a hot water automatic tank, and such smaller equipment as a percolator, toaster, mix master and waffle toaster.

An item that doubtless will cause pangs of envy to the other college girls is the revelation thet student residents have waffles every Sunday morning. Each student arises at her own pleasure, prepares her own breakfast, and may invite a friend to enjoy waffles with her.

The students who have the privilege of living in the home management house really have fun, they say, but admit it is a lot of work and that it keeps them fairly busy. Whenever they get into a "fix" they feel free to turn to the director for advice. The present resident director is a new member of the faculty and is taking the place of Miss Leila Venable during her nine-month leave of absence. Miss Long obtained her master's degree at Columbia and formerly taught at Brenau college.

A tour of inspection of the home management house makes one feel that the goals for which the students of home economics are striving have certainly been attained. There is an atmosphere of general efficiency, goodwill and freedom there. The home management house attempts to set desirable standards for beauty and comfort for the family and its members at a reasonable cost in effort, time and money.

"Nothing Ever Happens"

Seniors Disagree With This Favorite Remark Of Sophisticated College Youth as They Relive Thrilling Moments

"Nothing ever happens on this campus to be thrilled about" was a remark which was heard one morning when an exceedingly grumpy junior listened in on a senior's tale of the most thrilling moment of her college life.

The seniors, however, have very definite and vivid recollections of their most thrilling moments and seem to be sad at having to leave dear old Alma Mater and its exciting experiences for their coming battle with the hard, cold world. They all agreed that the biggest thrill is yet to come—the thrill of receiving their hard-worked-for diplomas on commencement day. They readily fell into a reminiscing mood, however, and eagerly told many of the thrilling experiences they have had during the four years they have been at the Florida State College for Women.

Carol Farabee was a sophomore sister two years ago and was so impressed and moved by the commencement service that she decided to stick it out two more years so that she could take part in this service again.

Being elected to hold major offices on the campus seems to be the biggest moments of many of the seniors' lives. Caroline Oliver stated most emphatically thet last year when she was elected president of the senior class she had the biggest thrill she has had in her whole life. Her roommate, Janet Grifflitts, made vague allusions to a certain week-end in Gainesville as her most thrilling moment, but finally decided that the time during her college life when she felt the most honored and the most important was 'way back in her freshman year when she was elected secretary of the college government association. Not that she hasn't had thrills and plenty of them since then, but she readily declares that none as yet can compare to that incident four years ago.

Grace Mary Webster admitted that the first time she went home her freshman year was the greatest of all thrills for her. She added, however, thet the greatest thrill for her in academic college work was when she handed in term papers which required much study, research and thinking and received constructive criticism as well as a good grade in return.

When, on a dismal, rainy Sunday afternoon of her freshman year, Audrey Smith suddenly ,saw her sister, whom she hadn't seen for six years, walk into her room she became so excited that she hasn't gotten over it yet.

Edith Webb and Lillian Turlington agree thet when they were tapped for Mortar Board they lived the happiest moment of their college lives. Lucy Houser's big moment in her two and a half years on this campus was when, in her junior year, she was initiated into her sorority and could leave the dormitory forever.

Strange as it may seem, the election last year of Katherine Blood and Margaret Graham to the offices of president of the student body and chairman of judiciary respectively are not the most thrilling moments in the lives of these two girls. Margaret says thet her moment came in her sophomore year when a skit in which she took a part won the prize at skit night. Kitty thinks that the moment of supreme joy she experienced in her sophomore year when Mr. J. G. Kellum consented to accept citrus fruit in payment for her board and room can never be surpassed, not even by election to the highest office on the campus.

Margaret Milton has had two equally thrilling times in her college career. Last year when, after she had missed a quarter of school following an automobile accident, she found out she was well enough to return was the first one. It was quickly followed by the second when she learned that she could make up her work easily and graduate with her own class after all.

Church Services to Be Held on Campus Every Third Sunday of Month

Y. W. C. A. of this college is making plans to have regular church services held in the college auditorium the third Sunday of every month, beginning February 18

The Religious Worker's council of this city has approved of this plan which will follow Religious Emphasis week held annually on the campus.

The main purpose of Y. W. C. A's. plan is to obtain ministers from all over the state who are interested in young people and in whom the students are interested, to conduct these interdenominational services on campus.

All students desiring to have any particular minister here to speak at one of the church services are asked to mail their suggestions to 8 Bryan by Saturday, December 7. The minister's name and address should be written on these suggestions.

Reproductions Are Now On Exhibit for Public

Reproductions showing the development of nineteenth century are now on exhibit in the Art Browsing room, 302 administration building. Although primarily for students of art history, the exhibit is open to the public.

These reproductions include works done by Watteau, Gainsborough, Corot, Rousseau, Cesgnne, Degas and Renoir.

Included in this exhibit are a few reproductions showing the quality of the sentimental, short-telling art.

activities are to be dropped from the publication budget.

Funds To Be Transferred

The committee further recommended that the funds for the junior-senior prom be transferred from the budget of the C. G. A. to that of the senior class and that funds for social activities for the entire student body not hitherto provided for be included in the budget of the C. G. A. to be administered by its social committee. These activities include a Thanksgiving dance and the mid-winter festival.

In regard to the College Government association budget the report recommended that the association be allowed to draw upon its balance as of July, 1935, whic hamounted to $482.62, to cover the deficit in its budget for the current year. This deficit is due to the fact, according to the report, that funds are inadequate by .2288 under the present proration rating. The committee also recommended that the entire cost of publication of the student handbook be met from the C. G. A. funds.

Pay-rolls are to be eliminated from any organizatoin which receibes the major part of its support from the student activity fee except for such stenographic work for C. G. A. as may be allowed in its budget. This latter provision was approved by the college council pending final approval by the executive council since this recommendatio nwould have the effect of rescinding actoin taken by that body.

Further Recommendations

The committee further recommended that funds needed for social and recreational activities of the entire student body be provided from the general recreation fund, and thet all organizations receiving funds from the student activity fee be required to keep accounts in such form as shall be set up by the chairman of the auditing committee.

In considering the proration of the fund this year the budget committee ha dat hand tentative reports submitted by the organizations concerned and revised budgets prepared with the approval of the faculty advisers of the respective organizations. Five hearings were held at which time the heads of the organizations were requested to appear to present their requests.

In making its decisions the committee made a study of all the budgets on the basis of the needs of the particular organization, its relation to campus life and the contribution made by it, and the relationship of the organizations to one another.

The budget committee is composed of nine members as follows:

Two seniors elected by the student senate, namely, Evelyn Kennard, chairman, and Audrew Smith, chairman of the auditing committee; three members from the student-body at large, being elected b ythe college council, one senior, Grace Wicks, and two juniors, Anna Glen and Jeannettee Annin; Miss Anna Mae Tracy, appointed by President Conradi from the faculty at large; Dr. eVnila L. Shores, being appointed fro mthe student affairs committee by the chairman of that body; Mr. J. G. Kellum, ex-officio member from the executive council by virtue of his office as business manager of the college; and Dean Olivia N. Dorman, who as chairman of the college council is an ex-officio member of all its committees. Neither of the ex-officio members cast votes in the acts of the committee.

Church Leaders On Visit Here

Will Conduct Classes On Religious Education Among Children

Miss Lena Smith, state director of religious education for the Presbyterian church arrived in Tallahassee Wednesday for a visit of ten days with the local church and the student league.

Miss Smith who has been here before, is particularly interested in the methods and materials of the church in the teaching of children. While here she is being entertained by Mrs. U. S. Deahl and the Presbyterian student league.

Wednesday evening in the church annex she gave an address on the opportunity for religious training in the home. Yesterday she conducted a class on "The Children We Teach." This was followed last evening at 7:30 o'clock by an after-dinner coffee in the Broward club room. Today from 5 until 8 o'clock and tomorrow she will again conduct classes in the History building.

Sunday evening at 8 o'clock during the regular fellowship hour at the Presbyterian church, Miss Smith will be the guest speaker and will talk of her visit and work among the missions of South America. Monday and Tuesday afternoons, December 8 and 10, she will again conduct classes in the History building starting at 5 o'clock. Her visit will be terminated Thursday afternoon when she will speak to the student league councils at 5:30 in room 506 Gilchrist hall on "Ways of Praying."

The annual Presbyterian Christmas vespers service will take place Sunday evening in the church at 7:45. As this candle-light service is considered one of the loveliest and most impressive of the year, everyone is urged to attend.

The annual Christmas vespers service presented by the Methodist student choir will also take place Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock in the Methodist church.

Bidding Opened On New Building

Other Additions Reported Doubtful by Officer

Bids for the new wing of the Administration building were opened at 11:30 a. m., December 4, in the office of Mr. Ross Watson, head of the Public Works Administration, Tallahassee branch.

No contracts were given, however, as the two bids considered exceeded the $90.000 appropriation set aside by the state and federal governments, Mr. Kellum, business manager of the college, revealed yesterday

The names of the firms bidding were not made public. The firms and the State Board of Control are working to see if some plan cannot be made whereby work may begin, as scheduled, on December 15.

Mr. Mendenhall, college architect, reported yesterday thet additions to the dining room and infirmary, and the erection of a new dormitory are very remote. According to the latest reports received from Washington, tentative plans on these projects have not been approved there to date.

Nursery Program Based Upon Recent Educational Theory

Andrews Heads Committe Which Directs Work Of School Group

Joyous childhood chatter—zzzz-zzzz bang! bang! And the visitor to the nursery school comes upon several young men of three and four deeply engrossed in the art of sawing a piece of wood, while others grit their teeth as they hammer their fingers and odd pieces of wood together in various and sundry angles. Not to be outdone in noise and enthusiasm the young ladies, attractive even through the faces of mudpies so dear to the heart of childhood, are vigorously riding bicycles, wagons and see-saws and romping gaily on the grass.

Oddly enough no adults seem to be directing or supervising this recreation, although they are seen hovering in the background. Still all goes along quite smoothly—this is a phase of the new educational theory, "freedom of expression in children."

The nursery school which is located on the south side of the campus in the Y. W. C. A. hut is under the direction of a college committee with Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews in charge, assisted by Dr. Dorothy Disher, who supervises the teaching, and Dr. Ruth Connor, supervisor of nutrition. Instructors in the school are Mrs. Richie and Miss Maribelle Smith, a former graduate of Florida State. Miss Mavis Clark, a member of the student body, is the PERA student assistant. Mrs. Thompson, a resident of Tallahassee, is now in training to take over the work of dietitian, following the resignation of Miss Margaret Biggs.

Children in the school are from the age of two to five. Some are from families on the local relief roll, while others are from homes where the mother finds it necessary to work and has no proper facilities for caring for the child while she is away. In the school there are eleven girls and nine boys. The children are brought to the nursery school in the school bus each morning at 9:30 and are returned to their homes in the same way at 2:30 in the afternoon.

The morning is devoted to free activity out of doors when the weather is favorable. Children learn how to develop their own play and social relationships with other children. At 10:30 rest period is held for the two-year-olds. At 11:15 all the toys are put in their proper places by the children themselves, and in this way they learn to cooperate with each other. Just before luncheon is story hour. This interesting event is conducted in several different ways. Occasionally the teachers entertain the youngsters, but more often the situation is reversed and the children not only tell stories which they have heard and which they have made up, but they also act out these childhood ditties, a fact which arouses much enthusiasm and creates great interest in this hour each day. This occasion has a threefold purpose—to encourage the children to pay attention, to gain information, and to help them to relax before mealtime.

Cleanliness is another important factor in the daily lives of these children. Each day before the noon meal each child washes his own face and hands. Clean towels and wash cloths are provided each day and are placed on the children's own personal hooks. The children distinguish their hooks and lockers from those of the others by different animals and flowers, each one having one for his own things.

Children are seated at the dinner table according to age and to the way they handle their knives and forks. The motto of the dinner table is "everyone eats everything." Immediately after dinner the children stack their own plates. Young as these kiddies are, few catastrophes with the dishes have been reported.

The purpose of the nursery school is to establish habits with a foundation for further adjustments. Since cleanliness, eating, sleeping and exercise are of primary importance special attention is given to the forming of serviceable habits and attitudes in these matters.

Guild Outlines Plans for Year

Leach, Compton and Long Represent Students

With its center of action on the campus, the Tallahassee branch of the American Guild of Organists is carrying forward a vigorous program this year, according to Margaret Whitney Dow, associate professor of organ and theory. Two meetings were held in November, and plans for a program of Christmas carols scheduled for performance this month are completed.

Included in the membership of the Guild are interested students, faculty, and residents of Tallahassee. Two types of members who make up the roster, Miss Dow said, are the national members, who are all organists themselves, and the auditor or subscriber members. The monthly meetings are planned to interest music lovers as well as accomplished musicians.

The officers of the Tallahassee chapter have been elected from the groups which are represented in the organization. Miss Margaret Whitney Dow, F. A. G. O., presides as regent of the Tallahassee branch, and is also dean of the state Guild. Mr. Walter Ruel Cowles, professor of theory is vice-regent, and Dorothy Leach is secretary. Jean Compton holds the capacity of treasurer. Virginia Long as assistant secretary represents the auditor group.

Aside from the meetings of the Guild a picnic given each spring is one of the outstanding features of the organization's calendar Representatives from the Tallahassee branch are sent to the annual state and national conventions of the F. A. G. O.

Trophy Won By Student

Marie Taylor, student instructor in horseback riding, won a blue ribbon and a silver trophy in the "open plantation" class at the Leon County Fair horse show.

She rode a horse owned by J. P. Love. The "open plantation" is a flat walk, a slow gait and a canter.

Marie and Audrey Cooper were entered in another part of the show which was called off as there were not enough competing.

Marie is giving classes in horseback riding and anyone interested may get more information by applying to her.

NSFA Appoints Two Delegates

Elect McKay and Graham To Attend Kansas City Convention

Mary Jeanne McKay and Margaret Graham were elected by the students present at NSFA forum Monday evening as the junior and senior delegates respectively to the NSFA convention in Kansas City, Missouri, from December 28 to January 1.

Preceding the election of delegates the regular forum meeting was held, which was opened with the introduction of Miss Sadie Young, newly appointed faculty adviser. "Women in Politics" was the topic of the discussion which followed, with Marjorie Harris introducing the speakers.

Daisy Parker offered a background for the discussion by giving a summary of the movements undertaken since 1800, to further the rights of women, before which date, women were regarded, even constitutionally, as personal property of men. These first movements were of a moral, anti-slavery, and temperance type.

"The psychology of women at that time", Daisy said, "was that they were the elevating power in society and they must come to the front". In closing her speech she offered the challenge that the Florida constitution still holds a clause that women can buy, sell, or hold property only with a husband.

The progress women have made was given in a resume of the political positions that women have held, among them being one cabinet member, twelve members of the House of Representatives, two senators and two governors.

Margaret Graham, in giving a talk on the advantages of having women in politics today said that if men alone were to control politics it is possible that many underlying evils would go unnoticed. According to her, two of the most outstanding women of today are Frances Perkins and Ruth Bryan Owen.

"The average woman's job is still in the home" stated Margaret, bringing her talk to a close, but she must be interested in taking part, an active part, in politics, in seeing that her government is improved. She has a vote, she must use it to select the best men and women to represent her."

Mary Irene McKay, the third speaker, pointed out the obstacles women must overcome, the main one of which to be tradition; that is, that woman's place is in the home. Seeing the type of woman, such as Carrie Nation, that unfortunately has been in the fore in the past, has put a definite type picture in the minds of men. Therefore she must conduct herself irreproachably under all conditions "Woman cannot plan to hide behind her skirts," said Mary Irene. "She can not expect to be on a pedestal. She must accept the single standard and not take advantage of her sex. Can she make such sacrifices to gain public office?"

America Can Say "Thumbs Down" To Olympics

Although strong sentiments against United States' participation in the 1936 Olympic games to be held in Berlin have been voiced by college newspapers throughout the country, it is considered likely, according to the Associated collegiate press, that the mass of American students, particularly student athletes, are in favor of entering the contest.

Prevailing opinion, they say, is that those groups opposed to United States' entrance are the most articulate. Such a conclusion in our estimation sounds rather foolish, especially since it is based on "snap" judgment rather than facts. If the majority of American students disagree with their editors, why don't they come out and say so? The opposition is certainly not afraid to put its thoughts into writing. In this group comes the Long Island newspaper.

When we have actual records of some of Germany's actions in regard to Jews it is indeed difficult to agree with Mr. Avery Brundage, president of the American Olympic association, who says that he finds nothing wrong because visitors in Germany have reported that they have received "courteous and hospitable treatment."

Early in August, 1935, according to a bulletin published by the Committee on Fair Play in Sports, Gretel Bergmann, Jewish high jumper who had won a high jump contest in Wuerttemberg was not permitted to compete in the national German field sport championship on the grounds that she was not a member of the German Light Athletic association. Non-Aryans are barred from membership in the association. And the fact that Germany has discarded the term Aryan from her vocabulary won't change the situation any either, for the name which tags a thing is relatively unimportant.

On August 19, 1935, signs reading "Jews are not admitted" appeared in the center of the city of Garmisch-Partenkirchen, site of the winter Olympic games, by order of the mayor of the municipality.

When the International Olympic committee in 1932 awarded the games to Berlin, it was a Republican Germany to which it gave them, and not to a Nazi Germany in which conditions as above mentioned exist.

Under the Olympic regulations, the International Olympic committee "fixes the dates of meetings according to needs and circumstances." Thus it would seem that the committee has full authority to take the games away from a Nazi Germany and select some other place in which it would be possible to hold them in the true spirit of sportsmanship. If the committee does not assemble and do this American athletes should certainly refuse to have anything to do with the Berlin Olympics, which promises to be an agent of forsaken ideals, unfair sports practice, and political propaganda.

Teaching The Old Dog New Tricks

Getting rid of custom is always a slow process. 1935, however, is proving itself a banner year in the questioning-of-old-traditions campaign. Students in various colleges and universities all over the country are expressing their dissatisfaction with the old regime, under which one rises at dawn to witness a tapping of Eta Beta Pi, or burns the senior books, or serenades at midnight .. and returning as an old grad, sheds sentimental tears as the old ceremonies are recalled.

Before one enters college he hears much talk of this or that traditional affair. There are the ever-present and sacred traditions which bring tears to the eyes of returning alumnus, and haunt him with hallowed memories of the days gone by, when he too was a part of the institution within the walls that are invariably "ivy-covered."

We hear much even today about the value of historical tradition in building spirit and love for Alma Mater—but the trend away from traditions to standards has continued and there has not been a noticeable change in the loyalty of the undergraduate or the graduate to his school. Today, perhaps because of a thirst for something new, perhaps because of the general tendency of the age toward debunking everything in sight, times have changed.

Everyone has heard "my aunt was chairman of that committee in '05," or "my dad did that very same thing in '08"—and many a tradition has been carried on through the years for just such sentimental reasons. But times have changed. No longer do we find the graduate a hallowed article who is to be revered as he returns to chant the dear old songs of Alma Mater, or to keep at a long-remembered ceremony.

On the campus of Florida State College that change has appeared for the first time definitely, this year. Such rites as that of "Fealty" are being modified or done away with, and a great many others are being questioned. Little by little "tapping" ceremonies are being abandoned as meaningless, honorary organizations are being questioned as to usefulness, and even the sacred institution of the Odd-Even rivalry is on trial. Witness the beginning of revolution.

Successful Women Tell "What It Takes"

The most talked-about topic this week seems to be centered around the position of women in the world today.

At the AAUW forum meeting which was open to all students and faculty, Miss Zoe Manning, first vice-president of the Florida Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs, spoke on the legal status of women in this state. On the previous night the subject of "Women In Politics" was discussed at the NSFA meeting, at which time both the advantages and disadvantages of woman's taking an active part in world affairs were brought up. Along this line an encouraging note was sounded recently by two prominent women in the field.

"There's plenty of room in the legal profession for women, and the bar has much to learn from women lawyers." Thus opined Miss Agnes Craig, first woman municipal court justice to be elected in the city of New York, and Magistrate Anna M. Kross.

Judges look at a woman lawyer, first as a woman, and then as a lawyer, says Justice Craig. If a woman wants to succeed as a lawyer, she must not assume the attitude of a man, either in dress or manner of speech. But she must try her cases in a manly fashion, by which I mean simply that she must be thoroughly prepared and capable. And above all, according to Justice Craig, a woman lawyer must ask no favors because she is a woman and she must expect no encouragement from men. "But if she is able, she will reflect credit on herself and her profession."

Those of us who are considering entering the arena of politics might well accept such advice when it comes from a woman already successful and prominent.

The trend in recent years seems to have been toward ousting married women teachers from our schools. But leave it up to Dr. Clarence D. Thorpe of the University of Michigan and we'd have, not fewer, but more married teachers. It would help to stabilize the teaching profession, he said, in an address to delegates to the National council of Teachers of English convention at Indianapolis recently. Anyway, psychologists tell us that married women are usually better able to direct the activities of our young.

I AM A NEW ENGLAND PURITAN
Anonymous
American Mercury, December, 1935.

The New Englander's strongest characteristics, we judge from this picture, are a confirmed individualism and a sense of righteousness towards community duty.

The New Englander does not care if his neighbor is sexually immoral, born of a shady family or given to drink, the writer maintains, as long as he works hard, pays his debts and respects the law of the town.

When a husband runs away with another woman, the New Englander is only disgusted. That is, disgusted if the man leaves his family in economic insecurity and the town must provide for it.

Inhospitality especially to strangers, lack of praise in the accomplishments of their children, and perfunctory attendance at church and town meetings are all characteristic of the New England Puritan. In short he prefers "an ordered life of tranquil self-enjoyment."

DETOUR AROUND WAR
By Bennett Champ Clark
Harper's, December, 1935.

Clark, who is a senator from Missouri and a member of the Nye committee, is not satisfied with the neutrality act passed by Congress in August of this year.

Two provisions from the Nye committee's original program which failed to pass Congress must be added to the present neutrality act, he says, if we are ever even to hope for peace. The provisions are "the prohibition of loans and credits to belligerent nations and the application of strict embargoes upon contraband materials other than munitions and war implements."

Protecting our "neutral rights," Clark says, would honestly mean involving the rest of the warring world against us. In 1917 it was simply a matter of choosing whether we wanted to be on the Allies' side or Germany's. Both factions were violating our "neutral rights."

In conclusion Clark, who saw service in the World War, denies that it is necessary "to turn back the hands of civilization to maintain our national honor." It is time for every lover of his country to re-define "national honor" in the light of modern history.

THE RIGHT TO DIE—II
A Debate
Forum, December, 1935.

Since only an extremely small number of the incurably sick ever ask to be put out of their suffering Dr. A. L. Wolbarst thinks that doctors should be allowed to administer euthanasia to those who wish it.

On the other hand Dr. James J. Walsh believes life is too mysteriously significant for any one even to consider taking it.

PAINLESS EDUCATION
By E. A. Cross
Atlantic, December, 1935.

On account of pressure from various groups, America continues to inflict "a painless education" on its youth.

"Painless education" results when students who are unfit to become teachers are allowed to graduate from teacher training colleges through their persistence in staying in college; when the teaching profession continues to be used as a stepping stone to marriage or another profession; and when teachers adhere to the pressure of parents by passing children who have not studied hard enough to acquire even the fundamental skills of learning—reading and writing.

In conclusion Dr. Cross demands that parents, taxpayers, teachers, all join in a campaign against the invidious idea that an education can be secured without working.

Day Students Reach No Decision on Attendance

At the day student's open forum, which was held Monday night for the purpose of determining whether or not convocation should be compulsory for day students, no definite decision was reached.

The matter was discussed pro and con, and a vote was taken. The vote was in favor of compulsory convocation, but the attendance at the meeting was considered too small a representation of the organization's membership to allow this vote to be final.

There will be another forum held in the near future, according to Marjorie Fain, president, the exact date of which will be announced later.

THE question of what to do about the oil embargo will be the chief issue at the League meeting of the committee of eighteen on December 12. Meanwhile, member nations are sending in their notices that they will not discontinue shipment of oil to Italy until the other nations agree to do so. It is also expected that copper, trucks, and tractors will be included on the embargo list: these articles were on Hull's list of "essential war materials." Venezuela has become the "problem child" of the League of Nations. She has refused on humanitarian grounds to order any embargo on anything. Hence, if Great Britain and the United States enforce, for instance, the oil embargo, British and U. S. interests controlling the production of oil in Venezuela will be making profit, while their home competitors will be losing. In addition to this problem, if the League attempts to force Venezuela into it she would also have to do something about Austria and Hungary or Switzerland, who has refused to apply sanction three, a boycott of Italian goods.

The U. S. policy a la Hull has undoubtedly had a powerful influence on the League. Even the first sanction of the League was almost exactly what Roosevelt had said in his proclamation by which he recognized a state of war.

MISS M. CAREY THOMAS, president emeritus of Bryn Mawr college and a well-known woman educator died this week at the age of 79. She should be a person of interest to members of a woman's college. As a young woman she had to overcome great handicaps in order to get a college degree abroad, principally because of her sex—a thing which is hard to realize in a day when college women are turned out with degrees like so many matches out of a factory. If all the feminine college students in the United States today were laid end to end—they would be more comfortable.

Last month when Bryn Mawr celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her founding Miss Thomas received one congratulatory wire which should be of special interest. It said:

"I have forgotten everything I learned at Bryn Mawr, but I still see you standing in chapel and telling us to believe in women."

TEACHERS' LOYALTY OATH BILLS

President Bowman of The Johns Hopkins university, speaking November 20 at Charlottesville, Va., in connection with a meeting of the National Academy of Sciences, declared that the special loyalty oaths required of teachers in Massachusetts and other states represent "an assault on freedom and the debasement of democratic idealism."

Twenty-one states and the District of Columbia now require some form of loyalty oath by teachers. In 1935 laws to that effect were enacted in seven states: Arizona, Georgia, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Texas, and Vermont. In two states — Delaware and Maryland—loyalty oath bills passed by the legislature were defeated during 1935 in seven states: Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

In 1934 a loyalty oath bill passed by the New York legislature was vetoed by Gov Lehman. In 1923 the New York legislature repealed the Lusk act, which required all teachers in the state to obtain certificates of good moral character, and to give satisfactory evidence that they would support the constitutions of New York and the United States and be loyal to the institutions of state and nation.

The bill had been passed in 1921 and approved by Gov. Miller. It had been passed previously in 1920, but was vetoed by Governor Smith, who made it an issue in his successful gubernatorial campaign in 1922.

Bills to require loyalty oaths of teachers are supported by the D A. R. and other patriotic organizations, the American Legion and other veterans' bodies, the Order of Elks, the Hearst newspapers, and in some states by Chambers of Commerce. They insist that such bills are necessary to prevent a minority of teachers from inculcating subversive doctrines in their students.

The bills are opposed by many eminent educators, parent-teacher groups, adult education bodies, the Progressive Education Association, "liberal" and radical organizations, and local branches of the National Education Association. They declare that a mere loyalty oath will not deter any teacher actually bent on indoctrinating pupils with subversive ideas.

The teachers' associations usually do not object to taking the same oath of allegiance to the constitution as is required of elected officials, policemen and soldiers. They protest that singling out the teachers for a special oath is a means of intimidation which can be used to destroy the right of academic freedom and of presenting all points of view on controversial issues. (Resolution of the National Education Association.)

In 1934 the committee on education of the House of Representatives held hearings on a resolution to memorialize the states to require all teachers to take an oath of allegiance to the Constitution. The bill was supported by many patriotic bodies and by Rep Hamilton Fish (R.-N. Y.). The only opposition came from religious groups which deplore the fact that the Constitution does not expressly mention Christianity.

No action was taken on the resolution, nor on a similar resolution introduced in the House in 1935. However, in 1935 Congress added a rider to the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, forbidding the use of federal funds to pay teachers in the District who teach or advocate communism.—Columbia Missourian.

CONFUSED, SAYS SIEGFRIED

Andre Siegfried, visiting professor of the Carnegie Peace Foundation and French political scientist, stated in a recent interview in St. Louis that America, at the moment, finds herself in a confused state and wonders just which way to turn. "In 1920 Americans knew what next—production and more production," says Mr. Siegfried.

That production in America, beginning shortly after the close of the World War and continuing in ever-widening circles, as it were, until the bull market folded up in 1929, has caused widespread comment in financial circles the world over. America went completely mad, apparently; and when prices began to show bullish tendencies, producers merely turned to greater production to accumulate wealth.

Then when the crash came cries of "over-production, over-production!" arose at every turn. Even now America has on hand a huge amount of surplus wheat, cotton, and hundreds of other staple commodities which cannot find markets Continued high-geared production would not have alleviated matters, so the government stepped in and attempted to remedy matters by limiting production.

While the administration's ideals show sincerity and clear thinking toward an ultimate solution, the basic chord has not been struck. Glenn Frank, in a vigorous attack on existing economic ills, comes nearest to arriving at something definite when he points out that this surplus now on hand in America, instead of being something of a bogey, would amount to almost nothing at all if our sys-

Enormous Consumption Of Coal Marks Arrival Of Christmas

Fur coats . . . red noses . . . twenty tons of coal shoveled into the heating plant! Christmas approaches at Florida State College.

In charge of this brick heating plant built in 1930 at a cost of nearly a million dollars, is Breen Boydsten. Besides the head man there are also two firemen and two helpers who aid in manufacturing Florida warmth.

Besides the heat in the radiators the plant provides the hot water which has been made pure enough for even the most delicate complexion by means of a tank that contains rock and sand to remove the lime chemical in the water. After the removal of the lime huge bags of salt are poured in (perhaps to aid in the tooth-scrubbing). Think of the salt it must take to provide the 26,000 gallons of soft water the college uses each day!

Sixty carloads of coal with fifty tons to a carload are shipped here from Alabama every year to feed the two great boilers that warm the coiled pipes, which heat the dormitories, class rooms, library, gymnasium, dining room, infirmary, laundry plant, kitchen for special types of cooking, and the running hot water for the bath rooms.

Collegiate Come-Backs

With Christmas only two weeks off, we prophecy that for once professors won't be bothered with the noise in their classes We'll just have to catch up with the sleep we lost over Thanksgiving plus that which we know we're going to lose during the holidays. Professors, please take note.

From the Rotunda we've borrowed these few words to the wise on how to get a college education

Feed back to the prof
What the prof dishes you:
Though you doubt what he says,
What he says must be true—
Never, never commit
The unpardonable sin
Of letting an idea of your own get in!

We see by the Exponent where the University of Vermont has distributed a booklet on etiquette to the male contingent on the campus. We suggest that a few of these booklets be sent to the girls on this campus who in the rush to get their mail bruise your floating rib with their elbows knock you down in the mob, step on your face, and then say, "I beg your pardon." It's not the bruises or the knocks that we mind, but it's too darned much to expect us to accept an apology in such an unconventional attitude.

The printer gets all the money—
The staff gets all the blame

TO ANYBODY'S BOY-FRIEND

It seems to me a thing quite odd
That you think love is gratis
And that you say the same sweet things
To one of any status,
While deep within I chuckle with
A most satanic glee,
As I note your delicate point
Of nice democracy;
A kiss from servant-girl or queen;
A Mary, Grace, or Lola—
All from you reap a like reward;
An ice-cold Coca-Cola.

A biochemist, Hestor Mortimer, told the American Neurological association recently that our skulls grow denser as we grow older and that the condition is ten times commoner in women than in men, says the Orange and White. Evidently he hadn't heard of the Westminister college student who gave his girl the gate because she was wearing a ring with the initials 10K (10 karats to the common herd).

The Social Week

Lipscomb, Guest Speaker on Horace, Given Reception

Concluding Florida's participation in the celebration of Horace's bimillennium the classics department of the college will give a formal reception in Gilchrist parlors tomorrow night at 8:30 in honor of Dr. Herbert C. Lipscomb, professor of Latin at Randolph Macon Women's college, who will be the guest speaker during the celebration here this week-end.

The parlors of Gilchrist hall will be arranged attractively for this affair with poinsettias and other seasonal flowers featuring the decorations.

During the evening coffee, sandwiches, and mints will be served to the guests.

The receiving line will be composed of Miss Olivia N. Dorman, Dr. William Dodd, Dr. Lipscomb, Miss Gladys Freed, Miss Edith West, and Mary Etta Thistlewaite who will introduce the guests.

Poinsettias and other seasonal flowers will be used to decorate the rooms attractively.

A plate supper of sandwiches, potato chips, a salad, hot chocolate and mints will be served buffet style before an open fire in the living room.

Following the supper Mrs. Anderson will talk informally to the members and pledges.

Invited to attend this affair are the Tallahassee alumnae, faculty advisers of the sorority, and the house mother.

Hostesses at this time will be Edith Ayers, Betty Bary, Doris Godard, Nina Hughes, Mary DeGuenther, Agnes Goss, Madeline McCall, Virginia Weldon, Alice Porter, Laurita Pearson, Dorothy Finneren, Alice Sloan, Pearle Shepard, Mary Carson, Angela Griley, Lucille Filley, Helen Yonge, Sara Graham, and Carolyn Daniel.

BAPTIST STUDENT UNION CELEBRATES TENTH ANNIVERSARY ON THIS CAMPUS

Entertaining with a banquet, breakfast, tea, and a number of programs the Baptist Student Union celebrated its tenth anniversary on this campus last week-end.

The banquet was held Friday night in the community hall. Appropriate decorations were used on the tables with unique programs and menus.

The program for the evening consited of a talk by Miss Maude Flowers on "Tin Types" and one by Dr. Frank H. Leavell, who spoke on "Tin Soldiers." Evelyn Collins, council president, was toastmistress.

On Saturday afternoon a tea was given in Broward lounge from 4 to 6 o'clock. Invited guests were members of the faculty, local church people, and Baptist students. In the receiving line were Dr. E. G. Conradi, Miss Louise Conradi, Miss Olivia N. Dorman, Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the Baptist church, Mrs. Christie, and Dr. Leavell.

Eleanor Murrill, social chairman was in charge of the arrangements for the tea.

Motion pictures of the Baptist Student conference which was held at Ridgecrest, N. C., were shown Saturday night.

A breakfast was held Sunday morning at the Three Torches tea room with Mary Nell Pinckard in charge. The students then attended Sunday school, followed by the morning church services where Dr. Leavell was the speaker and the student choir sang a special number. This was followed by dinner in the dining room.

Business sessions of the anniversary were held Saturday morning at the student headquarters. At this time Jimmy Bryant, of the University of Florida and president of the State B. S. U., conferred with members of the local council. Gladys Oliver then presented a gift service in which Emily Crossland of Trenton and Thelma Tew of Sanford, former president of the B. S. U., took part.

Classical Club Will Have Informal Tea With Mrs. Freed

Bride-elect Honored At Social Affairs By Baptist Girls

Honoring Miss Katherine Rawls, former Baptist student secretary, whose marriage to Garland Forber Taylor of Brookhaven, Mississippi, will be an event of this month, there have been several entertainments recently.

The Baptist students dedicated their last council meeting to Miss Rawls, each girl giving a passage which pictured what Miss Rawls had meant to her. The council members also honored Miss Rawls with two tables at dinner in the dining-room. Pieces of doll furniture were used as favors at this time. Following the dinner coffee was served in the student house.

The students during Sunday school last week presented the bride elect with a sterling silver cream and sugar set. On Monday night a group of the Baptist students serenaded Miss Rawls, who left Tuesday for Mississippi.

Members of Sorority Observe Tradition

Members of the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority on this campus are adhering to a tradition of the sorority, that of wearing blue and grey ribbons under their pins for several days during the installation of a new chapter. The seventy-second active chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha will be installed at Union university, Jackson, Tennessee, on December 12.

German Club Christmas Party Planned for Next Week in Episcopal Hall

Der Deutsche Verein held its regular bi-monthly meeting last Tuesday afternoon.

Leona Stimmel conducted a very interesting program on the famous castles, legends, and cities of the Rhine river. Gertrude Kuhn spoke on the castles of the Rhine, Virginia Northcutt on the legends, and Hazel Bowman on the cities. Miss Myrtle Dolbee, professor of German and faculty adviser for the club, read the poem, "Die Lorelie."

It was decided at the meeting that Die Weihnachtsfeste, the club's annual Christmas party, will be held this year in Ruge hall on Saturday, December 14. Members of Der Deutsche Verein and all students of the German classes who are interested in attending Die Weihnachtsfeste are requested to see Hazel Bowman or Charlotte Kinzie as soon as possible.

Dodd Oversees Medical Tests

Six Students Take Exam Required to Enter Medical School

Medical aptitude tests sent by the American Medical association will be given to a group of pre-medical students of this college today at 2:30 under the supervision of Dr. William G. Dodd, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

This test is being given in all the major colleges of the United States today at this same hour. It has been given as an annual test to students in pre-medical training for a number of years but this is the first year that it has been made a standard requirement for entrance into advanced medical training in any of the recognized medical schools. Every student who expects to enter medical college is now required to take the test under the auspices of the college in which he is receiving his pre-medical training. Grades from the tests are filed in the record of the American Medical association, which in turn furnishes them to the various medical colleges when they apply to the association for information regarding their applicants.

The examination, which is two and a half hours in length, consists of two parts. The preliminary portion gives the examinees a chance to look over the material o which they will be tested while the rest of the test examines them on the grounds not only of the subjects directly connected with their medical course but also on other basic subjects such as spelling, English, and logical thinking.

Students taking the test today are Doris McKenzie, Elizabeth Akin, Audrey Farmer, Mrs. Wilson Cogswell, Elizabeth Knapp, and Mary Carson.

tem more nearly approximated perfection.

"If America's millions were properly fed, clothed, and sheltered," he says, "this so-called surplus would vanish. It would be absorbed right here in America in no time at all."

And certainly he has spoken the truth. Credence can be lent easily to this when one stops to consider that a conservative estimate of America's total wealth exceeds 150 billions, which amounts to well over a thousand dollars per capita. This brings one back to the old argument that if the laboring class which produces the wealth, could get a cut of the profits and wealth it produces, thus restoring its buying power, it could easily consume this surplus in short order.

Neither over-production nor the laboring class deserves the blame for existing conditions. The fault lies with the system, and until changes occur in that system none will occur in these conditions. Whether the panacea be socialism, communism or just plain anarchism constitutes a debatable question; but there is no question but that some change must come about before sure and permanent relief can be secured.—Columbia Missourian.

"Spare" Time Workers

Girls Balance Collegiate Budgets By Clicking Needles, Pounding Typewriters, And "Gilding the Lilies"

In our sundry college activities we forget to pause and honor those struggling sisters of ours who daily contribute to the swing of the "hustle and bustle" of campus life. To their ingenious mode of balancing the collegiate budget, this treatise is dedicated.

First, there is the human knitting machine. This person charges about campus, to town, to the show, and to the beauty parlor, all the while consantly clicking her needles with furious jabbing motions. Even in the dining room she must take these knitting exercises before singing the blessing.

Then there are those girls who supply beauty aids right in your own room. They'll even give you a shampoo with a set for an extra ten cents. All you need to do is tell them the beauty aids which you believe to be most necessary and presto—they produce the instruments and set to work—be it a shampoo, hairset, manicure, eyebrow plucking or a facial. They aim to please. Don't be surprised if they try to induce you to make purchase of an extra bottle of perfume, which they feel they could do without, or if they begin making a sales talk on a certain brand of cosmetics. Just be prepared!

Some girls feel more at home doing a bit of typing for five or ten cents a page for some poor freshman who hopes—yes, and prays that by saving the teacher's eyes she will raise a somewhat disreputable grade. Others would rather put their talents to the good of personal or clerical work. Others find themselves lucky to be the possessors of FERA scholarships.

Then there come those week-ends which prove a boon to the girls who try a hotel or boarding-house service when they find that their homes are situated in towns in which gala occasions are scheduled to take place. Still others find these same week-ends a chance to dispose of the old wardrobe by selling out or renting dresses which appeal to the particular senses of girls who wonder "if they'll be a hit."

There are always those girls who are able to make a steady income by writing themes or doing homework for bewildered students. For an A on a paper the author collects five cents a word, for a B three cents, a C one cent, and an F collects nothing.

Finally, there are those girls who take a chance on keeping that school-girl figure by doing tea-room work. This seems to be a most efficient method of reducing or staying at the same weight level. If they are lucky and can turn on their best personality when the time comes they can collect nice tips. Others like the dining-room. They don't have as far to go to get to their site of business and they are still able to take enough steps to keep their figures in trim.

About the only thing that hasn't started selling on the campus of Florida State College is dates. Maybe it's because they are so scarce, but the scarcer the article the higher the price. How about it, ladies?

The waitress probably could teach the psycohologists some interesting facts about human nature from practical experience. She has learned through experience how to keep a customer from walking out on her, and she can lie with the straightest face about the meat being tender and make the customer believe it.

There are two more classifications to make in regard to customers. One type is the person who eats there all the time, and the other is the one who is only stopping in town temporarily. The waitress soon learns every little peculiarity of the steady customers and never forgets to bring two pieces of lemon with Mr. Jones tea or mint with that ordered by the man with the mustache who always sits over at the corner table.

The out-of-town people are so noticeable that the regular customers and waitresses can spot them right away. They are always anxious for everyone to know that they are from Murzuka Georgia, and they have traveled more than four hundred miles since 6 o'clock in the morning. They sometimes become quite upset by the stares they cause and in an endeavor to feel more at home they start admonishing their son Johnnie, if they have such an outlet. These two types are under the main three classifications that the waitress gives her customers.

Some people never realize that the waitress is not the owner of the place where they are eating. If the steak is tough the waitress is told about it in no uncertain tones, and the minute her back is turned they mutter words about what a dumb waitress she is. Something should really be done about this situation for it is not the waitress' fault if the watermelon has given out and the rolls are soggy. All proprietors should hand their customers a little book of etiquette on how to treat the waitress the minute after the menus have been given out. It would probably not help much for the waitress has learned through experience that human nature seldom changes and it wouldn't be as much fun if everybody treated her with the respect that she is due. She rather likes having to serve three different types of people, for she is always getting a new angle on human nature, and she must have something to gripe about.

No, the waitress probably would not care for the customers to be educated to such an extent that they treated her as an individual instead of a human machine. Inanimate objects often are around when the true character of a person is revealed, and so it is with the waitress; she alone sees character in the raw. So she is satisfied with her lot and so she shall remain.

Eighty-Eight Now Teaching

Practice Teaching Begun At Demonstration School Monday

Actual practice teaching by the students of Florida State College began at the Demonstration school during this week

The purpose of practice teaching according to Dr. Rhey Boyd Parsons, superintendent of the Demonstration school, is to give to the prospective teacher wider training and experience before she goes into that field.

During the first part of the term the students devoted their time to adjusting themselves to their new classes and new pupils, as a preparation for the actual work.

The practice teachers, according to the grade or class which they teach are: Virginia, Brown, Constance Brown Oine McAdams, Betty Johnson, Marian Bailey, Edna Stanfill, and Jewell Crook, kindergarten; Cora Stringfield, Jennie Flood, Eleanor Dixon, Mildred Hudson, Chauncey Coleman, Mabel Hampton, and Reba Miller, first grade; Virginia Weldon, Sara Clark, Mary Litschgi, Dorothy Shaw, Dorothy Bryant, Olivia Boland, Jane McCown, and Louise Fuhrer, Lillian Collier, Jane Rice, Grace Lewis, Fulda Swindle, Alice Fletcher, Grace Green, and Estelle Johnson, third grade.

Sarah Martin, Clara Lipsey, Miriam Frye, Frances Herring, Sara Helen Hendry Edwina Parker, and Vivia Williams, fourth grade; Ruth Hugstrom, Lucy Houser, Janice Brill, Carol Jones, Mavis Clark, Hazel Anderson, Jane Morford, Evelyn Bowden, Hazel Ava Vickers, and Mary Dunn, fifth grade; Rachel Rothstein, Rose Safer, Elizabeth Green, Voncile Herring, Mary Dunn, Gertie Lou Peak, Faye Reeves, and Evelyn Collins, sixth grade.

Lurline Smith Annette Weinberg, Agnes Campbell, and Goldie Lewinsky, history; Margaret Wilkinson, Martha Grant, Caroline Athon, Margaret Graham, and Rose Panowski science; Elizabeth Brooks, Eva Fowler, Ruth Feinberg, Mary Lanehart, Anna Grover, and Rosalie Lastra, Spanish; Virginia Cromartie Lucile Edenfield, Annie Leigh Rollins, Nancy Wilkinson, geometry.

Greek Meeting Waived

The meeting of the National Panhellenic association scheduled to have convened in Edgewater Park, Mississippi, this past week has been indefinitely postponed, according to Dorothy Leach, Florida State's delegate. Dorothy said she received word from Albany, N. Y., that because of so few reservations the one-day meeting would not be held this year.

Christmas Seal Drive is Begun

Proceeds Will Be Used for Tubercular Cures

Red Cross Christmas seals, the annual proceeds of which are used to effect tubercular cures, will be on sale at the college dining room tables Tuesday night. Also on Wednesday morning from 8:15 to 1030 there will be a table outside the post office in the Administration building for the sale of seals.

The speech department is further promoting sales by sponsoring a series of talks by students of the department at meetings of three Tallahassee clubs this week. Frances Lewis spoke to the Kiwanians, Tuesday. Frances Lingle addressed the Rotary club, Wednesday. Lillian Burford will speak at the Exchange club today.

These girls dress in costumes like that worn by the girl pictured on this year's seal. The seal, designed by Ernest H. Baker of Carmel, N. Y., depicts a double barred cross with a girl of 1860 posting a letter.

Statistics show a gain of 86 per cent in 1934 over the previous year in the eradication of tubercular cases in this state. Last year there were 961 deaths in Florida due to tuberculosis and 1,039 in 1933. Most of these were among negroes, according to Dr. Stewart G. Thompson, director of the bureau of vital statistics of the State board of health. Four times as many negroes as whites die of this disease, the most susceptive ages being between fifteen and forty-five for both races.

The Florida Tuberculosis board, of which Dr. W. T. Edwards of Jacksonville is the head, is working to get five tubercular sanatoria in the state.

Tuberculin tests are to be given in all county schools this year. In cooperation with the State Board of Health, Dr. L. J. Graves, and Mrs. Elizabeth S. Perkins, R. N., of the Leon County Tuberculosis and Health association, will give examinations in the schools of Tallahassee and Leon county.

Health posters will be made by children in the white schools of this county as a means of acquainting them with facts concerning tuberculosis. A program for negroes will be opened next year under the chairmanship of Dr. L. H. B. Foote of the A. and M. college, according to plans now under discussion by the State Tuberculosis board.

Construction Postponed On Activities Building

The construction of the new Student Activities building, which was being considered as a new addition to the campus, has been indefinitely postponed. Since the budget does not allow for such an extensive project the plans for the building must be laid before the next legislature, in order to secure the necessary funds.

The building was to have been erected in the location of Bryan Hall, which was to have been torn down. A new dormitory also was to have been built west of Gilchrist to take the place of Bryan. All the student activities offices, including the Flambeau, College Government association, an auditorium for the classes to hold their meetings, and a recreation hall, were to have their offices in this building.

Conradi Attending Meet

Dr. Edward G Conradi will not be able to attend the meeting of the state board of control in Tampa, December 7, as he is not expected to return to Tallahassee until tomorrow. Dr. Conradi, accompanied by Miss Louise Conradi, has been in Louisville, Kentucky, during the past week attending a meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Former Student Visiting Campus

Beatrice Candee Works On Textbook

Miss Beatrice Candee, a 19[illegible] graduate of Florida State College and the present head of the psychology department of the Vocational Service for Juniors in New York city, is visiting the campus this week.

The Vocational Service for Juniors with which Miss Candee is connected is a private agency which is now carrying on a junior consultation service. It combines the project of vocational service for Juniors, young men and women between the ages of 6 and 2[illegible], with the wor kthat the New York employment agency undertakes.

Miss Candee is at the present time at work on a text book of psychology. She was at one time assistant to Dr. Finner, professor of the psychology department at this college.

192 Guests Visit School

During Homecoming and the Thanksgiving holidays approximately 192 guests visited in the dormitories. Of this number fifty-two stayed in Bryan and Broward halls, fifty-six were visiting in Gilchrist hall, twenty-nine visited in Reynolds, and fifty-five were guests in Jennie Murphree.

Residents Number 1476

There are 1476 girls in residence at Florida State College for Women, according to Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls.

Of these 241 are living in sorority houses and 128 are living in off campus houses.

The list of girls who want to move into the dormitories has decreased to 38, but Miss Flowers says that a great many more are planning to move on campus at the end of the first semester.

The proof of the cigarette is in the smoking . . . and it always will be

Smokers—both men and women—want a cigarette to be mild—yet not flat or insipid. At the same time they want a cigarette that gives them taste—taste they can enjoy.

Chesterfields are outstanding for mildness—outstanding for better taste. You can find that out by smoking them.

Just try them - Chesterfields are what they say they are

Chemist Group Will Have Meet Here Saturday

Distinguished Scientists Of South Expected To Be Present

DR. ALLISON WILL GIVE MAIN TALK

Is Only American Yet To Have Discovered Two Elements

Dr. Fred Allison, of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, who was recently awarded the Herty medal for distinguished achievement in the field of science in the South, will be the principal speaker on the program of the Florida section of the American Chemical society which will meet here tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night. Dr. Allison will speak at 7:45 o'clock in the science hall auditorium, 307 science building.

His subject will be the magneto-optic method of analysis, a method which originated at the University of Virginia and was brought to its present state of perfection largely through the efforts of Dr. Allison.

Discoverer of Two Elements

Dr Allison received the Herty medal, awarded by Dr. Charles Herty, for his outstanding work in the field of magneto-optics, the method of which he employed in his discovery of two elements, virginium and alabamine. The name for the first element was suggested by the name of the university where Allison did his first work, and the name of the second element, alabamine by the name of Alabama Polytechnic institute where he is now located.

The discovery of these two elements means from the standpoint of discovery, Dr Allison has succeeded in doing what only one American has done. Of the ninety-two elements, only one other has been discovered by a native of this country. Professor B Smith Hopkins of the University of Illinois, discovered illinium in 1926.

Arrangements for the meeting here are being made by Dr. Le-

Holden Receives Scholarship Cup

Omicron Nu Trophy Given For High Average

Molly Holden was presented with the Omicron Nu Scholarship cup for the freshman having the highest average in the Home Economics department last year, and Lucile Williams received honorable mention, at the meeting of the Home Economics club Tuesday night. Miss Edna Mae McIntosh, sponsor, who presented the cup, also gave a brief survey of the work and history of Omicron Nu, the National Honorary society for those outstanding in the field of Home Economics.

Eleanor Murril gave a short talk on Home Economics Occupations for Home Economics majors.

Mary Miller was elected delegate for the Florida Home Economics convention in Orlando, during the Christmas holidays.

The club is having a Kid party Saturday night, at 7:30 in the Clothing laboratory in the Science building. Each girl will bring a gift and instead of being exchanged will be given to children on relief for Christmas.

Present at this meeting were Martha Williams, Syrena Stockbridge, Gladys Harvard, Mary Catherine Coody, Hazel Myrick, Clara Bell Trimble, Jean Gilles, Kathleen Owens, Ellen McLeord, Betty Anderson, Shirley Stevens, Katherine Pittman, Alta Vann, Louise Fitzpatrick, Mary Burgoon, Mary Elizabeth Stevenson, Elise Barretle, Katherine Trobough, Mabry Sumer, Opal Walker, Elizabeth Louds, Sarah Nance, Alice McGlane, Frances Ellis, Louise D. Johnson, Marjorie Beach, Leona Rehbinder, Carlotta Cubillas, Clara Langford, Virginia Pinney, Sarah Twad, Irene Day, Mary L. Library Will Close At 12:30 on Dec. 20

The library will be closed at 12:30, December 20, for the Christmas holidays, according to Miss Louise Richardson, librarian. All library books are due Wednesday, December 18. Books not returned will carry the usual fine through the holidays.

Students wishing to borrow books for the holidays may make arrangements for such at the circulation on Thursday or Friday of next week.

Play Will Be Given Tonight

Speech Department Will Offer Performance Of "Moor Born"

The first performance of "Moor Born" by Dan Totheroh was presented by the speech department Tuesday, December 10. The play will be given again tonight and tomorrow night. Because of the unusual length of the play, the curtain rises promptly at 8:15 p. m. The price of admission is 40 cents.

Dr. Raymond Bellamy, professor of sociology, was portrayed in the role of a stern and religious father. Mr. H. D. Mendenhall, resident engineer, took the part of Christopher, a Yorkshire farmhand. The degenerate son, Branwell Bronte, was done by J. A. Cawthon of Tallahassee.

The three Bronte sisters were presented by Ruth Mock as Anne, the appealing one. Betty Boggs as Emily, the tragic sister; and Emily Johnson as Charlotte, the sincere girl.

Other characters in the play were given by Betty Peck as Tabby, the old servant, and Sara Hosea as Martha, the young servant.

The setting of "Moor Born" is a compromise of the old and new methods of stage direction. While the scene takes place in the sitting room of the Bronte Parsonage in Yorkshire England, the setting shows a representation of the moor, which is the dominant theme of the play.

Miss Heleo Thrush, instructor in art, was in charge of the stage setting. Miss Henrietta Sivyer, associate professor of textiles and clothing, was costume adviser.

The little theater orchestra, directed by Mr Owen Sellers, rendered the "Melodie in E Minor" by Alfred G. Robyn. The personoel of the orchestra includes Martha Reddick, Betty Parker, Annabel Larson, Sara Tyler, Martha Lee Kilkerson, Jean Crago, Betty Anderson, Marjorie Tillis, Hazel Bowman, Louise Johnson, Virginia Long, Veola Evans, and Helen Sellers.

The production staff from the spech department includes Betty Ettlinger, Betty Peck, Louise Schwaderer, and Frances Lingle, research committee; Betty Sweet Smith, Leona Stimmel, and Marie Spurlock, stage managers; Dorothy Hill, Betty Ettlinger, and Louise Schwaderer, property committee; Frances Lingle, business manager; Vivian Marshall, Dorothy Detrick, Barbara Wells, Lillian Burford, Jane Gray Stevens, Helen Walde, Beverly Brown and Ida Larkins, tickets; Helen Hammond, Ida Larkins and Zulieme Russell, publicity; Margaret Kay Anderson, Louise Schwaderer, Louise Lingo and Evelyn Kennard, stage crew and lights.

Vance Will Attend Meet Of Journalism Teachers

Earl L. Vance, professor of journalism at Florida State College for Women, and secretary-treasurer of the Southeastern section of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism will leave during the Christmas holidays to attend the meeting of the organization to be held in Washington, D. C., December 26-29.

The Southeastern section of the association which usually meets separately in Atlanta is meeting with the national group this year since Washington is so far south.

"Questions affecting the profession of journalism, and particularly those having to do with journalism as a course of study in colleges and universities will be discussed," said Mr. Vance.

College Calendar For Coming Months Contains Many Events

Activities to Be Resumed January 8 by Talk On Japanese

The calendar for the remaining months of the college year contains a number of interesting and entertaining events including lectures, artist series programs, concerts, dances, and recitals.

The Christmas holidays will bring to a close activities, which will be resumed immediately thereafter with a lecture on January 8 by Upton Close, the third speaker in the lecture forum series. His subject will be "Who are the Japanese?"

A week later, on January 16, the Hedgerow Theater Players will present "Emperor Jones," which promises to be very good as the Hedgerow Players are well known actors.

The month of February opens with the Sophomore Hop on the first day, for which plans are already proceeding rapidly. Phil Asher is in charge of the arrangements, assisted by Mary K. Scott, Janet Cook, and Leila Gibbs.

The third artist series program is scheduled for February 27, when the Vienna Choir Boys will be here.

The Junior Minstrel, usually occurring later in the year, has been moved up to February 29.

March will, no doubt, be an exciting month, considering the number of activities occurring then. During P. S C. W. Week, which is March 1-7, there will be Skit Night on the 6th and a street carnival on the 7th, besides other events which will be arranged later for the first part of the week. Skit Night is an annual affair, but the street carnival is something new to take the place of Midwinter Festival.

The Senior A A. U. W party will be on March 20, followed by

Holiday Season Is Preceded By Frantic Buying

Students Storm Bargain Meccas in Attempt To Find Gifts

By FRANCES HARTLEY

A harassed student, list in hand, inquiring of everyone "What shall I give Uncle George?", girls staggering in from town loaded with bundles, a wild flurry of tissue paper and red ribbons—signs that the Christmas shoppers are in the midst of near yearly scramble.

One can see them now at any time, elbowing their determined way through the crowded aisles of Tallahassee's bargain meccas They fight their way between hordes of last-minute shoppers to reach a box of stationery or a pair of earrings a split second before the five other people who have their eye on it and are frantically pushing to get there first.

The clerk, harassed and worn, drags out eleven pairs of stockings for the girl who is looking for "London Fog" because it's the only shade Cousin Ella will wear. Lines of impatient girls form to be waited on, and with black looks accuse each other of pushing in out of turn.

The most perplexing problem seems to be Shall I give Betty a Christmas present—she didn't give me one last year but she did the year before that and I didn't give her one then, oh well. Betty is probably thinking the same thing and the outcome of it all is, they'll each send Christmas cards.

The shopping areas depend entirely on the purse and the Christmas spirit of the shopper. There is the student, of course, who will have none but the best and who visits the most expensive shops.

Students Vote on Amendments

Eliminate Committees And Make Provisions For Electing More

Changes providing for the elimination of the health committee, the fire committee and the library committee, the addition of an N. S. F. A. forum committee, a president's council and a handbook committee, the election of the freshman adviser by the whole student body, and the addition of the chairman of the budget committee as a member of Senate have been passed by the College council, the executive council and the student senate. These proposed changes will be voted on by the student body before the amendments will be official.

Concerning the election of the freshman adviser, article 7, section 1, shall be changed to read, "The freshman advisory council shall consist of one senior elected be the entire student body, who shall be called the freshman adviser; the house chairmen of the freshman dormitories, the floor chairmen of the freshman dormitories; and the freshman sponsor elected by the junior class."

Section 2 will read, "The chairman of the freshman advisory council shall be the freshman adviser. She shall be a member of the executive council and the judiciary, and an ex-officio member of the lower court.

"The chairman of the budget committee of the College council" shall be inserted as section 1, (m) in the student members of Senate.

A revision of the section concerning the campus social committee will change the last sentence from "This committee shall be responsible for the social activities of the campus," to "This committee shall direct the social activities of the campus."

The health committee shall be eliminated and in its place the usher committe shall stand as it now reads.

The extra-curricular committee is proposed to take the place of the present point system committee. The extra-curricular committee shall consist of a chairman who shall be a senior, together with four members appointed by the chairman and the president of the Association. This committee shall study the campus organizations and traditions in order to suggest improvements and to prevent overlapping. It shall compare local activities with those on other campuses. It shall review the duties of each campus officer. It shall administer the distribution of points, and shall

Campus, Town Suffused With Holiday Spirit

'Seven More Days,' Theme Song of Week Before Vacation Starts

STORES SEETHE WITH SHOPPERS

Students Study Calendars, Wreathe Rooms And Carol Old Hymns

To the tune of "Seven More Days to Vacation" the college waits in hectic anticipation for the ringing of that last class bell next Friday at 11:30 that will announce the beginning of the Christmas vacation.

All over the campus the excited Christmas spirit grows to fever pitch as students make gay plans for the longest holiday of the year and wonder how they will live through another week of waiting.

Dormitories Graced

Along the halls of the dormitories green and red Christmas wreaths, red and silver bells, and jolly Santa Clauses grace the doors of the all-pervading Christmas-minded student. The tear-off type of calendar serves as another type of ornament for other doors. Some of these are stupendous creations in green and red designed with candles and Christmas trees. It is around these same colorful calendars that a group of enthusiasts gathers in jubilation each night to snatch that day's mark from the sheaf while they bring down the wrath of the cronic "study-signers" upon their heads by further celebrating the occasion with marching up and down the halls to the appropriate, if somewhat discordant, music or "Jingle Bells."

The Christmas spirit, in fact, seems to put music into the soul of the average college girl. Above the hiss of the showers may be heard these days not the too familiar wail of the college crooner as she yells the latest blues song but the rarer cadences of hymns as she sings the carols so appropriate to the festive season. Nor can the smoking room choristers be left out of the category. Their rendition and arrangement of some of the old favorites are unsurpassed in their uniqueness.

Dining Room Gay

Even the dining room does its part in creating the right atmosphere by the playing of the carols for the blessing This is just too much for the sentimental few, though. Last week-end when this happened one girl sat down with the gleam of the Christmas spirit in her eyes and announced to her less tender and decidedly hungrier

Students Chosen Representatives

Makemson and Linn Will Attend Convention

Lucy Gee Linn, senior, and Martha Makemsom, junior, were elected at convocation, Tuesday, to represent the student body at the twelfth quadrennial convention of the Student Volunteer Movement at Indianapolis, Indiana, December 27-January 1.

Eight other girls from Florida State will attend the convention, paying their own expenses. They are Frances Lewis, Virginia Northcutt, Virginia White, Martha Lester, Sarah Nance, Katherine Todd, Janice Borton, and Lillie McGuire.

Funds for this convention were raised last week by giving the entertainment "Stars Night Out," and through the cooperation of various campus organizations who made contributions.

The organizations which have helped to date are the Flastacowo, Panhellenic, College Government association, and the junior class. Dr. N. M. Salley also contributed toward this fund.

The Florida State delegates will leave December 26 for Indianapolis, where they will remain until January 1. At the same time twenty delegates from the University of Florida will go.

The original Florida State quota for representation at this convention was eleven students. However, recently the convention committee has obtained a larger convention hall, thus raising our quota so that any student who is willing to pay her expenses may attend the convention.

Revision Of Curriculum For First Two Years Is Effected

COMPLETE REPORT OF CURRICULUM CHANGES PASSED AT FACULTY SENATE MEETING WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

The curriculum committee in formulating recommendations has been governed by three principles

1. The interest of the student is of paramount importance. The particular courses to be required, the quantitative requirements and the content of such courses are to be determined on this basic principle.

2. To the end that all regular students attending the Florida State College for Women may benefit by the general education which the required courses are intended to provide, the requirements are to be effective in all divisions of the college, with the exception of the School of Music; that is to say in the College of Arts and Sciences, the School of Education, and the School of Home Economics. Two-year students in the School of Education will conform as far as possible to the general plan, and will conform entirely when they continue the work for any degree.

3. Nothing is to be done to disturb or change the divisional organization of the College as it now exists.

In fulfillment of the requirements for a general education each student is expected to make a reasonable progress toward the following objectives (1) to achieve and maintain a state of health that will contribute to successful living; (2) to develop the ability to express her ideas clearly and correctly in both spoken and written English; (3) to have a reading knowledge of one foreign language; (4) to have an acquaintance with the historic and contemporary organization of society; (5) to have a reasonable understanding of her physical and biological environment, (6) to understand and appreciate the factors that enter into effective family life, (7) to have an appreciation of literature and other forms of art; (8) to gain an introduction to the best philosophical thought as it relates to successful living; (9) to have an understanding of her own mental make-up and the personality of those with whom she must live.

A student who enters college with a specific educational or vocational aim should be given opportunity to pursue that aim to a reasonable extent, even in her freshman year. However, the major emphasis in the first two years should be devoted to general education. The value of a general education should be kept in mind through the last two years also, although the major emphasis in these years will be concentrated in one subject or field of thought.

Santy Parade Features Six Live Reindeer

Floats and Unusual Toys Are Included Among Fun Galaxies

Santa Claus, attired in typical Santa style, in his sleigh pulled by six real live reindeer, with all of his merry troop, will present a Christmas pageant in the form of a two-mile parade in Tallahassee tomorrow afternoon. The main line of parade will be Monroe and Adams streets.

Santa comes from the top of the world to the capital city by the invitation of the Chamber of Commerce, which with the cooperation of the merchants, has contracted with the Thacher Production Company of New York to bring to Tallahassee live deer, grotesque figures, floats, unusual toys, inflated balcons as high as 20 feet, and clowns, some riding in carts drawn by Shetland ponies, showing the carnival spirit of holiday time.

Some of the fifteen floats depict the popular nursery themes. "The Little Queen," seated on a throne, mounted on a float representing a child's faith in Santa Claus, is surrounded by the characters of legend and song, one of the most famous being the "Mother Goose" rhyme of "Three Little Kittens" and their mother, all the characters on the float properly costumed with their mittens and pie. "Peter, Peter, Pumpkin Eater," is another 18-foot float decorated with appropriate colors on top of which will be a mammoth pumpkin to represent the home of the wife of Peter, Pumpkin Eater, animated characters taking the parts.

"The Three Little Bears" will also be part of this parade, the three bears with their bowls and spoons, seated in the three different-sized chairs vividly portray the rhyme. The "Peter Rabbit" float including characters of Peter Rabbit shows his family and home, while "Old Mother Hubbard," her dog, and his bone depict another childhood jingle.

The "Old Spinning Wheel," a float decorated in colonial effect with the old spinning wheel, and another, "Merry Christmas," represented by mammoth candles and Christmas colors, will follow a smaller float finished in white and purple decorations, on top of which is an octagon-shaped candy box with lid standing upright Seated inside of the box is a young lady appropriately costumed, representing the romance of Christmas giving.

The mayor and other officials tender the famous visitor the keys to the city. Tha committee in charge includes Frank Shaw, chairman, L. D. Fain, H Bluestein, and Mrs. W. B. Myers.

"Upton Close" Talks On Asia

Authority on Far Eastern Problems to Appear Here January 8

"Upton Close" (Josef Washington Hall) America's leading interpreter of Asia, will speak here on Wednesday, Jan. 8, 1936.

Upton Close is a leading authority on Far Eastern problems, an American Exporer whose life has been packed with thrilling experiences. He has traveled in almost every corner of China, Manchuria, and Japan. He knows Russia and the out-of-the-way places of India intimately. He is the author of six books on the Orient and contributor to a dozen outstanding American periodicals. Throughout the Japanese invasion of Shantung in 1917-18 he was special investigator for the United States government.

For sixteen years he has ridden, tramped, wheel-barrowed and mule-littered all over the world's largest continent. From his thousands of miles of travel Upton Close draws a picture of China in all her immensity and antiquity and unbelievable wonders untouched by the stock "travel lectures." His lectures have been called "illustrated philosophy." He shows the most beautiful oasis of Jehol, recently taken by the Japanese, and how he got out of it by shooting the rapids of the River Lwan. He tells of a vent on the river's rock wall which pours forth perfume from a hidden flower-carpeted valley. He shows marvelous pictures of the Great Wall, of modern skyscrapers, Shanghai towering over the willow pattern tea-houses and bird-markets of the old walled city; of Japanese forces coming into the city, destroying one-third of the second largest city on the Pacific.

Upton Close has writetn verse from childhood which has blossomed into poetry of a lyrical strainstrain under the influence of great Chinese poets, and he has always continued this poetical work. For three years he taught Chinese and Japanese literature and poetry at the University of Washington He has lectured on Chinese and Japanese poetry at the University of Hawaii, Columbia university and many other institutions.

Education Teachers Meet

Miss Margaret McCurdie, instructor in education and L. R. Ralya, professor of education will attend a meeting of the St. Johns River Education association, district division of the Florida Education association which will be held in Jacksonville, November 30.

Miss McCurdie has been invited to speak on the subject of "Reading" Mr. Ralya will speak on "Science in the Grades."

Faculty Senate Accepts Committee's Report With Amendments

PROGRAM BEGINS NEXT FALL TERM

Integrated Survey Courses Will Be Required For All New Students

The report of the curriculum committee of the faculty senate on the revision of the curriculum was approved, after slight amendments, by the faculty senate in session Wednesday afternoon, according to Dr. Edward G. Conradi, president of the college. This new program for freshmen and sophomores will go into effect in the fall term of 1936

Reduces Constants

The revision of the curriculum as it now stands reduces the number of semester hours of constants required of the student from fifty-four to forty-two, thirty-six, or thirty according as the individual places on the foreign language achievement test to be given at the beginning of the freshman year. These constants are those required of all candidates for the bachelor's degree except the bachelor of music.

The number of hours of foreign language to be required will be determined by the foreign language achievement tests which will be given on basis of a reading knowledge. For students who enter with two acceptable high school units a more advanced course of three semester hours for two semesters will be sufficient to meet this objectiva whila students beginning a new languaage will be required to complete twelve semester hours. Those students who are able to demonstrate a reading knowledge will not be required, however, to continue a foreign language in college The language requirement is to be met before the beginning of the junior year.

Foreign Languages

This differs from the present requirement in that the curriculum as it now stands designates twelve semester hours of a foreign language to be taken by candidates for the bachelor's degree

Classes Attend State Hospital

Also Make Tour Through Industrial School

Thirty-nine students went to Chattahoochee and Marianna last Tuesday on an all-day trip which the criminology and clinical psychology classes make to the State hospital for the insane and to the boys' industrial school each year.

Dr. C. E. Moore professor of the class in criminology, and Dr. H L. Waskom, professor of the class in clinical psychology, accompanied the students.

The group left Tuesday morning at 8 30, first going to the state hospital in Chattahoochee where authorities held a clinic to illustrate cases of different types of mental disorders The students and professor then visited the boys' industrial school, where they made a tour of the institution and heard an explanation of the system and equipment in operation there.

The boys' industrial school, according to Dr Waskom, is one of the most outstanding schools of its kind in America. Four hundred and fifty boys are in the industrial school, and 4,000 patients in the state hospital for the insane.

Students making the trip were: Edith Ayers, Elizabeth Becknell, Katherine Blood, Janice Brill, Sally Camp, Lottie Clark, Madge Collier, Lucile Edenfield, Ethyle Mae Edwards, Pat Foster, Eva Fowler, Barbara Green, Barbara Hubbard, Doris Isted, Elizabeth Kirby-Smith, Harriet Lawrence, Anna Belle [illegible] Sara Martin, Laura Mathis, M D. Students Hear Seydell Speak

Columnist Tells of "Bait" She Has Devised To Bag Celebrities

Mrs. Mildred Seydell, columnist and interviewer of the Atlanta Georgian, gave concrete suggestions as to how to bait and catch celebrities in her talk on Wednesday night.

Flattery was the first type of bait she enumerated. Flattery for dictators, never for queens, who have an oversupply daily was her caution. Mrs. Seydell used flattery on Mussolini, with the result that she not only got her interview, but discussed lengthily capital punishment, prohibition, and food with the inapproachable dictator.

The dictator advocated the quick rather than the severe, in reference to capital punishment. Mrs. Seydell drew the conversation to the favorite topic of the day, prohibition, by remarking upon an order given by Mussolini soon before forbidding chianti to school children. Il Duce was not in favor of adopting the prohibition then in force in the United States. A discussion of these popular topics was valuable material back home—and flattery did it!

With Queen Eugenie of Spain, Mrs. Seydell was forced to change her tactics and decided upon glamour as bait to extract her interview. Her acquired glamour consisted of an expensive dress and accessories With a new hauteur she advanced upon the secretary to the King, who was cowed into giving her, not an interview, but a social meeting with the queen. Mrs Seydell was interested to find the queen with homely duties like the American housewife's, even to the early rising The queen's parting words to her were: "Please tell the Americans that Spanish girls are not all Carmens.' Mrs. Seydell answered her earnestly, " . . . and you please say that Americans are not all wild Indians!"

Glamour was the bait used on the royalty of the screen, too, with somewhat surprising results. Mrs. Seydell was fortunate enough to meet the movie stars for the first time while they were at play on William Randolph Hearst's fabulous ranch at Saint Simeon, California. With this introduction, her date book was filled.

Facing a day with Joan Crawford "on the lot," she invested in glamour to the extent of a five-dollar make-up It was a shock to have Joan run out, sans make-up, dressed very unpretentiously. In the middle of the day, she found herself helping hang up Joan's clothes in her five-dollar face!

"Clark Gable" said Mrs. Seydell, "literally tore himself from the arms of Jean Harlow to eat liver and bacon with me!" She told of being impressed by his off-screen virility and the audience was with her every step of the way.

Humour was the bait used on Cosgrave, president of the Irish Free State. After several attempts to make him talk: Mrs Seydell told a funny story. He unbent so far as to return one, and questions and answers followed easily from then on. Humor for the Irish always, advises Mrs. Seydell.

Curiosity was what won Mrs. Seydell an interview with Clarence Darrow. It was at the famous Dayton trial and newspaper rivalry was intense Mrs Seydell worked her way through reporters and whispered in the Darrow ear: "These men want to ask you questions. I want to tell you how to select your jury" He looked up. He was interested He beckoned her to a room. There she told him about her hobby of hand psychology, by which he could pick an intelligent jury noting carefully the set and shape of their thumbs. After this discussion, it was an easy matter to get the questions answered and the story was made!

Mrs. Seydell pictured a bright future for women in journalism. She said that there were departments on a large newspaper in which women were essential. Talent and determination, she said, are what are needed and for interviewing celebrities, plenty of bait!

Script Writers Are Sought for Minstrel

Any student is eligible to enter the contest for the writing of the play to be presented at Junior minstrels according to a notice on the bulletin board on the lower floor of the administration building.

A prize of five dollars will be given for the best play submitted. All entries must be in by January 27.

maintain an accurate record of each student's activities. At the call of the chairman of the president's council, this committee shall jointly meet with the president's council; together these bodies shall discuss campus needs, and shall make recommendations to the proper authorities concerning the improvement of student activities.

On the recommendation of the Senate and Miss Louise Richardson, the library committee has been eliminated, and the budget committee assumes its position in the student handbook.

The section of the budget committee concerning student members shall read, "Five student members; the chairman of the committee, who shall be a senior, elected by tha Senate; and the chairman of the auditing committee: one senior and two juniors chosen by the College council."

The last sentence concerning the auditing committee shall be changed to read, "This committee shall be responsible for the auditing of the books of all student organizations at the end of the first semester of each year, and at the termination of each treasurer's term of office in said organization. This shall apply to those organizations receiving funds from the student activity fee."

The house chairmen will be delegated to do the work which formerly has been done by the fire committee.

Articles concerning the new hand book committee, the president's council and the N. S. F. A. forum committee will read as follows:

"The hand book committee shall consist of a chairman, who shall be a junior, two active members appointed by the chairman and the president of the Association: the president, chairman of judiciary, and the freshman adviser as ex-officio members. This committee shall study the hand books of other colleges with a view to improving the effectiveness of our own hand book. It shall keep the hand book up to date and shall help edit the book for the coming year.

The president's council shall consist of the president of C. G. A. as chairman, the dean of students and the president of: Y. W. C. A., W. A. A., Panhellenic, Day Student's organization, Mortar Board, the four classes, the chairman of N. S. F. A. organization, and the chairman of the social committee, and any other member which the council shall elect. This organization shall plan the college calendar. At the call of its chairman, it shall meet jointly with the extra-curricular committee; together these bodies shall discuss the campus needs and shall make recommendations to the proper authorities concerning the improvement of student activities.

The N. S. F. A. forum committee shall consist of a chairman who shall be either a junior or a senior, one senior representtive, one junior representative, and a secretary who shall be a sophomore. All members of the committee shall be elected at a meeting of the organization called for this purpose and announced at least one week in advance. This committee, which shall be the executive committee of the N. S. F. A. organization shall meet regularly and plan topica for discussion and N. S. F. A. program procedure."

Complete Report of Curriculum Changes Passed At Faculty Senate Meeting Wednesday Afternoon

In accordance with this principle and the objectives for a general education, the sub-committee submits the following plan for a scheme of general education in the college:

I. HEALTH

In the belief that a functioning health program is fundamental to the success of any program of education and that this should be secured (a) through adequate health instruction and supervision on the campus, (b) through development of such health habits as will enable a student to attain a maximum of personal effectiveness within the limits of her physical abilities, the following health program is suggested:

1. Activity Program—Physical Education: (a) Present requirement for freshmen and sophomores; (b) all juniors and seniors who attain satisfactory standards be exempted. Credit, one-half hour each semester for students who are not exempted.

2. Health Program—The present hygiene course to be organized to meet the needs of the individual student and to include the contributions of departments whose offerings are closely related to health. This health program is to be closely related to the Family life program, so that the two programs will contribute effectively to the realization of objectives 1, 5 and 9. This course to be required of all freshmen. A year course. Credit, one hour each semester.

II. ENGLISH COMPOSITION

A placement test will be given to all entering students. The results of this test should show the need of the student in terms of course work in English composition. A course in English composition will be offered which will train the student in the handling of materials as they may be used in other courses—as outlines, summaries, analyses, writing definitions, finding material, bibliographies, etc. This course will be integrated with the other courses the student is taking. Thus, she could write papers in the field in which she is interested, thereby enabling her to satisfy the demands of several courses. Any defects in spoken English should be corrected as far as possible in cooperation with the Spoken English department. This course will extend throughout the freshman year, three hours each semester. For students who do not measure up to minimum requirements for this course a review course without college credit will be available (English 001). Passing the achievement test at the end of the freshman year does not complete the student's responsibility to continue to use correct English. One of the requirements for graduation will be the demonstration of the ability to use English adequately as a tool subject throughout the four years. All departments will be expected to hold the student responsible for the achievement of this objective.

III. READING KNOWLEDGE OF ONE FOREIGN LANGUAGE

Achievement tests will be given on basis of a reading knowledge. Foreign language courses will be organized to meet this requirement so that the student may use the language as a tool. For students who enter with two acceptable high school units, a more advanced course of three semester hours for two semesters will be sufficient to meet this objective. For students beginning a new language, twelve semester hours may be required. Students who are able to demonstrate a reading knowledge will not be required to continue a foreign language in college. The language requirement is to be met before the beginning of the junior year.

IV. INTEGRATED SURVEY COURSES (Required)

1. History and Social Studies—A five-semester hour survey course will be offered by the departments of history, sociology, economics, political science and geography. In addition to the five-semester hour course a second course of four-semester hours will be required.

2. Biological Sciences—A five-semester hour survey course will be offered by the departments, bacteriology, botany, physiology and zoology (and other related sciences).

3. Physical Science—A five-semester hour survey course will be offered in astronomy, chemistry and physics (and other related sciences.)

4. Humanities—A five-semester hour orientation course will be offered by the departments of literature and other arts and philosophy.

Any two of the five-semester hour courses may be taken the freshman year and the remaining two the sophomore year. The sequences will depend on the interests of the individual students. The four-semester hour courses in History and Social Studies may be elected in either the freshman or sophomore year, or may be deferred, if necessary, to the junior year. The five-hour survey course, or the passing of an examination based thereon, will be a prerequisite for all other courses in any field included in a survey, but in certain cases, approved by the dean and head of the department and all concerned, a course represented in a survey may be taken parallel with the survey itself.

V. FAMILY LIFE

A committee, representing the departments of economics, Home Economics, hygiene, psychology and sociology, under the chairmanship of the dean of the School of Home Economics, shall prepare a detailed syllabus and determine the material to be included in a comprehensive examination designed to test the student's ability to meet this objective. The syllabus will indicate the contribution which may be secured from various existing courses. It is expected that many of the required courses listed above will contribute directly to this objective. In addition, a two-semester hour course will be organized to supplement and integrate these various contributions. This two-hour course will not be required of those students who can show a reasonable achievement in this field by passing the comprehensive examination. This part of the general education requirement may be fulfilled in the junior or senior year. The syllabus however will be distributed to students early in their college career to guide them in anticipating this requirement if they choose.

VI. In addition to the general education program, a student will be required to demonstrate her ability to make a reasonable progress in one department or field which she is to choose freely. This requirement will be met by electing in her sophomore year eight semester hours in courses in a field of her choosing.

VII. The committee recommends that electives for freshmen and sophomores be organized on a four-hour basis. But in certain cases combination courses to total 4 hours as 2 plus 2 or 3 plus 1 may be elected. With such organization the number of subjects carried during any given semester is materially reduced.

VIII. Any student wishing to take the comprehensive examination in any of the above required courses will be granted the privilege. Passing successfully such an examination shall exempt the student from that portion of the required work which the examination covers.

IX. The committee recommends that a definite testing program be established. This program should provide the mechanics for measuring the achievement of the objectives set forth above.

X. The committee recommends that a study be made looking to the establishment of a guidance program that may function successfully in the general program.

XI. The plan as outlined is to be put into operation in the fall of 1936. A full and complete explanation of the provisions and their implications should be given wide publicity and specifically should be printed in the forthcoming college catalog and in the freshman Course Book The registrar will be responsible for the preparation of this material.

Campus, Town Suffused With The Holiday Spirit

companions that she was too excited to eat.

Down town the stores are thronged with college Christmas shoppers. They mill around in the gayly and gaudily bedecked ten-cent stores They haunt the gift shops, and they drive busy store-keepers to distraction with their davorite pastime of "just looking." Worried faces of the girls who just can't decide what to get their roommates, the infantile glee of girls picking out toys for their smaller brothers and sisters from the glittering displays, the frantic card buyer, the bundle laden student who sings out that she has just finished her shopping are all familiar sights on the streets and in the stores of Tallahassee these last two weeks.

In these hectic days of rushing there is one type of student who is the envy and at the same time the secret hate of the average put-off-everything-to-the-last-minute girl. This individual will disclose to you upon the slightest mention of the approaching holiday her shelf of beautifully wrapped gifts that she has bought and wrapped in the calm and the peaceful "do your Christmas shopping early" manner that you hear so much about and very seldom see in practice.

Studies Continue

For the college professors as well as the student body these are "times which try men's souls." A few become so infused with the spirit of things that they make this last week a kind of additional holiday for their students, but the grim majority not only insist upon the absolute continuance of normal classes but also plan tests to take the Christmas-infected students' blood pressure down a little.

Probably the most anticipatory student on the campus is the young lady who started packing one day this week. Discovered in the midst of tucking the boy friend's present tenderly away in a corner of her suitcase she wailed, "Well—I'll forget something if I don't start now, and besides, I just can't wait!"

Group Tells of Program Plan

AAUW to Sponsor Guest Speakers This Year At Convocation

Under the auspices of the local branch of the American Association of University Women, guest speakers will be presented at three convocations during the coming year, beginning on Tuesday, January 14 when Mrs. Fay MacCracken Stockwell, field secretary for the division of euthenics at Vassar, will give an address.

The other two programs will include a talk by Dr. Elisabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel at Florida State College, March 10, on "How A. A. U. W. Fosters Advanced Study" and a discussion on the "Economic and Legal Status of Women in the United States," of which the national A. A. U. W. has been making a study. Dr. Beulah B. Briley is chairman of the local committee on this subject which will be in charge of presenting this discussion to the student body.

The program of the A. A. U. W. this year has been arranged with the view of contributing something of value to the life of the college and of interesting the students in the work of the organization, according to Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell, local president. With these objectives in view the A. A. U. W. is sponsoring a series of open-forum discussions in addition to the convocation speakers.

The forum meeting for January will be in charge of the international relations committee of which Miss Marion Irish, associate professor of political science, is chairman.

"Children's and Young People's Books" will be discussed at the February forum meeting under the charge of the education committee, of which Dr. Enda Mae Deviney is chairman.

As the party to the senior class, which the A. A. U. W. gives annually, will take place in March there will be no forum meeting during that month.

On April the forum plans will be arranged by the legislative committee of which Dr. Katherine T. Abbey is chairman.

Several forums have already been presented this year by the A. A. U. W. Dr. Venilla L. Shores, associate professor of history, discussed the Italian-Ethiopian situation at one meeting. The work of the WPA was outlined by Mrs. Herbert Leonardy, director of the education department of the Florida WPA, and the legal status of women in Florida and desirable amendments thereof was presented by Miss Zoe Manning recently.

Program at Ruge Hall

Sunday morning at 10 o'clock at Ruge Hall the Episcopal students will present a Christmas program. On the following Wednesday evening, December 18, a group of the students will go carrolling around the campus.

Blankets And Alarm Clocks Declare War

Monday Morning Paints Life in Dull Tints After Holiday

The alarm clock sounds on Monday morning! A new day and a new week have begun!

Oh, the thoughts that run through a student's mind on those horrible Monday mornings! Classes have to be attended all over again; there are tests anew for which cramming must be done; meetings need to be attended; rooms have to be put in order after a busy week-end; but above all, one has to get up! The very thought of having to get out of a cosy, warm bed is enough to make you go mad when you could probably go on sleeping for at least twenty-four hours more. The word slepe—what a heavenly word!

And to think that yesterday at this very same time you were sound asleep, dreaming of the wonderful day before you! You could sleep as long as you desired; that is, until Tom came by to take you to church and then out to dinner. You were going to be with Tom! Now today all those sweet times spent with "him" are gone—far gone into the past!

Life is futile anyway! One only lives for the week-ends, and week-ends pass so quickly. Why couldn't life be composed of just week-ends instead of those Mondays and other awful week days? But, no, that would make one grow tired of life too soon; life would become monotonous.

Studying! What good will grades do you, say fifty years from now? No one then will know whether you spent your four years in college with your name on the probation or on the approbation list. And even if they did, then what? It will only serve as a good story to tell your grandchildren. Imagine sitting before a log fire telling your grandchildren of the time your name appeared on the approbation list! They would probably just give you a boring look and say, if their language is anything like our language of today, "so what?"

However, it's about time you were waking up. Everyone else is up and moving around. They are laughing, singing, and greeting their fellow comrades with a cheery "good morning!" How can they do it?

You begin to wonder if any of them have the same feelings as you have—certainly some of them must. Then how can they be so chereful and enthusiastic? They have more "spunk" in them, that's all.

Now you begin to feel a little ashamed of yourself for carrying on like a spoiled child when in reality you are a college student—almost a grown woman! Why not face life and take all the things that come—good and bad? You think over in your mind the things you intend to do. You'll just show that Spanish teacher that no matter what kind of test she gives to you you'll pass it with flying colors! And you know you can read Dryden and Munan and get as much out of it as any other student!

"Life is like a bowl of cherries; don't take it seriously; it's too mysterious!" All right! Let classes come; you're going to be ready for them Let week-ends come, too; you'll be waiting for them! Life is thrilling, exciting, and oh! so much fun!!

Thus you jump out of bed and greet your roommate with a happy smile and a cheery good morning. You are prepared to face the world wtih a smile on your face because, after all, who wants to look at a scowling frown?

Spanish Initiation Held For Mathis and Linger

Annabelle Linger and Laura Mathis were initiated into Sigma Delta Pi, Spanish honorary, last Friday afternoon at five thirty o'clock at Ruge hall.

Ruth Dixon, president, was in charge of the initiation ceremony, and other members present were: Ruth Feinberg, Sara Krentzman, Martha Wolliston, Virginia Cromartie, Anna Groover, Winifred Hansen, Dorothy Purse, and Wylna Terbush.

Curriculum Revision For Two Years Is Effected

Up to now no provision has been made for the waiving of the requirement in the case of the student who can demonstrate a reading knowledge of a foreign language on entering the college.

At the same time the present requirement of twelve semester hours of English constants has been changed to six required hours of English composition plus a survey course in the humanities. On entering college freshmen will be required to take an English placement test which is to show the need of the student, in terms of course work, in English composition. This course in English composition is to be so integrated with the other courses which the student is taking that she could write papers in the field in which she is interested, thereby enabling her to satisfy the demands of several courses At the same time every department will be expected to hold the student responsible throughout the four years for the achievement of the ability to use English adequately as a tool subject, the demonstration of this ability to be one requirement for graduation.

The humanities is to be a five-semester hour orientation course offered by the department of literature, philosophy, and other arts, and is one of the four integrated survey courses to be required of freshmen and sophomores.

The other three integrated survey courses to be required besides the humanities are five-semester hour history and social studies course, a five-semester hour survey course in the biological sciences, and a five-semester hour survey course in the physical sciences. Any two of the five-semester hour courses, according to the report as accepted, may be taken the freshman year and the remaining two the sophomore year. The sequences will depend on the interests of the individual students. The four-semester hour course in history and social studies may be elected in either the freshman or sophomore year or may be deferred, if necessary to the junior year. The five-hour survey course or the passing of an examination based thereon will be a prerequisite for all other courses in any field included in a survey, but in exceptional cases approved by the dean and the head of the department concerned a course in a department included in a suryey may parallel the survey.

Play is Chosen By FHS Seniors

"Lady Spitfire" to Show Next Wednesday Night

The senior class of the Demonstration school will present as their annual class play, Lady Spitfire, next Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Augusta Conradi theatre.

The cast includes only members of the senior class. Lavine Voss as Miss Prudence, heads a fashionable boarding school for girls. Her girls and would-be employees give her no and of trouble. Harriet Kent is Cindy Dale, pretty in a quaint, modest sort of way. A lively pert young person of seventeen is Ginger Reid, a role played by Frances Johnston.

Margaret Salley, as Flobelle Berthon, is a good-looking girl of eighteen, conceited but agreeable when it pleases her to be. As Kay Sutton, Dorothy Hunter is a charming haughty young person who is used to commanding others. The role of her dignified father is played by Odis Kendrick.

Collegiate, athletic, Foster Boone finds employment in the Rutherford school for girls. His best friend and fellow employee is Bud Jones, a role played by John Loverett. Davison Philips, as a typical raw-boned "hayseed," draws many laughs. The mystery gentleman is Henri, played by C. D. Williams.

Miss Sara Hoses, director of the play, is assisted by Althea Lloyd, stage manager, Alberts Lloyd, property manager, and Margaret Salley, publicity chairman. Mr. Kenneth R. Williams is the class adviser in charge.

FLORIDA STATE ALUMNAE NEWS

BY LAURA STRUNK LESLIE

nside College Gates

Miss Zoe Manning, Tallahassee, first vice president of the Florida Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs, at a meeting before the American Association of University Women last week at Ruge hall explained the legal status of women in Florida and the work the organization which she represents is doing to improve woman's status. To illustrate the point that women in Florida are seriously handicapped legally the guest speaker said the legal status of women in this state today is on a basis with that of women in England before the American Revolution. Miss Manning said that to further improve woman's status in Florida the Florida Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs plans to sponsor a bill in the next session of the legislature for the complete emancipation of women, whether married or single, and to place them on an equality with men of the business world, economically, politically and legally. This forum, one among a number planned, was sponsored by the legislative committee of the AAUW. Dr. Katherine T. Abbey, chairman of the committee, introduced the speaker.

The report and recommendations of the budget committee of the college council which were presented to the council last week for consideration and approval have been adopted in full by that body. Evelyn Kennard, Tampa, chairman of the budget committee has reported. The work of the committee was three-fold in character. It included a survey of the activities covered by the student activity fee and a reorganization of the distribution thereof, the proration of the fee, and the approving of the annual budgets presented by the various organization heads.

A test for hearing is being given to all students of the college by means of an audiometer which has been secured for a limited time from the state rehabilitation department for this purpose. The test is intended for the benefit of all the students in order to enable those who have defective hearing to get individual tests and determine the defect. The test is given with records and ear-phone attachments. The record gives degrees in tones and those taking the test record whether they hear the tones or not. This test has been given recently in all of the Tampa schools and has been brought here as an outcome of the class in lip-reading conducted by Mrs. Elizabeth Chambers of Miami. If there is a demand for the course by those who have defective hearing and wish to learn lip reading the course will be taught again next year.

Miss Beatrice Candee, a 1935 graduate of Florida State College and the present head of the psychology department of the Vocational Service for Juniors in New York City, recently visited the campus. The Vocational Service for Juniors with which Miss Candee is connected is a private agency which is now carrying on a junior consultation service. It combines the project of vocational service for juniors, young men and women between the ages of six and twenty-one with the work that the New York employment agency undertakes. Miss Candee is working at the present time on a text book of psychology. She was at one time assistant to Dr. Paul Finner, head of the psychology department of the college.

State Branches Elect Officers

Homecoming Reports Are Given at Meetings

With the resumption of fall and winter meetings several of the alumnae associations throughout the state have elected officers.

The Alachua county branch of the Florida alumnae association had its fall meeting recently at the home of the president, Mrs. B. W. Ames, in Gainesville. Features of the meeting were the annual election of officers and reports of the annual homecoming at Florida State college.

The new officers are: Mrs. J. R Benton, president; Miss Joanna Morris, vice president; Mrs. J. M. Lang, secretary, and Miss Nell Morris, treasurer.

Mrs. James W. McCohum reported on the alumnae institute held as part of homecoming and Mrs. L. W. Traxter told of the Thanksgiving festivities as a whole at the college.

Following the business session the retiring president was hostess at an informal tea and assisted by Mrs. Robert T. Hargrave and Miss Clarissa Rolfs. Garnet and gold, Florida State's colors, were appropriately used in the decorative plan and were effectively carried out with yellow chrysanthemums and autumn leaves.

The first meeting of the Dixie county alumnae was held November 21 at the home of Mrs. Dana S. Jones. Officers elected include Miss Augusta Poer, president; Mrs. L. Echols, vice president; Mrs. Dana S. Jones, secretary, and Mrs. Marie C. Smith, treasurer.

Committee chairmen named were: Miss Martha Dickey, social; Mrs. Helen M. Anderson, program; Miss Yvonne Radford, transportation, and Miss Eloise Brizzard, publicity.

Other members present were: Miss Julia Ruth Radford, Miss Jeanette Snyder, Miss Lora Winney and Mrs. O. Arrant. The second meeting was held December 2 at the home of Mis Poer.

At the last election of officers the following Miami alumnae were chosen to fill positions: Mrs. Charles Fisher, president; Miss Margaret Pace, vice president; Mrs. Martin F Whelan, Jr., corresponding secretary; Mrs. Willie Quinn, financial chairman; Mrs. Roy J. Schneider, publicity chairman; Mrs. J. J. Smith, chairman of the nominating committee; Miss Helen Fiss, treasurer; Miss Helen Whitten scholarship chairman; Miss Charlottee Chase, courtesy chairman; Miss Mary Lou Key, program chairman; Mrs. Cabell Carrier social chairman; Miss Nina McAdam, student advisory chairman; Miss Nell Cooper, parliamentarian, and Miss Henrietta Graham, recording secretary.

Jennie Rae Nall Weds Last Week

Ceremony is Held Here Saturday Evening

Of interest to alumnae of Florida State College for Women is the announcement of the marriage last Saturday of Miss Jennie Rae Nall, graduate of the class of 1935 of which she is the permanent president, to Howard Maurice Cone Jr. of Miami.

The wedding took place at the home of Miss Anna Forbes Liddell in Tallahassee, with Dr. Luther Rice Christice, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiating.

Gordon H. Knott, Pensacola, was best man. There were no formal attendants. However, Miss Frances Parks, Atlanta; Miss Jean Hamner, Jacksonville, classmates of the bride and Miss Lucy Gee Linn, Lakeland, Miss Edith Phelps, Miami, Miss Peggy McMichael, Tampa, and Miss Mary Jeanne McKay, Tampa, all students of the college, stood with the bride during the ceremony.

The wedding bower under which the vows were taken was arranged between two windows ni the sun parlor of the home. Southern smilax and lacy fern were festooned over the windows and between the two center windows the bower was formed. Baskets of white chrysanthemums were placed on pedestals.

Miss Augusta Murphy, violinist, and Miss Mary Reeder, harpist, furnished the nuptial music.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Charles Ledbetter Nall, Miami, was dressed in white silk chiffon, shot with rhinestones and fashioned with a demi-train. Her veil was short and was held with an orange blossom wreath. Her flowers were lovely double Killarney roses and valley lilies, tied with wide white satin ribbon.

Miss Liddell who is professor of philosophy at Florida State wore a formal afternoon gown of pink lace. The young women who stood with the bride wore formal pastel afternoon gowns.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Worley Nall. She attended Florida State College for Women and was president of the Young Women's Christian association.

The bridegroom is a native of Washington state. He is a graduate of the University of Washington. He has been stationed at Miami with the Pan-American Airways for sometime as a junior pilot.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding were members of the bride's family from Alberton, Ga. They were Mrs. John Ledbetter, grandmother of the bride; Mary Nall, a younger sister; Victor Ledbetter, uncle of the bride, and his two young daughters, Frances and Helen; an aunt, Mrs. Jennie Nall Mathews, of Atlanta. Miss Hazel Royall was also a guest.

The wedding was witnessed by a few intimate friends and was followed by a small reception. The reception room was decorated with green and red in keeping with the pre-holiday season. White double roses and Florida smilax decorated the dining room. The table was covered with an antique hand-made lace cloth and in the center was a huge bride's cake decorated with a tiny bride and groom, made and decorated by Miss Anna Mae Tracy, head dietitian of Florida State college. On two opposite corners of the table were white candles in silver holders and white roses in silver vases on the two corners.

The young couple left by motor for a wedding trip which will take them to California where they will make their home. Mr. Cone has been transferred to the Pan-American air station at Alamada.

Alumna Writes of FSCW Week

Sebring Member Tells Of Observance Held In Highlands County

In conjunction with the recent announcement of the date of F. S. C. W. week for March 1-7 comes a timely letter from Louise Houck of Sebring explaining the activities carried out last year in Highlands county in celebration of the week.

Without any organized alumnae club and further hindered by the fact that no one from Florida State college had been delegated to visit the county the alumnae from this county had one of the best observances in the state.

Miss Houck has written a description of the many things that were arranged including an account of the display arranged in the Avon Park school. This was accompanied by lectures three times a day by Miss Houck who explained the collection of F. S. C. W. material.

Miss Houck's letter follows:

"Since plans are being formulated for another F. S. C. W. Week, and since the interchange of ideas has often proved valuable, I am going to give an account of the activities carried out by Highlands county in 1935.

"We were somewhat handicapped at first, it is true, because of the non-existence of an organized alumnae club. The information furnished by the college, however, enabled us to learn the identities of the girls who had attended the school and to contact them. Our second difficulty lay in the fact that no one from F. S. C. had been delegated to visit our vicinity and to impart information concerning the college. We called upon an alumnae to serve in that capacity. Mrs. Ford Heacock (Mary Saunders) of Sebring, appeared before the Lions, Rotary, Woman's and Junior Woman's clubs where she delivered speeches made all the more effective because of the personal element involved. In addition to the talks given, all the newspapers of the county carried items concerning the activities of the college and of its alumnae. Pictures of the campus were posted in all prominent places. An entire room in the Avon Park school was devoted to an exhibition. In it was displayed not only the material furnished by the college but also those many things that an alumna has been able to collect in four years of school: Snapshorts, Thanksgiving menus, programs of artist series, odd pieces of a desk set bearing the insignia of the three torches—even a diploma, honorary fraternity pins, and the college ring. I, personally, three times a day, lectured on the various objects displayed therein. Thus far, we had made some effort to acquaint the civic organisations, the general public, and the students of the schools with the things of interest concerning our Alma Mater. There still remained some form of social reunion for the county alumnae. Therefore, as a climax of the week a banquet followed by a bridge was planned. The floral decorations were of garnet and gold. The menu-autograph booklets and the tallies were of the same colors and bore upon their covers the college seal. Everything was suggestive of F. S. C. W.

"Our efforts, to be sure, can not be considered great. Still, we have begun to make Highlands county F. S. C. W.-conscious and we shall strive to make that next week a bigger and better one than before."

Popular "Gator Song" Composed By FSC Alumna

Mrs. F. M. Kelley, a graduate of the former East Florida seminary in Gainesville and who several years ago was granted a diploma from Florida State College for Women, was recently honored at the University of Florida for writing the words and music for a "pep" song for that institution.

Mrs. Kelley's composition, the "Gator Song," has been arranged as band music by DeWitt Brown, band master of the University of Florida. The "Gator Song," which has proven exceedingly popular, has a peppy tune with a good swing, and has been declared by students and alumni of the University of Florida as a song which will continue to gain in popularity through the years.

Mrs. Kelley is the mother of Laura May and Ruth Kelley who attended Florida State College for Women several years ago.

St. Petersburg Graduates Meet

Odd-Even Member Drive Begun by Branch

The second meeting of the year of the St. Petersburg alumnae association this week at the home of Miss Frances Wood saw the opening of a membership drive rivalry between the Odd and Even classes. It was agreed that the classes having the largest attendance at meetings from December through April would be treated to a dinner by the losing classes. The Evens are now in the lead with nine members present. Only six Odds attended the meeting.

Miss Frances Hurlin, program chairman, announced that alumnae meetings hereafter would be held the second Monday in each month on the mezzanine floor of the Suwannee hotel, the next session to be January 13.

Miss Narcissa Leland, the association's delegate to the festivities at Tallahassee, Thanksgiving week-end, reported on the statewide alumnae association activities. In order to further St. Petersburg's part in the FSCW week plans, Miss Edna Hoffman was appointed publicity chairman for the St. Petersburg association.

In connection with the membership drive Miss Carleen Vinal, president of the local branch, suggested that alumnae groups in other cities in Pinellas county be contacted, in order that programs could be exchanged.

It was also decided that membership in the alumnae association would not be limited to graduates of the college only. Any who attended F. S. C. W. during either a winter or a summer session is eligible for membership.

Members present at the meeting were Betty Ryder, Carleen Vinal, Mrs. Ruth Belcher, Narcissa Leland, Mrs. Frances Lufler, Mrs. W. L. Beck, Frances Hurlin, Mrs. John Chandler, Kathryn Byers, Evelyn Byrd, Mona Estabrook, Frances Wood, Edna Hoffman, Cornelia Garrick and Mrs. Edwina Chauncey.

Bids on Renovating Ad Building Are Rejected; Others Will Be Called

At a meeting of the Board of Commissioners of the State Institutions Wednesday afternoon, it was decided to reject the previously submitted bids on the renovation of the north wing of the Administration Building, and open bids on December 28, in the office of Mr. Ross Watson, head of the Public Works Administration, Tallahassee Branch.

The two bids submitted on December 4, in the same office, exceeded the $90,000 federal and state appropriation, and after a discussion in the meeting of the board, it was decided that instead of revamping the entire project, the old bids would be rejected, and new ones called for. Mr. Kellum, business manager of the college, said that he expected some definite plans to be submitted and approved, and work would start immediately. If so, work will probably be in progress when the college reopens on January 8, 1936, after the Christmas holidays.

Alumnae Have Fall Meetings

Other Clubs Will Gather During Holidays With College Students

Officers of the Alumnae Association have been busily engaged during the fall months assisting with plans and programs for the various alumnae clubs throughout the State. Club meetings have already been held in Clearwater, Miami, Monticello, and New York. Other clubs are planning meetings during the Christmas holidays when students at the college can be present and bring first hand information to the group of current happenings at the college.

Officers of the state alumnae association are Mrs. E. L. Beeson, '18, Groveland, president. Anna May Sikes, '23, Tallahassee, vice president. Rowena Longmire, '12, Tallahassee, and Mrs. J. W. McCollum, Gainesville, representatives at large. Ruth Schornherst, '26, Tallahassee secretary. Sara Burwell, '17, Tallahassee, treasurer.

District directors and the counties they represent follow:

District I—Mrs. J. P. Ashmore, 526 Graceville. Escambia, Santa Rosa, Okaloosa, Walton, Holmes, Jackson, Washington, Bay and Calhoun counties.

District II—Gladys Folsom, '35, Monticello: Gadsden, Liberty, Franklin, Wakulla, Leon, Jefferson, Madison, Taylor, Lafayette and Dixie counties.

District III—Carolina DeMontigne, '35, Jacksonville Hamilton, Suwannee, Columbia, Baker, Nassau, Duval, St Johns, Clay, Union, Bradford, Putnam, Alachua and Gilchrist counties.

District IV—Natalie Lamb, '25, Daytona Beach: Levy, Marion, Citrus, Hernando, Sumter, Lake, Flagler, Volusia, Seminole and Orange counties.

District VII—Charlotte Chase, '32, Miami: Okeechobee, St. Lucie, Martin, Palm Beach, Broward, Dade and Monroe counties.

District VIII—Maud McCall, Clearwater: Pasco, Pinellas, Hillsborough, Manatee and Sarasota counties.

Christmas Books Feature Exhibit

'Night Before Christmas' Included in Display

In the spirit of the nearing holiday, the library shows a very interesting and novel Christmas exhibit made up of a variety of ideas concerning the origin and history of Christmas.

The librarian has chosen for this exhibit many different types of books which will make ideal Christmas gifts for children as well as older friends—books which have been seen all through the ages in the best libraries and in the hands of the reader who enjoys the finer things of life.

Among the many books which compose this exhibit are new books for general entertainment, a small number of Christmas books—books which tell the old stories of Christmas in a ever-unique and interesting way, and other books which have always been prominent on the gift lists of busy Christmas shoppers.

A part of the exhibit which is in contrast somewhat to the other parts is a display of the old poem, "The Night Before Christmas," illustrated with colorful pictures.

The real meaning of Christmas is not forgotten in the exhibit. A distinct part of the whole exhibit is given entirely to religious pictures and books about the first Christmas.

Conradi Attends Three College Meetings Held At Louisville Recently

Dr. Edward G. Conradi, president of the college, returned this week from Louisville, Kentucky, where he attended meetings of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Southern Association of Colleges for Women, and the Southern University conference December 2-6.

While in Louisville, Dr. Conradi also attended a meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges for Women in which panel discussions were held on the topics, "How Youth Looks at Religious and Educational Questions," and "How Youth Looks at Social and Political Questions," with the aim of stimulating better understanding between faculty members and students.

What Price College "Culture"?

Every situation has its proverbial "last straw." But when that straw is followed by a deluge of others of its kind in a steady stream we run out of shoulder-shrugging expressions and [illegible] about to do something about it.

Our college artist series, and our forum lecture series we accept as a part of the cultural atmosphere to which we are exposed when we come to college. We see and hear musicians, dancers, stock companies, and lecturers by the dozen and are content to allow them in stolid procession to pass through our campus with only an occasional memorable performance among them. If we ever are lacking in interest, if it ever enters our heads for an instant's consideration that perhaps someone else might have given us a more enjoyable or a more worthwhile evening, or if, above all, we pause to wonder why it is that our campus is never host to more of the illustrious among those arts represented on our platforms, we do so quite differently and with a shrug, dismiss the matter from our minds.

After all these things are handled for us by the "committee" in charge—just as everything in the collegiate world is handled by committees. Why bother our heads over it at all. We let it go. And that's where we're wrong.

This year students aren't shrugging quite as much as usual. They're thinking, and talking about the artist series and forum lecture series that have been planned for them. When the preliminary list of performers and lecturers was published, not many comments were heard, because students weren't familiar with the names announced on that list. A few questioned the selections on the basis that the artists chosen were not particularly well known, but not until opportunities to see and hear recognizedly great ones were passed up by the college did the undercurrent of protest swell into a sizeable stream.

Several weeks ago everywhere one turned the subject of student conversation soon became Fritz Kreisler, whom we were almost privileged to hear. The student grapevine telegraph was put in excellent working order as soon as the humor was out that we might have secured Mr. Kreisler's performance here on our own campus, since he was to give a concert in Jacksonville anyway, but that other artists had been chosen in his stead because, they say, we're not a sufficiently appreciative audience.

Vigorous shoulder-shrugging was done all over campus, with audible mutterings about the "last straw." Close upon the heels of [illegible] the news, via the grape-vine, of [illegible] that Katharine Cornell, performing as far south as Atlanta, might also have been brought to Florida State. More audible murmurs were heard. Just at present students are wondering, with further discussion, if it is true that we might have heard Heywood Broun here, if he had been engaged when he was available.

Rumor succeeds rumor, about celebrities who "might have" appeared here. Some of them, doubtless, are true enough, their truth leading us to question the system which asks no advice from the group within the college representing interest in the field from which a particular speaker or performer will be chosen, which group nevertheless, of faculty as well as students, will be expected to entertain that guest because he is an "outstanding" member of that particular field. That group must appear to sponsor the guest artist, sometimes even to introduce him on the platform, whatever its private feelings about the matter.

If our "cultural opportunities" are to be consistently second-rate, what chance have we to raise our standards of appreciation, and what good in expending the sizeable amount of dollars the provision of that "culture" represents? We call this matter to the attention of the college as a whole.

Looking To the Future

Florida State took a step forward in the educational scheme this week when the faculty senate accepted, with several slight amendments, the report of the curriculum committee.

The recent tendency in many colleges throughout the country has been toward a more liberal education with specialization deferred until the junior year. In line with this concept of education, which gives the student a wider background of general knowledge, many changes will go into effect here next year.

One change however, toward which many were looking, according to campus rumor, was not made at this time. It deals with the foreign language requirement which seems inconsistent with the rest of the program. As one of its objectives for a general education the report included "a reading knowledge of one foreign language" and provided for achievement tests on this basis.

"Foreign language courses will be organized to meet this requirement," the report reads, "so that the student may use the language as a tool."

But the report fails to say in what way this tool is to be used. If the ability to read original source material in one's major field is the object, one may question this requirement on the ground that few undergraduate students ever have need of thi . In fact, few students have time to read all of the best material available in English. If an increased facility in the use of English is implied, might not the problem be attacked more directly by improving other existing courses?

If the interest of the student is of paramount importance, it might be well to consider the fact that all students might not receive as much benefit from the time expended in the study of a language as if that time were spent on some other subject of their choosing.

Although the present conditions have been definitely proved, since those students who already have a reading knowledge of another language, will be exempt from any requirement, most students will still have to take at least six hours in college.

The next step would be the entire elimination of the foreign language requirement. Besides allowing more general electives to the individual student, it would also give the student who enters college with a specific educational or vocational aim a better opportunity to pursue that aim.

Here, then, is one direction toward which Florida State might well look for additional curriculum changes in the future

Now You Can Talk About Militarism

Do you want the colleges of your country to enforce military training for their students? The committee on militarism in education assumes that you don't, and it is sponsoring an editorial writing contest on what it defines as a "national issue of immediate importance to students."

The topic is "Why Congress Should Pass the Nye-Kvale Amendment," and any undergraduate is eligible for entrance in the contest which closes January 3, 1936. The amendment under discussion proposes to make R. O. T. C. in schools and colleges optional instead of compulsory.

Students who wish to write in the contest may apply for further directions and material to George A. Coe, 2929 Broadway, New York City.

Now, when the nation and the nation's schools are clamoring for peace is the time for individuals to express themselves and to aid the cause they have so enthusiastically espoused.

WHY DON'T COLLEGE STUDENTS STAY EDUCATED?
By Christian Gauss
Saturday Evening Post, December 7.

Dean Gauss, who spoke here at the Phi Beta Kappa installation program last year, answers this pertinent question with the simple statement, "Perhaps, in many cases, the college graduate was never really educated."

Dean Gauss means by the word "educated," however, "trained either to devote oneself seriously to any cultured or scholarly ideal, or to that other democratic ideal of deeper devotion to the public interest."

Both are worth training for he says, but first as professors and alumni we must rid ourselves of that complacency which has been and is now the greatest single obstacle barring a significant advance in American college education.

That complacency is evident in our allowing fraternities and football to nominate campus interests, the writer adds while books and classes are left as consolation for the socially and athletically unfit. Not until this attitude is modified will students and alumni become actively interested in educational problems.

BACK TO WHAT CONSTITUTION?
By Ralph Adams Cram
American Mercury, December.

Between our sacred documents of 1787 and the constitution today, little relationship exists, according to Mr. Cram, who says those people now clamoring for "Back to the Constitution" as a platform slogan might discover the conditions set forth in the original constitution are not what they want at all.

For instance, the small group of men framing our constitution were not in favor of ever allowing the people directly to elect the president or the senators, who were supposed to act as an intelligent check on the actions of the representatives; who were in turn elected by the people.

These men also believed in decentralizing the power of the government by dividing it among various sections of the government. The absolute veto now exercised by the Supreme court, says Cram, is absolutely inconsistent with their original plan.

They were probably the most intelligent group of men we ever had as lawmakers, Cram believes, and most of them would have probably been against the last six amendments added to our constitution. They considered suffrage a privilege, says Cram in conclusion, and "not a right inherent in man by virtue of his being of that debatable genus, Homo sapiens."

SUCCESS STORY
Fortune, December.

This article describes completely the everyday life of a Detroit industrial worker, who happens to be a shade luckier than thousands of others in his position.

Corkum, for instance, by virtue of having no children and a Scottish wife who gets part-time jobs occasionally, has now secured for himself a comfortable home, a 1933 Plymouth, a radio and an electric washing machine all on the installment plan.

He fills his several hours of leisure a day with a game of crib or the work of the Plymouth union of the American Federation of Labor, of which he is president. He forms his opinions on the only reading matter he has— the Saturday Evening Post, labor journals, the Detroit Times (a Hearst paper) and the Webster dictionary—and is considered somewhat of a radical among his union brothers.

His health is not always good but his factory doctors deny the conditions surrounding his job cause his malady. If his trade of paint sprayman in an automobile factory does not vanish like his former trade of hand varnisher did and no more depressions occur, he has a fifty-fifty chance "to win out in the race against time." At sixty years of age he will have paid for his house and insurance premiums. He will need only casual jobs then to carry him through old age

ADVENTURES IN DIET—II
By Vilhjalmur Stefansson
Harpers, December.

Stefansson describes in this second article the experiment conducted by a committee of scientists in New York City where he and Karsten Andersen, also former Arctic explorer, lived on a meat and water diet for a year under conditions of ordinary city life.

The most significant conclusion, perhaps, was that the average man cannot live on lean meat alone for it constitutes a high protein diet, he suffers no ill effects from a normal meat diet, however, that is for instance, a pound and a third of lean meat per day and half a pound of fat. Since fat is high-priced, it is only practical that starch should come to take its place.

On paper the chemical analysts found the meat and liquid diet was seriously low in calcium. Andersen and Stefansson declared they felt more energtic and zestful towards their work both in summer and winter while on this diet, however than they had in years immediatey previous.

An investigation of the skeletons of meat-eating Eskimos revealed no calcium deficiency. They suffered no more in a lifetime than Andersen and Stefansson did in a year. The rest of the committee's conclusions will be given in a third article next month.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES

By GRACE MARY WEBSTER

THE five-power naval conference in London which opened with a pre-conceived failure in the minds of the delegates is already sunk deep in a gloom which is not just London fog.

Japan dealt the first blow by announcing that she is not ready to dismiss any other question until her flat demand for absolute naval parity with Great Britain and the United States is taken up. On this issue both the United States and Great Britain have publicly objected. According to Frederick T. Birchall, correspondent to the New York Times, Great Britain seems more inclined to listen to Japan than we do. It is thought that John Bull will probably maneuver the question around until it becomes primarily an issue between the United States and Japan. Meanwhile England will sit back and watch the fight, ready at any moment to jump in should her interests be endangered. The American attitude is that the Oriental question should be more Britain's concern than ours. Nevertheless on Wednesday Japan came out with a plan offering Great Britain naval superiority of the world if Japan could rank equal to the United States! What will Norman T. Davis say to that?

The second big issue which is bound to rise is that of naval parity on the Mediterranean, where France steadfastly rejects Italy's claims to naval parity with her.

With naive optimism Norman T. Davis, our ambassador-at-large, suggested on the second day of the conference a plan for a 20 per cent reduction of all nations, the plan which President Roosevelt sent in writing to the conference. In case the 20 per cent reduction did not go through he suggested backing down to 15 per cent, or 10 per cent or 5 per cent. Perhaps more significant than this Roosevelt added:

"I cannot approve nor would I be willing to submit to the Senate of the United States any new treaty calling for larger navies. Governments have no right to seek treaties increasing armaments." Roosevelt's plan, needless to say, was coolly received.

AFTER a two-day row over the question of whether we should send delegates to the Olympics, the general conference of the Amateur Athletic Union which met in New York this week withdrew a resolution to withhold American athletes. A cautious resolution was added to the effect that certification of athletes must not be construed to imply endorsement of the Nazi government.

Jeremiah T. Mahoney, president of the union, declared that the vote made it impossible for him to run for re-election since he felt that he could not "in good conscience carry it out."

The last time the Olympics were scheduled to be held in Germany the games were never held. The World War stopped them. Since then Germany has gone through much, even today seventeen years after the war Germany nurses a resentment and a hatred against the nations which took such costly revenge on her. Today, when the United States is flooded with organizations sending out lecturers and propaganda to convert us to world peace, when Washington seethes with talk of preserving our traditional neutrality policies, it seems only fitting that we should reject what would have been a petty gesture on our part.

AFTER twenty minutes before a court of conservative judges the ace new deal lawyer, Solicitor General Stanley Reed, who appeared on the Bankhead cotton control act, nearly collapsed from overwork. Twenty-four hours later the government announced to the U. S. Supreme court that it would present no further argument than a 171-page brief outlining the government's position. Roosevelt's speech in Chicago is considered one of the best defenses presented. Reed, when he appeared in the court did not get a chance to go as far as arguing the constitutionality of the Bankhead law. He was so constantly interrupted by quick-fire questions from every side that after 20 minutes he staggered to his chair and asked the court to postpone further consideration.

THE plan offered by Laval and Hoare to Mussolini has proved a bomb everywhere. The first explosion was in parliament before the plan ever left England. After it was amended sufficiently the plan was forwarded to Abyssinia and Italy. The small nations of the league are reported as having accused the powers of "selling out" Ethiopia, since the plan practically gives half of Ethiopia to Italy. The cry of "It is a reward for aggression" is high in Geneva. Meanwhile the powers are postponing the "general sanctions staff" of eighteen which was to meet to discuss oil sanctions, until Mussolini has given some answer. An objection similar to that raised by the smaller nations of the League was raised by Senator Borah of Idaho.

PURPOSE OF EDUCATION

What value can be placed upon a baccalaureate degree? Examining the credentials of applicants for jobs, many employers ask themselves this question. All too often they find that the dull and sluggish person equipped with just the same degree as the alert and useful one: that the mere possession of a sheepskin is no proper certificate of energy, imagination or usefulness.

We have long heard that education is the hope of the world, that only through schools and more scholastic training can the present generation escape the slough of despond in which the world has found itself. In one sense this is true enough, but in another the educational process does not seem to work out that way. Not only is it necessary that there be education; it seems even more necessary that an education have penetration as well as diplomas.

Recently Columbia University's School of Journalism undertook to transform itself from an undergraduate institution. Dean C. W. Ackerman, the head of the school, has been trying to reorient it, to equip it to do a better job of training intelligent youth for the world of journalism. One of the first problems that came to him after the school took on a graduate character was how to evaluate the B. A. degree.

"The face value of a degree was negligible," he has just reported to President Butler. "Examination of several hundred college graduates from schools all over the country forced us to establish other standards of admission, because group education had resulted in a mass production of degrees and a corresponding decrease in the number of educated individuals. There were a few brilliant men and women, many potentially good students, but the 'run of the mine' was academic slang. Nevertheless all of them had the same degrees.

This startling contact with a lamentable fact led Dean Ackerman to look for the reason behind it. His conclusion was that the system of education itself was at fault. The key to this system is the accumulation of credit points based upon fifteen hours of classroom work a semester, yielding in four years' time 120 points and a degree. The system thus set up seldom occupies the student's time fully, even less often engages or retains his interest, and a net result is that even the run of the mind student finds it

WHAT COLLEGE DOES TO BELIEFS

After reading the article on "What Does College Do to Beliefs?" I find it has left out completely that group of students who bring to college their Bible, their religious convictions, and devotion in prayer—and graduate with the above mentioned. Awfully uncollegiate, I admit. Don't blame it, however, on the college or its teachings but to the contact these students know they have had with the Divine, the God. And before you cast a stone, dear reader, remember that Sociology has done away with your prejudices. Also on request I will furnish the diligent statistician with a list of this group of girls.

Now examine with me the girls residing in freshman dormitories; they have not been carefully questioned, classified, and pigeonholed, but they have been observed. There is a girl here who never believed in God and defies anyone to convince her there is one. Conscienciously she points out the vanities, halitosis, and pimples of her church-going classmates; . en dubs her a hypocrite, and with her day's work done settles down with a self-righteous smirk to enjoy the Capitol theater program on Sunday morning. She will inform one that this is more holy than rubbing elbows with her unrighteous sister in the church pew. Yet, we call her honest, fearless, and elevate her to the ranks of sainthood.

Four years the college spends in teaching freshmen to think and after graduating to seek Truth—a holy grail, a quest which is the corner stone of the Christian faith. They learn to dissect their emotions as easily as the organs of a frog—and view them with as much disgust. And religion for these students undergoes a similar, but more minute examination: for, you see, they have sprouted the pin-feathers of wisdom—the desire to think. What do Annie, Jane, and Mary find?

Just this: Annie discovers that she directed programs in league, taught a Sunday school class and played the piano in church because of the superior feeling it gave her in exhibiting her executive ability. Jane finds she attended church as she brushed her teeth and window shopped—from habit. Why Mother, Dad, and the preacher called her a 'true Christian girl' she can not understand. She wasn't, so why attend church? Mary stopped going to church because she found in history that church-going does not assure one remission of sins committed during the week

The responsibility of these girls rests upon the college. It has swept, garnished and left empty their religious life. Besides a degree and marching orders, what instruments does the college give these girls in their search for Truth?

Signed. Louise Barshell

According to a professor at the University of Chicago, the present social setup will probably be followed by a society analogous to that of the Middle Ages. Christmas Dinner Will Be Held This Wednesday Eve

Affair Honors Both Faculty Members and Seniors In College Dining Hall; Red and Green Is Traditional Motif

The annual senior Christmas dinner which has been held each year immediately preceding the Christmas holidays will be combined with the second faculty-student dinner this year and will be held Wednesday night in the college dining room.

Christmas Theme Emphasized

The tables in the dining room will be decorated in red and green to carry out the Christmas spirit. The menu will also be in keeping with the holiday theme.

Following the usual custom the lights will be dimmed while the seniors, dressed in caps and gowns and carrying lighted tapers, march into the dining room singing Christmas carols and take their seats at the special tables.

Faculty Guests

The seniors voted individually not to invite faculty members as their guests, but the class as a whole has invited several faculty members to sit at various senior tables. They include: Dr. Edward G Conradi, Miss Louise Conradi, Miss Olivia Dorman, Miss Maude Flowers, Miss Anna May Tracy, Dr and Mrs. William G. Dodd, and Dr Kathryn T. Abbey. The junior, sophomore, and freshmen classes will invite faculty guests individually.

After-Dinner Coffee Given By Sorority Tuesday Evening

Mrs. Cornelius S. Betten of Ithaca, New York, national secretary of Delta Delta Delta, and Mrs. Frank Bisbee, of Jacksonville, financial adviser of the chapter, visited the local chapter of Delta Delta Delta Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

Mrs. Betten was until this year a member of the staff of the college of Home Economics at Cornell university, where her husband is dean. She has been active in the numerous affairs of Delta Delta Delta and has held many offices in the sorority and in community and scholastic organizations. She is a member and adviser of Mortar Board, and she is on the International Board of Foreign Students.

Mrs. Betten is making a number of visits to chapters of Delta Delta Delta in the Eastern and Middle-Western states and in Canada.

An after-dinner coffee was given in honor of Mrs. Betten and Mrs. Bisbee on Tuesday evening at the Delta Delta Delta house. Faculty advisers and patrons of the sorority were invited. Hostesses at this affair were Yulee Way, Dorothy Osincup, Minna Dunn, Billie Hotard, Frances Hartley, Lucy Gee Linn, Kathryn Barrs, Betty Wheeless, Dorothy Nye, Helen Bixler, Jean Tilden, Joyce Reed, Margaret Ware, Lucille Williams, Anne Curtwright, Nancy Wilkinson, Betty Peck, Ruth Sadler, Mary Frances Phillips, Charlotte Pelsang, Mary June Michel, Nancy Felt, Janet Charles, Mary Miller, Nettie Taylor, Jewel Turner, Dorothy Glmstead, Jessie Lee Lumpkin.

Jane Brown, Ann Dickson, Betty Gause, Jean Gillies, Elizabeth Griley, Eleanor Hickson, Edna Hutchinson, Mary Hutchinson, Lydia Land, Sara Lewis, Adelia Appleyard, Mary Charles Mathis, Dot Rickards, Joan Ross, and Anne Tilden.

Christmas Tea Fetes Mrs. Marshall And Zeta Tau Alphas

Mrs R. S. Cotterill entertained in her home on West Park avenue with a Christmas tea yesterday afternoon from 4:30 to 6:30 honoring Mrs. W. L. Marshall, jr., alumnae adviser and member of the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority.

The rooms of the house were decorated with seasonal flowers to carry out the Christmas theme.

The receiving line was composed of Mrs. Cotterill, Mrs. Marshall, Miss Henrietta Sivyer, faculty adviser, and Dorothy Borden, president of the local active chapter. Mrs. Grace Gibson and Mrs. W. H. Smith poured during the afternoon.

Among those invited were a number of town guests including alumnae members and patronesses, and the active members and pledges of the chapter.

YWCA Cabinet Has Christmas Meeting

Instead of the regular meeting on Wednesday afternoon, freshman cabinet held a special Christmas meeting at 7:30 Thursday night in the form of an after-dinner coffee in Broward lounge at which time Dean W. G. Dodd, of the school of arts and sciences, spoke to the members and guests.

Coffee and mints were served, and the room was appropriately decorated according to the Christmas season.

Dean Dodd and Miss Adrienne Taylor, faculty sponsor, were entertained at dinner in the dining room, and each cabinet member brought one guest to the coffee. Mary Ellen Tharpe, chairman of the cabinet social committee, and Alicia Meacham, chairman of cabinet, were in charge of arrangements.

A. D. Pi's Will Give Formal Christmas Dance Saturday

A large decorated Christmas tree in the front yard of the Alpha Delta Pi house and a mammoth lighted sorority pin will guide guests of that sorority to the formal dance to be given at the house Saturday night.

Red poinsettias throughout the house will add to the red and green color scheme which will predominate. Christmas wreaths with red and green lighted tapers in the center will hang from the tassels of the windows. A huge Christmas tree in the house will be adorned with red and green lights and the usual Christmas decorations of tinsel, bells, snow, with a lighted star at the top.

During the evening coffee and cookies will be served to the guests. Among the invited guests for the occasion are S. T. Dell, Carlyle Hughes, Charles Robt, Roscal Skipper, Julian Proctor, Julian Lane, George Palmer, Edgar Skipper, Specs Kinsey, John McCarty, Brian McCarty, Linden Cannon, Lee Messer, Bill Hunter, John Knight, Champ Taylor, Billy Goether, Johnny Stimbler, Jack Beckwith, George Smothers, Phil Graham, A. Der Deutsche Verein Has Holiday Party Honoring Santa Der Deutsche Verein will hold Die Wiehnachtfeste, its annual Christmas party, tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in Huge Hall.

Santa Claus will drop in on the party sometime during the evening long enough to say, "Heil, Freunds. Frohliche Weihnachten," and to present each guest with a gift.

Further entertainment consisting of German skits, poems, jokes, and songs will be provided by students in the German classes and members of the club. Later everyone will join in singing Christmas carols and other German songs popular at this time of the year.

Dr. Conradi, several members of the faculty, Mr. and Mrs. Steinfurer, who spent the early part of their lives in Germany, and all members of the German classes and of Der Deutsche Verein have been invited to attend the party.

Mrs. Seydell Honored At Informal Tea

Dr. Hazel A. Stevenson entertained in her home on West Pensacola street Tuesday afternoon with an informal tea, honoring Mrs. Mildred Seydell prominent newspaperwoman who spoke here Tuesday night.

Tea, cheese cookies, mints, and salted nuts were served to the guests throughout the social hour.

Invited to meet Mrs. Seydell at this time were members of Alpha Chi Alpha, journalism honorary, and Chi Delta Phi, literary honorary, and Dr. Edward G. Conradi, Miss Louise Conradi, Dr. and Mrs. William G. Dodd Dr. Olivia Dorman, Dr. Elisabeth Gordon Andrews, Mrs. Blount Myers, Dr. and Mrs. Harold P Richards, Miss Mildred Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Earl L. Vance, and Miss Kemper Moore.

HOLIDAY SPIRIT WILL REIGN OVER SORORITY PARTIES THIS WEEK-END

Pledges and Members Gather to Fete Christmas Season With Decorated Trees, Skits, Games, Novel Gifts

With Christmas less than two weeks off the social affairs on the campus are assuming a holiday air. Bringing to a close the social activities of the present year on this campus a series of Christmas parties will be given by various sororities in their houses.

Among the first of these will be given at the Delta Phi Epsilon sorority tomorrow night. The house will be decorated with a Christmas tree bearing gay lights, tinsel, "snow" and colorful bulbs.

Skits will be presented by the pledges during the evening and appropriate games will be played by the guests. Punch, cakes, and candy will comprise the refreshments which will be served.

Pledges who will act as hostesses at this time are Connie Lee, Margaret Fishler, Florence Trushin, Hannah Biscow, Mildred Rose, Idella Baumstein, Ruth Bernstein, Reba Mendelson, and Jerry Rosenberg.

Alpha Gams to Entertain

The Alpha Gamma Delta Christmas party will also be held tomorrow night with faculty members, patrons, and pledges as the honor guests.

The feature of the evening will be the Santa Claus who will deliver gifts to the guests. These gifts will be hung on a brilliantly decorated Christmas tree which will be placed in the front room.

Dancing and games will be enjoyed throughout the evening while refreshments of coffee and doughnuts will be served at the conclusion of the party. Special guests at this time will be Dr. and Mrs. C. P. Heinlein, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Hartridge, and Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell.

Tri Sig Mock Wedding

A mock wedding, representing the union of the actives and pledges of the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority will be the feature of the Christmas party which that sorority will give Sunday night.

A huge Christmas tree hung with presents which will be distributed at the end of the wedding will feature the decorations. Members of the bridal party will be Mary Newbold, preacher; Lydia Craig, the bride's father; Sylvia Guito and Mary Gober, bridesmaids; Virginia Chamberlain and Clara Stringfield, ushers; Blancha White, pledge president will be the bride and May Marshall, sorority president, will be the groom. Rosina Meriwether will play the nuptial music and Walter and Dee, small children of Mrs. Walter Phillips, will be ring bearer and flower girl respectively.

Delta Zeta Party

Patrons and pledges of the Delta Zeta sorority will be entertained tonight at the house with a Christmas party. Poinsettias, holly, and fern, together with a lighted Christmas tree will furnish the atmosphere for this affair.

The feature of the evening will be a skit presented by the pledges in which they will impersonate the chapter members.

Presents will be distributed from the tree at the end of the evening with the holiday refreshments will be served. Patrons who have been invited are Senator and Mrs. William Hodges, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Ireland, Miss Sadie Young, faculty adviser, Dr. Marion Hay, and Miss R. Winters.

Phi Mu Party Tonight

A large Christmas tree attractively decorated with brilliantly colored bulbs and lights and covered with inexpensive gifts will be the feature of the Phi Mu Christmas party to be given tonight at 7:30.

During the evening the pledges will entertain with skits following which the gifts, each having a little jingle appropriate for the receiver, will be distributed to the guests. The active members of the sorority are presenting the pledges with gifts also.

Following the distribution of gifts refreshments of hot chocolate, candied apples, and cookies will be served.

Alpha Delta Pi

The members of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority entertained last night with a party honoring patronesses and faculty members.

Christmas wreaths centered with red and green lights were hung in the windows of the front room of the house. A large Christmas tree was situated in one corner of the room and laden with appropriate decorations.

Each of the guests brought a toy to put on the tree. These toys were later collected and will be given to poor children.

A Christmas program was enjoyed during the evening at the end of which refreshments were served.

Invited guests included Mrs. Jack Simmons, Mrs. T. F. Green, Mrs. James Messer, Mrs. W. H. Smith, Mrs. Henry Rushin, Mrs. Fred Conrad, Dr. Margie Burks, Miss Lucy Lester, and Miss Leona Smith.

Delta Delta Delta

The members and pledges of the Delta Delta Delta sorority gave their annual Christmas party last night in the sorority house.

The gaily decorated Christmas tree bore a gift for each girl who attended the party. Pledges were dressed as children with the active members impersonating mothers.

Christmas games and contests were enjoyed during the evening and hot dogs and Coca Cola were served as refreshments.

Theta Upsilon Party

The Theta Upsilon house will be the scene of a gay Christmas party Sunday night at 8 o'clock, which will be given for the members, pledges, and patrons.

The house decorations will carry out a Christmas motif with a beautifully decorated tree being the center of attraction. Each of the girls will bring a toy which will be put on the tree and later distributed among the guests. These toys will be given to needy children later on.

Refreshments at the close of the evening will consist of coffee, doughnuts, mints, and nuts.

Cookie Shine

The Pi Beta Phi Christmas party which will be given Monday night will be in the form of a "Cookie shine."

The house will be decorated with the colorful Christmas scheme and there will be a gaily lighted Christmas tree in the front room.

Pledges will entertain during the evening with skits and songs. Invited to attend are the members, pledges, and patrons.

Chi Omega Supper

Members of the Chi Omega sorority will hold a Christmas supper in the sorority house on Tuesday night for the pledges.

Holly, poinsettias, and fern will predominate the decorations, carrying out the red and green Christmas motif. The feature of the evening will be the tree from which presents will be distributed to the guests at the close of the evening.

A menu designed to emphasize the holiday spirit will be served.

Alpha Xi Delta

Gifts that will be exchanged at the Alpha Xi Delta Christmas party to be given Monday night will be included in a box to be sent to Carcassone Community Center, the national philanthropic project of the sorority.

A big tree will be lighted with many colored bulbs and hung with other Christmas decorations including tinsel, cornucopias, and tassels. On this the members will [illegible] toys with appropriate jingles attached to suit the person receiving the toy.

At the conclusion of the party refreshments of coffee, sandwiches, nuts, and mints will be served.

Chemist Group Will Have Meet Sunday

land J. Lewis, professor of chemistry and former chairman of the Florida section of the American Chemical society.

At the afternoon meeting which opens at 4:15 o'clock with a business session and the election of officers, Gordon Hart, assistant state chemist, will represent a paper on points in the analysis of fertilizers. B J. Russell, chief chemist of the Southern Kraft Paper company, of Panama City, who was expected to speak on the afternoon program, will be unable to attend the meeting on account of illness.

At 6 30 the members of the society will be the guests of the college in the college dining hall.

Present officers of the society are Joe Taylor, state chemist and chairman of the Florida section, and B. J. Otte, professor of chemistry at the University of Florida, and secretary of the society. It is doubtful if Mr. Taylor will be able to attend the meeting, according to Dr. Lewis, as he is in Tennessee investigating the recent ban placed on the Florida citrus fruit.

Dr. Allison's address is not only for members of the society but also for students and the general public.

Holiday Season Preceded By Much Frantic Buying

Caught in some hopelessly dense mob, a Christmas wreath over her ear and someone else's hat in her eye, the belated Christmas shopper is liable to wish she were like her friend Maud You all know Maud. She's one of those capable souls who had all her gifts purchased, wrapped and be-stickered when the warning "Only Forty-eight More Shopping Days Till Christmas" appeared in the newspapers.

The Christmas shopper comes limping home with her clothes in rags and her pet corn ruined and is liable to find that in the crush she has exchanged someone else's packages for her own and that out of the box she thought contained a compact comes tumbling a tiny turtle with "Merry Xmas to Archie" painted on his back!

PLEDGES OF THREE SORORITIES WILL GIVE CHRISTMAS PARTIES AND TEAS

Taking advantage of the holiday spirit excited by the proximity of the Christmas "leave" pledges of three sororities are entertaining the pledges of the other sororities on campus with Christmas parties this week-end.

The first of these affairs will be given by the pledges of the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority this afternoon.

The house will be decorated with seasonal flowers, and a Christmas tree hung with tinsel, gaily colored lights and bulbs, icicles, and "snow."

Refreshments of coffee and cakes will be served by the hostesses who are Ella Fay Price, Betty Leach, Eloise Cork, Mary Lou Torode, Lois Long, Betty Wadsworth, Marjorie Stump, and Elaine Britt.

Superstitious Party

The pledges of the Kappa Delta sorority will entertain with a "Superstitious Party" tonight at 8 o'clock. The house will be appropriately decorated for this affair.

During the evening games carrying out the theme of the party will be played, and refreshments will be served.

Hostesses will be Mae Anderson, Dee Carroll, Martha Edwards, Lois Hunter, Jane Jackson, Frances La Mont, Barbara Moore, Lutrelle Patterson, Lucile Seed, Beuford Thrower, Beck Ashton, Mary Jane Bailess, Petria Cabonias Nellie Fain, Helen Holloway, Martha Kennedy, Janet Lockwood, Helen Merriday, Jane Thomas, Norma Robinson and Nell Robby Webb.

Alpha Delta Pi

A Christmas tea will be the event at which the pledges of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority will entertain tomorrow afternoon.

The house will be decorated with red and green lights strung in the windows and with the big attractively decorated tree which will be placed in the yard. Holly and mistletoe will also be used.

Refreshments of coffee and individual cakes will be served and each guest will be presented with a Christmas package containing salted nuts and sandwiches.

Hostesses at this time will be Maude Alice Anderson, Emily Blackwell, Jane Mills Brown, Doris Butler, Lois Chapman, Mary Elisabeth Daughtery, Vera Grunwall, Jeanne Harned, Vanette Herron, Leona Howe, Gwen Knapp, Jerry Knapp, Dorothy Lewis, Alice Nichols, Mary Emily Parker, Jean Paulen, Sara Perkins, Mabel Rogers, Nancy Rou, Betty Scott, Anne Shelley, Betty Smith, Marcia Thomas, Adele Timberlake, Winona Williamson, Ethel Young, and Gibson Gey.

Poet Shown as Man of Peace

Lipscomb Tells of Virgil, Horace's Friend

As chief speaker of the program presented by the Classical Association of Florida at Florida State College to celebrate the bimillenlum of the birth of the poet Horace which is being observed all over the world, Dr. Herbert C. Lipscomb, national lecturer and head of the classic department at Randolph-Macon College, concluded his lectures on the Roman poet with "Horace Friend, Virgil."

Dr. Lipscomb showed that Virgil by nature, "brooding, a lover of quietude, sensative to the beauties of nature," was born in a period of civil wars. His poems were written as an attempt to escape from the atmosphere of conflict and struggle which surrounded his country.

Referred to by Horace as "the half of my soul" Virgil was an even deeper lover of nature than his friend. Born of peasant parentage in a cabin in North Italy, Virgil felt the influence of his early surroundings and throughout his life lived very close to nature.

Essentially a poet of peace, Virgil in his three greatest works showed the uselessness of wars. Throughout "The Aeneid" he expressed his belief that Rome had been created by God to bring an end to war forever, and that he had a part to play in bringing universal peace to the world as he expressed in his "I am called by Olympus." In "The Aeneid" he struck as the major chords of life religion, patriotism, and duty, while sympathy, langini, and the mystery of the world were the minor chords.

Virgil expressed the cry of the war-weary Italy in "Eclogues" and attempted to heal the wounds the years of civil war had inflicted. In another of his great works "Georgics" he called his contemporaries back to recreate their country. Virgil wrote to influence his country-men to devote their energies to restoring the beauty of Italy rather than to fighting: to beat their swords into plowshares.

The idealism of Virgil was expressed in his approach to the mystery of death. The poet, believing the human heart was too wonderful just to be born and to die, approached the thought of immortality throughout his poems.

Virgil's pastoral poems reflected his love for nature and proximity to the soil. He placed upon the lips of his shepherd his own thoughts. He wrote of the tragedy of war, the conflict between science and religion, of joy and sorrow, and of the love for home and friendship.

Jean Gillies Selected President of Freshman Class Tuesday Evening

Jean Gillies was elected president of the freshmen at the class election by secret ballot held on Tuesday, December 9. Other class officers elected were Mary Elizabeth Daugherty, vice president; Betty Hatch, secretary; Anne Knight, treasurer; Winifred Ewart, parliamentarian; Sara Lytle, athletic manager; and Evelyn Anderson and Blanton Barrett, senate representatives.

The election of the officers this year was conducted different from the ones of previous years. Girls were nominated by secret ballot at a class meeting on Thursday night, December 5. The two receiving the highest number of votes for each office were placed on a ballot. The election was held Tuesday afternoon, December 9, at the polls in the freshman residence halls. The nominees were presented to the class at a meeting Tuesday morning following convocation.

Other nominees for the offices were: Betty Wynn, president; Mary Melton, vice president; Betty Scott, secretary; Peggy Jackson and Eloise Cork tied for second place among the nominees as treasurer; Mary Emily Parker, parliamentarian, Doris Butler, athletic manager; Very Gninwald, senate representative.

HOLIDAY REGULATIONS ARE POSTED

Regulations concerning the rules for transportation and the method of signing up for the holidays which begin Friday, December 20, and end January 6, have been posted on the bulletin boards of the five dormitories by Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls.

According to the regulations dormitories will close Saturday, December 21, at noon and will not be open again until noon on Sunday, January 5.

Both train and bus tickets for students will be sold in the business office in the Administration building, Wednesday, December 18.

Each student is required to sign with her director before leaving, telling when, where, and how she is going. If she expects to make the trip in a car other than with some member of her immediate family she must have permission from her parent or guardian on file.

Any student who expects to go by night train or bus must sign in Bryan business office before second light flash so that the night director may arrange for taxies and chaperonage to the station.

A student who expects to spend the holidays in Tallahassee must have permission from her parent and an invitation from her hostess in Tallahassee.

Students wishing the door of their room locked during their absence must make arrangements with the director of their hall or get a key from Bryan office.

Sashoff Speaks On Europe–1935

Bulgarian Gives Picture Of Foreign Life

"Shadows of fear and war have grown up in Europe in direct proportion to the rise of the dictators," said Stephen P. Sashoff, speaking on "Europe—1935" at a lecture sponsored by the International Relations club Monday night.

"The countries are dancing to the tune of a Hitler, a Mussolini or a Stalin, but whoever dances will have to some time pay the fiddler."

In traveling through Europe, Mr. Sashoff noticed that the middle-aged people are conspicuously absent. The war took the majority of these people, and those who went through the war have been left with a warped mentality.

Everywhere in Europe there is a youth movement toward the goose step. These youth movements aim to make up the cheering squad of the organized state, to train a new type of child with nationalistic dogma in his heart, to further the organized state.

They are producing wholesale citizens, he said, regimented under complete control with their minds molded to the service of the state.

In Germany the women are stripped of rights and privileges, and are wanted only for the church, the kitchen, and the children they bear.

Even in other countries, he pointed out, coloring his talk with personal experiences, the movement is toward less education for women, that is, less education, less intelligence, less cares, and less worries over their children who are sacrificed to the supreme state.

Everywhere in Europe one feels the barriers that have been built up between the nations, the speaker added, citing a personal instance when he had felt the sting of one of these barriers.

In Bulgaria and Roumania there is nervous tension and fear. In Yugoslavia the unfinished Parliament house is a ghost house of the liberty that was to be embodied in the federated state.

In Poland the people have been oppressed for years. You would think, he said, that they had had enough suffering; but now that they are not suffering they have turned around to inflict on others what they have so recently experienced.

In Germany the powers are driving away the best brains. They want every mind to be molded for the state, and they will go to any end to derive this.

"As to what the European powers think of Mr. Mussolini, why he is just a bad boy who is rocking the boat," continued Mr. Sashoff.

Europe, as he saw it, has lost its culture and reeks with intolerance and cruelty. Every one is ready to try to get something from some one else. Every one is preparing for war by building their youth for the state.

"Let us hope that history does not repeat itself," said Mr. Sashoff. "Remember that before when the Olympics were scheduled to take place in Germany, the war intervened."

Mr. Sashoff is a native of Bulgaria, having come to this country in 1821. Since 1931 he has been to Europe every summer traveling through the various countries besides visiting his native land.

Assistant professor of electrical engineering at the University of Florida in Gainesvile, he has been faculty adviser of the International Relations club there for several years.

After the talk an open discussion was held in which Mr. Sashoff answered questions from the floor.

Members of the International Relations club attended an after-dinner coffee at the home of Miss Marion Irish, faculty adviser, honoring Mr. Sashoff immediately following the lecture.

College Displays Over Hundred Pieces in Art Exhibit of Association

The third biennial art exhibit of students' work sent out by the College Art association is now on display in the art browsing room, 302 Administration building.

Six studies done by former students in the Florida State College for Women are included in this exhibit of more than a hundred studies representing colleges all over the United States.

Among those from this college are a charcoal sketch by Ellen Moore, advanced design by Mary Mooty, and Olivia Embrey, and perspective by Mary Shryock.

Some of the other colleges represented are: New York University, Toledo Museum School of Design, Skidmore College, San Diego State College, University of Illinois, Ohio University, Maryland Institute, and Wellesly college.

As to subject matter, landscape, figure, and still-life studies make up the exhibit; as to type, commercial designs, interior decoration, painting, perspective, and composition studies.

Classics Meet Well Attended

Jacksonville Boy Wins Prize for Version Of Horace's Ode

Approximately thirty teachers of Latin and Greek from colleges and high schools throughout the state attended the first annual meeting of the State Classical association held here last week-end.

The association, which includes classics teachers in Florida and members of the Florida State College for Women's chapter of Eta Sigma Phi, national classical honorary, elected the following officers at its business session Saturday morning: president, Miss Vera Dumas, St Petersburg Junior college; vice-president, Mrs. Clara Olsen, P. K. Yonge school, Gainesville; secretary, Miss Carleen Vinal, St. Petersburg high school; and treasurer, Miss May Franklin, Landon high school, Jacksonville.

The outgoing president is Dr. Olivia Dorman, professor of classics and dean of students, who was elected in April, 1935, when the association was founded.

The winners of the Horatian contest for high school students of Florida sponsored by the local chapter of Eta Sigma Phi were announced to the group. Burton Bryan, a student at Robert E. Lee senior high school in Jacksonville, won the plaque offered for the best metrical version of Horace's Ninth Ode. The best essay on "Horace, the Poet" was submitted by Mary Parmer, a student in Chipley high school.

The convention opened with the business session and an exhibit displaying the work of the campus classical club. An illustrated lecture on "The Villas of Horace" by the featured speaker of the meeting, Dr. Herbert C. Lipscomb, head of the classics department at Randolph-Macon college, Lynchburg, Virginia, followed the business session Saturday morning.

After luncheon at the Three Torches tearoom, the group met for a discussion of methods for teaching Latin in high schools. The members of the association attended a Horatian banquet at the Floridan hotel Saturday night, after which Dr Lipscomb lectured on "Horace's Friend, Vergil" in the Augusta Conradi theater.

The meeting came to a close with a reception in Gilchrist at 9:30 Saturday night, to which faculty members, representatives of all honorary fraternities, and classics students were invited.

Contemporary Student Thought

possible "to be eased along" or to "get by."

"It is all too true that the conventional measurement of educational values is numerical, not qualitative. The Columbia Dean is right in saying that 'Masses of students were exposed to an education as one might be exposed to a contagious disease. Under this system some students succeed in contracting an education, but the percentage of natural or acquired immunity was high . . . Under this system character, personality and manners, if developed in college, were accidental by-products of four years of college life'."

Mass education is one of the best ways to keep education from being successful. So long as the chief object of our school apparatus is to graduate numbers instead of individuals; so long as our schools and colleges concentrate on groups instead of persons, their product will be dependents and no independent, dependable citizens. It is very much to be hoped that more schools, more universities, will examin the poor functioning of their apparatus and techniques, and try to do something about it, just as Columbia's School of Journalism is endeavoring to do.—Chattanooga News.

Beta Pi Theta, French Honorary, Will Initiate Eight Sun. Afternoon

Beta Pi Theta, French honorary fraternity, will hold initiation services Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Miss Mildred Finnegan, faculty sponsor for the honorary.

Initiates will be Miss Elizabeth Hutt, Miss Margaret Campbell, and Mr. Manuel Lopez of the faculty, and Jo Binion, Pearle Overhults, Dorothy Crews, Barbara Crosland, and Anna Glen, students.

At the conclusion of the initiation service, refreshments will be served. All the French faculty and present members of the honorary are invited.

Members of the faculty in the fraternity are Miss Finnegan, faculty adviser, Mrs. A. B. Allen, Miss Dorothy Breen, Dr. Margie Burks, Dr. Marion Hay, Miss Lucy Lester, and Dr. A. R. Seymour.

The student members include Mauvis Lussier, president, Alice Porter, Leona Stimmel, Ruth Mock, Ruth Dickson, Betty Boggs, Ruth Feinberg, Wylma Ter Bush, Mary Carson, and Lillian Turlington.

Town Students to Make Christmas Party Plans For Recreation Center

The recreation center, a playground for the children of this city under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A., will be supervised by the town students during the Christmas holidays. One of the things planned is a Christmas party for the children to be held on the Monday before Christmas, December 23.

Mattie Lou Love is the chairman of the committee which is to take charge of the playground project. All day students wishing to assist in this project are requested to sign on the Day Students' bulletin board located on the lower floor of the administration building immediately, according to Marjorie Fain, president. The days on which girls will go to the recreation are Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Those students who have already signed up to assist in this plan are Louise Gehan, Geneva Lamb, Jean Gillies, Loree Lamb, Winona Williamson, Winifred Hansen, Erma Bradford, Dorothy Bellamy, and Betty Scott.

Registration Of Seniors Begins

Personnel Office Records Placement Data

Placement registration of seniors is progressing more rapidly this year than usual, according to Dr. Elizabeth G Andrews, director of personnel, who wishes to thank the seniors for their cooperation.

The registration began Monday, December 2. Although notices of openings are not received before March or April, the work entailed in placing the girls is heavy, necessitating the early registration.

Every senior is required to have a permanent placement record in the personnel office whether or not a position in any field is desired.

Registration with the placement bureau for two-year certificate candidates is optional. Two-year certificate students are to make appointments, if interested in registering, for the week of December 13-20.

The two-year candidates will not be given a conference except by request. The conference will take less than ten minutes, according to Dr Andrews. The students are reminded to bring penciled notes of their credits, including all courses through graduation; also, to be prompt in keeping the appointment.

Dean Opperman Will Go To Music Conventions During Coming Holiday

Dean Ella Scoble Opperman of the school of music will attend the convention of the National Association of Schools of Music and National Music Teachers association meeting in Philadelphia, Penn., from December 28-31.

Dean Opperman is a member of the ethics committee of the National Association of Schools of Music, which is the accrediting agency for schools offering the B M. degree. Florida State College for Women has been a member of this organization since 1930.
